"STEVENS" VS. ORCHARD

SEATTLE, WASH.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The big live bird match between Mr. Ed Barlow, of Port Orchard, and Mr. "Stevens," of this city, for $500 a side, was shot at Tacoma on February 17, and was won by "Stevens," who shot his man out on the ninety-second bird, at which point the match ended.

In my last communication to the AMERICAN FIELD I mentioned the fact that every live bird shoot held in this section brought together a larger and more enthusiastic crowd of people than the one previous, and that the attendance upon the shoot here on January 20 exceeded by far that of any previous shoot. But when Barlow and "Stevens" met at Tacoma to decide which of the two was the better shot, the crowd that gathered to witness the contest was certainly the largest and most enthusiastic ever seen at a shoot in this state, about 500 people being present, all bound to witness the contest despite the inclement weather. The enthusiasm displayed on this occasion was something unusual for Tacoma, for a feeling of friendly rivalry has always existed between the two cities.

The "Stevens"—Barlow race was the only one on the program for the day, but before the day was over two other matches had been made and shot, one between "A. Jackson," of Tacoma, and A. K. Churchill, of Seattle, and the other between W. A. Eberly, of Tacoma, and Noble Wallingford, of this city. The latter of these two resulted in another victory for the Queen City, while the former was won by "A. Jackson," to the great satisfaction of the Tacoma contingent of sportsmen. It was very much regretted afterward that Mr. Churchill was allowed to shoot such a short race. In fact he should not have shot at all after retrieving for and handling "Stevens." But the Seattle boys had implicit confidence in his ability to defeat "Jackson" in any kind of a race and at any time, and consequently quite a little money changed hands on the result. The result of Mr. Churchill's defeat is a race between the same men for $200 a side, 100 birds to each man, American Shooting Association rules to govern, to be shot in this city on March 21.

About seventy-five people left this city for Tacoma on the morning of the shoot, arriving on the grounds about 10 a. m., among them the following well-known sportsmen: Capt. E. P. Miner, J. H. Graham, Louis Hiskins, Capt. Barrington, Billy Russell, J. H. Corbett, O. E. Turner, James McLaughlin, Archie Smith, E. M. Hopkins, D. A. Charlton, E. S. Terry, Uncle Dick "Mazyck," "Stevens," O. C. Clark, Lieut. John L. Hayden, C. W. Clark, W. J. Fox, Dahlem, "Both-barrels-gentlemen" Kelsey, C. D. Stimson, Harry Pumphrey, O. W. Engle, Noble Wallingford, Fred Hardy, A. L. Hall, A. K. Churchill, Dr. P. A. Purdy, Joe Hardy, C. F. Treat, E. F. Blaine, C. E. Churchill, Maurice McMicken, Fred Charles, "Dead-as-a-stone" Walter Baker, R. S. Dutcher, W. E. McKee, G. C. Terry, Capt. Johnson, Capt. E. E. Kane, Mr. Stormfeldt, "Dead Shot" Bromley, W. Morton, C. B. Bender, Ben Whitlock, Ike Calhoun, "Invincible" Joe Schlumph, "Good Value" Jack Ruppe, Harry Stevenson and Mr. McIntosh.

Tacoma was also well represented, among the people from that city being W. F. Sheard, E. E. Ellis, E. A. Kimball, W. A. Eberly, Mr. Lanning, Mr. Robertson, "A. Jackson," Mr. Young and Dr. Smith, besides a score of others whose names I cannot at this moment recall; while Ed. Barlow, Byron Barlow, Tom Bringham and others made up the delegation from Port Orchard.

The match was shot on the temporary grounds of the Tacoma Rod and Gun Club at the head of the bay. On alighting from the train a stiff breeze was blowing from left to right across the traps, but it calmed down very much as the day wore on.

The birds were an average lot, a good many of them proving direct left or right quartering incomers. The match was called about 1 o'clock p. m., a seven-bird sweep being shot first.

Mr. Churchill, who handled "Stevens," won the toss and sent his man to the score first, and he killed his first bird, a right quartering driver, in good shape. Barlow followed and also killed nicely. Stevens killed his next, but Barlow scored a miss on his second bird, a left-quartering incomer. "Stevens" continued to kill his birds right along and in good shape until the Tacoma contingent began to think he never would miss, scoring clean up to the thirty-third bird. As this bird, a right-quartering driver, sped across the boundary, the shout that went up from the crowd of onlookers was almost deafening. This, however, did not unnerve "Stevens," for he only missed one more out of the first fifty, finishing with forty-eight to his credit. Barlow, meanwhile, had been missing birds pretty regularly, and was nine behind on the thirty-first round, and finished his first fifty with a score of 37.

From this point on, however, he shot a better race, killing thirty-eight out of the next forty-two. On the ninety-second round the score stood 85 to 75 and the race was declared in "Stevens'" favor. This was done to save birds, as there was no show for Barlow to win if he killed his last eight birds straight.

The longest run was made by "Stevens," he killing his first 22, and as he killed his seven birds in the sweep it made him 39 straight. "Stevens" was in good form and had no trouble in getting onto his birds, centering them with the first barrel; but he never spared his second, using it on almost every bird for safety. Barlow took more pains to hit his birds with the first barrel, and did not use his second to as good advantage as his opponent.

Mr. E. A. Kimball, the popular sporting goods dealer of Tacoma, made a very acceptable referee.

"Stevens" shot his 7-pound, 10-ounce, 12-gauge Francotte gun, using 3¼ drams of Schultze powder and 1⅛ ounces of No. 7 chilled shot in both barrels. Barlow shot an L. C. Smith 12-gauge gun, weighing 9 pounds, and used 3¼ and 3¾ drams of S. S. powder and 1¼ ounces of No 7 chilled shot in both barrels.

Dr. P. A. Purdy, of Seattle, was trap puller; W. E. McKee, of Seattle, stakeholder; Messrs. Treat, of Seattle, and Garrison, of Tacoma, official scorers.

Mr. A. K. Churchill handled "Stevens" and Mr. W. A. Eberly acted in a like capacity for Barlow. The scores:

CARVER VS. BUDD

DAVENPORT, IA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I traveled three hundred miles to see the last of the series of three pigeon shooting matches between the famous Dr. W. F. Carver, the champion of the world, and the pet of American shooters, Charlie Budd. I have always been a great admirer of Mr. Budd. I was present, about seven years ago, when he suffered the first defeat of his life by the same man who yesterday defeated him more easily than on the first occasion. Mr. Budd is a wonderfully good shot, and the large audience present yesterday was proof of his popularity. One and all of the large audience were with Budd heart and soul; we all wanted to see him win.

When the shooters were called to the score there was a marked contrast between them. Dr. Carver wore a smile of confidence and a happy, careless, go-lucky style of indifference, while Mr. Budd's face indicated a sort of nervousness, and the expression in his eyes told more plainly than words could of mental uncertainty. He was evidently nervous and felt before the first gun was fired that if he won the match it would be more the luck that follows a worthy Christian man than his own skillful shooting.

The birds were a selected lot, most of them solid blue and in fine condition. When I examined them in the coops they looked like a lot of well-groomed racehorses, and all the knowing ones remarked that 80 would be a good score. The wind blew from left to right across the traps and the snow, scooped and piled up back of the traps, with a forest of dark trees in the distance, made a background that would puzzle any shooter on earth.

Mr. Budd was first to the score. When he called "pull!" in his peculiar way, a blue streak of feathered light flashed from the trap and went across the snow at a clip that would take it out of bounds in less than two seconds. The crack of Budd's gun was greeted with a shout of approval from the audience. It was a good bird and well killed. Every eye was now watching Dr. Carver as he took his position at the score. There he stood, the same man of seven years before, and not a year older in appearance; the man who was the first to defeat our Charlie. Would he win again? was the question that flashed through my brain. The quiet "pull!" was spoken and a pigeon darted across the snow. There was a flash of fire from the little gun held in the giant's hands. The bird was mashed, but the giant lurched back and forward as if he had been kicked by a mule. Surely Carver had a load in his gun. When the ejector threw the shells out onto the ground hundreds of hands were extended to get them. They were picked up and found to be 3¼ inches long. As an old duck shooter remarked, they were long enough for a pair of gun barrels.

The quality of the birds soon proved too much for Mr. Budd and he was ere long out of the race. Carver was five ahead, and there he remained up to the seventy-fifth round, when he was specially requested, by some of the boys who had come a long distance to see the match, to give them a little of his old-time form. Then, and not until then, did the prince of shooters unwind himself. He killed the last 25 straight with the first barrel, and quicker than lightning shot the dead birds while still in the air with the second barrel. It was truly a most wonderful and beautiful exhibition of the power of destruction of a good gun in the hands of a perfect artist.

The pigeon, if properly treated, is a feathered racehorse, and at the present day is far more profitable to raise. There is a demand for good birds, and one of the great industries of our country is that of raising pigeons. If it was not for trap shooting these beautiful birds would be raised only in small numbers, and then, in their babyhood, with little yellow down on their helpless bodies, would be handed over to Bridget to have their poor necks twisted and their bodies served to some titled or wealthy person who does not know that the little innocent never had had one peep at this beautiful world. As an old sportsman I congratulate myself that I have lived to see the day when pigeon shooting has become a fixture in the hearts of all Americans, and when it is conducted on Christian and humane principles. Could I have my wish and choice of death, I would prefer to be a pigeon and have Carver shoot at me than to take my chances of death in the ordinary way.

The Carver—Budd shoot ended one of the most successful Winter tournaments ever held in Iowa. It seems to be the fashion now to have Dr. Carver at all shoots and no tournament is complete without him. He shoots at Burlington in April, and I am told has sixty-five matches on hand at present. Up to the present time I have always been anxious to see him beaten, but from this day on he has my best wishes, for no one deserves them more than he. For sixteen years he has been ready to go to any part of the world and shoot. He is never sick, never disappoints an audience, and, as our Charlie Grim says, he never says anything but what he means, and as long as he can stand at a trap thousands will go to see him. He is the only shooter in America that can draw a crowd, and his many gentlemanly shooting matches this season have made him one of the most popular shooters in America.

Carver shot with a little 7¼-pound William Cashmore gun and used 4 drams of American Wood powder and No. 7 chilled shot. It was the most killing load I ever saw fired at a pigeon.

Mr. Budd did not miss his birds; nearly all of them were hit with both barrels but they simply shook off the loose feathers and with a "ta-ta' to Charlie, went home and commenced life over again. Budd used an L. C. Smith pigeon gun, 3½ drams E. C. powder and 1¼ ounces chilled No. 7 shot. The scores:

THE ELIZABETH GUN CLUB'S TOURNAMENT

The attendance at the tournament of the above named club of Elizabeth, N. J., on February 27 and 28, was not large. The weather was fair and mild, though on the afternoon of the first day there was considerable wind. The Brewer—Reinhardt match at Paterson, N. J., on the first day of this tournament, no doubt took away several shooters that otherwise would have been here one if not both days.

The management of the tournament was all that could be desired and everything went off in fine shape. As usual on these grounds, the traps and targets (Empires) worked splendidly.

Mr. Hebbard, of the Empire Target Co., was on the grounds with an improved trap and it worked very nicely indeed. The scores made are given below:

MAPLEWOOD GUN CLUB'S TOURNAMENT

MAPLEWOOD, N. J.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The recent tournament of the Maplewood Gun Club proved conclusively to the writer that trap shooting in this vicinity is at the present time as popular as ever.

On the morning of the first day, at 10 o'clock, the time set for the shooting to begin, there was less than half a dozen shooters on the grounds, but the 11 o'clock train brought Ferd Van Dyke, Maj. Breintnall, Asa Whitehead, and Mr. Thomas of the South Side Gun Club of Newark, and soon after the delegation from the Union Gun Club of Springfield arrived, consisting of E. D. Miller, Dr. Jackson, Al and Elmer Sickley, Sopher and Abbott, making, all together, a good comfortable gathering of shooters.

Our able manager, Mr. Van Iderstine, had the traps in excellent shape, over 2,000 Empire targets being thrown and only four were broken by the trap during the day, which I ascribe largely to the way the traps were set. The shooting was quite difficult owing to a heavy bank of snow immediately in front of the traps that affected one's eyes as the sun shone brightly upon it, and quite a strong wind which not only caused one's eyes to water at times, but also assisted in making the targets unsteady.

Mrs. Drake served an excellent lunch at the proper hour, and those of the "boys" who could not make a clean score at the traps displayed their willingness and ability to make one at the dinner table. The scores of the trap shooting follow, there being no record kept of the many excellent records made at the table.

THE ROME GUN CLUB'S TOURNAMENT

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The tournament recently held by the Rome Gun Club, so far as the management was concerned, was a success, although most of the work was done by one man. Kingbird traps and targets were used and they gave satisfaction to all. The live birds were a good lot and tested the nerves and skill of the marksmen. In the live bird events Fulford, Richardson and Mayhew seemed to draw the hardest birds. The attendance was smaller than it should have been, for the weather was pleasant and the shooters could not plead bad weather as an excuse for staying at home. The scores made follow:

SHOOT No. 1.—10 single targets, entrance $1.

D. Lefever	1111111011—9	Mayhew	1111011111—9

RYE GUN CLUB

RYE, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Twenty-five enthnsiastic shooters and their friends attended the Washington's Birthday shoot of the above named club and made it the most snccessfni affair ever held on the club grounds. The crack shots from Connecticnt and several from New Jersey were in evidence, and, as usnal, made the leading scores. The Cos Cob—Rye match shoot was a "grand smash" for the Rye clnb, the Cos Cob taking the lead and holding it throughont the match. Previous to the next match shoot with the Cos Cob club, our boys are to hold a practice shoot, and if wings can be adjnsted to the screens they will be substituted for birds. ROCHESTER GUN CLUB'S TOURNAMENT

ROCHESTER, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The attendance npon the tonrnament of the Rochester Gnn and Field Club, which was held here on Febrnary 16, was not large, owing partly to the season of the year and partly to the extreme cold weather that prevailed np to the day before the tournament, yet while many a familiar face was missed, those who were present made np a jolly, good-natured party, and everything moved off at a lively rate. The day was quite pleasant and comfortable, but the sun shining brightly on the snow-covered grond made the light trying npon one's eyes and also affected the quality of the scores of the participants. The shooting was all at inanimate targets, the scores made being as given below:

THOS. MORTIMER.

BREWER VS. REINHARDT

As the direct result of apigeon shooting match between Messrs. J. L. Brewer and Chris. Reinhardt, in which Mr. Reinhardt, without accepting the handicap offered him by Mr. Brewer, won apparently with ease, a second match was arranged between the two men which was shot at Willard Park, Paterson, N. J., on February 26, when the "tables were turned" and Capt. Brewer was the victor altbongb he gave his opponent a handicap of two yards in the rise.

The birds in this match were an extra good lot, and while there was no wind to assist them in their flight, they were swift enough to keep both men on the alert to stop them within bounds. At the thirtieth bird for each, the men were a tie, each having scored 27; but from his twenty-first bird to his sixty-ninth, Brewer made a run of 48, making some remarkable kills with his second barrel and showing most excellent judgment throughout the race, at no time indicating in any manner whatever that he had any doubt as to how the race would terminate. Brewer had two birds dead ont of bounds and Reinhardt had seven, this fact alone showing that the former was centering his birds much better than was Mr. Reinhardt.

In the third string of twenty-five Reinhardt drew some very hard birds, and lost seven ont of the number, two of them dead just over the boundary. Mr. Reinbardt was credited with the best kill of the day, a straight driver in the seventy-second round. The execution of a right quartering driver in the sixty-eighth round was also a good kill.

Brewer made several difficult kills in the last two rounds. The fifty-fourth and fifty-seventh birds, both right quarterers, were well disposed of. His ninety-sixth bird, a right-quartering driver, the fastest bird liberated, was brought down with a beautiful second barrel. Scores:

EMERALD GUN CLUB

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—There was a good attendance of Emerald Gnn Club members at the Febrnary contest held at Lippack's Dexter Park. It was the closing contest of the club year and more than usual interest was taken in this meeting.

The weather was clear and pleasant with a light wind favoring the birds. Dr. Hudson was referee, H. Heyer scorer, and "the only" Billy Mills trapper. The contest was at 10 birds per man, handicap rises, point handicap system, the members being divided into three classes, Class A1 shooting at 30 yards rise, Class A at 28 yards rise, and Class B at 25 yards rise. As the scores which are appended show, Gus Grieff and Mr. Bell were the only two out of the thirty men competing who made a clean score. Mr. Phister and [illegible] Keller killed all their birds but each lost one dead out of [illegible] Scores:

TEAM SHOOT AT OMAHA

OMAHA, NEB.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I send herewith the scores made here in a team contest for price of birds and also the scores made in some miss and out events that were shot after the team contest. In shooting the team race one man from each team was sent to the score, and these men in each instance shot their scores out, when the second squad was sent forward, thus giving each team an equal showing for good or poor birds, as the case might be. Each team was composed of eight men and each man shot at 15 live birds. Scores:

WAWASET VS. WILMINGTON

WILMINGTON, DEL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I inclose herewith the scores made in two matches out of a series of three shot recently between teams of three men each from the Wilmington and Wawaset gun clubs. The Wilmington team was composed of Messrs. Hartlove, Burroughs and Gaughen and the Wawaset team of Messrs. Huber, Miller and White. Each man shot at 50 single Blue Rock targets in each match, and as will be seen by the scores which follow the teams were very evenly matched, consequently the contests were close and exciting. In the second race of the series—the first one here reported—the teams tied twice, while in the outcome the race was won by the Wilmington team by only oue bird, and in the final contest of the series the Wawaset team won by three birds.

SECOND MATCH OF SERIES

Wilmington Team—Hartlove 40, Burroughs 41, Gaughen 35. Total 116.

Wawaset Team—Miller 36, Huber 44, White 36. Total 116.

First tie shot off at 10 targets per man.

Wilmington Team—Hartlove 6, Burroughs 10, Gaughen 4. Total

Wawaset Team—Miller 8, Huber 10, White 2. Total 20.

Second tie, at 5 targets per man.

Wilmington Team—Hartlove 4, Burroughs 4, Gaughen 4. Total 12.

Wawaset Team—Miller 4, Huber 4, White 3. Total 11.

In the last contest of the series the scores made were as follows:

Wilmington Team—Burroughs 39, Gaughen 43, Hartlove 40. Total 122.

Wawaset Team—Miller 43, Huber 45, White 37. Total 125.

CHAMPIONS OF KANSAS

LEAVENWORTH, KAN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I inclose herewith the result of a recent contest for the team championship cup of this state, between a team of five men from the Metropolis Gun Club of Kansas City, Kan., and a team of the same number from the Leavenworth Gun Club, which shows that the latter club's team are champions still in this state.

The targets were thrown very fast from new, expert traps screwed up to a high tension, consequently the scores are a little lower than the average for the home team. Our boys had shot over these new traps once or twice and therefore had a slight advantage over the visiting team.

The weather was all that we could ask, and the attendance to witness the contest—about 500—was sufficiently large to nerve every man up to do his best. Each man shot at 50 targets, 30 singles at unknown angles and 10 pairs.

The Leavenworth team won the trophy from the Topeka Gun Club in January, and the club is just conceited enough to think that its team is competent to defend it against all comers, and because of this feeling of supremacy expects to see many hotly contested races for it during the coming season. The scores:

WEST NEWBURG VS. COBWEBS

WEST NEWBURG, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The scores inclosed show the result of a team race between teams of ten men each from the Cobweb Gun Club and the West Newburg Gun Club, each man shooting at 10 single live birds. The race was for the price of the birds and a dinner for the two teams, costing the losing team about $100. As the scores show the Newburg team won by three birds. The day on which the match was shot was fine and the attendance of lookers-on good.

MESSNER VS. LOVETT

WILKINSBURG, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—A live bird race was shot here on February 16 between J. G. Messner and Ralph Lovett, both of this place. The birds were a dandy lot and Mr. Messner made a clean score in the first race, which resulted as follows, 7 birds per man, 29 yards rise:

Messner.....1221111—7 | Lovett.....1001222—5

This match brought out a challenge from Mr. Lovett to Mr. Messner, to shoot a 25-bird race for the championship of Wilkinsburg, the loser to pay all expenses. The feature of this race was Mr. Messner's beautiful work, as the birds were pronounced corkers. Mr. Messner won with the following most excellent score:

CLEVELAND, O.—I herewith forward the scores made at the regular club shoot of the Cleveland Gun Club. This was the first shoot after the consolidation of the Cleveland and East End clubs. The scores do not look as good as we would like to have them, but the shooters that made them think they are good enough when we take into consideration the kind of a day on which they were made. The wind blew a gale that drove the targets to the ground before they got twenty yards from the traps, and to get them one had to snap them as soon as they showed above the screen. Then there is another good reason why the scores on the Cleveland club's grounds are not as good as on some grounds. The club is divided into three classes, A, B and C. The A Class shoots at five unknown traps, unknown angles, the B Class at unknown angles, but known traps, and the C Class at known traps and known angles, and when an A Class man, Mr. Worthington, Mr. Upson or Mr. Packard wins a badge he has something to be proud of. H. B. STEVENSON.

COFFEYVILLE, KAN.—Inclosed please find scores made by a few of us recently on live birds. It was a team shoot, the match being made before Christmas, but the weather has been so bad there was no use to think about sport at the traps. Landers and Adamson were matched against Kleohr and Lape and it was a tie when the ninth bird had been shot. Mr. Landers called "pull" on his tenth bird and the trapper pulled two traps at once and Mr. Landers came near losing the bird, but made a nice kill with the second barrel. Kleohr got a swift straightaway and, although hit hard, it flew to a tree and of course was counted lost. Adamsou and Lape each downed their last bird, yet Landers and Adamson won the match by one bird. Each shooter fired fifteen shells. Landers used a Parker gun, Kleohr and Adamson a Wilkesbarre, and Lape a Lefever, all 12-gauge hammerless. We had a set of King's live bird traps that we had just bought, none of us ever before having shot from this kind of a live bird trap. The Well's boys, Charles and Dan, were matched against McCreay and Lenark, and cousidering the amount of shooting they had done they made a good average. Benson and Fogg cleaned up the birds, this being Fogg's first experience at live bird shooting. The boys are all waiting anxiously for good weather so they can smash mud pies. Scores:

RED BANK, N. J.—The Riverside Gun Club held a very enjoyable meetiug on February 22, the shooting being at live pigeons. We had the pleasure of the company of Mr. W. S. Canon, the one-armed shooter of Jersey City. The birds were as good as were ever trapped, and as Mr. Canon said, it would take a man with three arms to stop such birds. The fact is the birds were no better than are usually trapped on our grounds, but it was a "fast" day. The wind blew very hard from the northwest, which helped many birds over the wire fence which surrounds the grounds at 50 yards, Mr. Ed. Cooper's, Phil Daly's and E. L. Cowart's shooting was particularly brilliant at times.

EVENT No. 1.—5 live birds, for price of birds: L. B. Campbell 1, E. M. Cooper 3, E. L. Cowart 2, Geo. Low 2, Phil Daly Jr. 5, Juo Cooper 4, W. S. Canon 2.

EVENT No. 2.—10 birds. $5 entrance.

SUBSCRIBER, Chicago.—Ans.—(1) No, conception cannot be stopped, and abortion is not always safe. (2) Kill all but one or two just as soon as whelped. (3) It is very good, but requires diluting about one-half with water.

PERRY, Columbus, O.—Ans.—We do not consider her a safe bitch to breed. Our plan would be to let her pass one year without breeding, and then during gestation let her take abundant exercise and rough it in a natural way.

A. T. W., Jacksonville, Fla.—Ans.—The weakness was due to the presence of the parasite, and we believe that he will recover without any further treatment except to repeat the tapeworm medicine.

G. P., Natick, Mass.—Ans.—After a fast of eighteen hours give one and one half grains of powdered areca nut to the pound weight of the dog, following it in one hour with two ounces of castor-oil.

C. Y. F., West Newton, Mass.—Ans.—Rickets. Give a heaping dessertspoonful of precipitated phosphate of lime twice daily in the food; also feed raw eggs with the shells finely broken up.

SUBSCRIBER, Denver, Colo.—Ans.—By limiting the amount of food, milking the udder just sufficient to prevent caking, and anointing it twice or thrice daily with camphorated oil.

F. A. M., Findlay, O.—Ans.—Clip off with sharp shears those that stand high enough, and then touch the spots with luuar caustic; apply strong acetic acid to the others once daily.

E. S., Axtell, Neb.—Ans.—(1) Fanny (359), the grandam of Bo Peep, was by Leicester (148)—Dart (335). (2) Star (513), the dam of Dido II, also was by Leicester—Dart.

J. A. W., Covington, Ga.—Ans.—A prognosis in a case of chorea is very difficult to make, as some cases linger and others never improve; keep up your treatment.

F. S., Joliet, Ill.—Ans.—It will take considerable time for the new nail to grow. Not knowing the extent of the injury we cannot venture to say

G. M. K., Brookville, Ind.—Ans.—You can obtain the correct information from the American Kennel Club for a reasonable charge.

J. H. M., Wilmington, Del.—Ans.—We think a tonic is indicated; give five grains of the citrate of iron and quinine three times daily.

H. H. M., Birmingham, Ala.—Ans.—Cleanse the ear daily with tepid water and then apply tincture of iodine.

E. L., Kansas City, Mo.—Ans.—This is known as dumb rabies.

B. H., Denver, Colo.—Ans.—Impaction.

MISCELLANEOUS

T. C. P., Tacoma, Wash.—I have played cribbage since I was a lad and I had always believed that 24 was the largest amount possible to be made on a single hand. Recently I ran up against a 30 and 31 hand. The first was four 5's and a queen on the deck head; the latter was four fives and the jack of the suit on the deck head. Are these not remarkable hands and are they of frequent occurrence? Ans.—They are very remarkable. The first hand would count 28, and the second 30, counting 2, when turned up, for "his heels."

H. B. T., Troy, N. Y.—Can you give me the address of some man or firm who handles gunsmith's material and fixtures? Ans.—We cannot.

W., McCook, Neb.—Field, London; weekly; price 28 shillings, or about $7 in gold. We do not.

W. A., Allegan, Mich.—Ans.—Westfield, Wis.

GAME AND SHOOTING

——, Aurora, Ill.—What is the close season on ducks and geese in South Dakota? Ans.—Ducks, snipes, plovers and curlew are protected by law in South Dakota from May 15 to September 1. No close season on geese in that state.

J. D. C., Clearfield, Pa.—Will it injure the shooting qualities or affect the balance of a gun with 32-inch barrels to have the barrels shortened two or three inches? Ans.—Yes; it would probably ruin both.

A. H. W., Theresa, Wis.—Will a 32-inch barrel shotgun outshoot a 30-inch barrel gun, everything else being equal? Ans.—No.

TRAP

L. P. A., Denver, Colo.—Shortly after the Carver—Kleinman championship match was made A and B made a bet on the result, posting the money, A betting on Carver and B on Kleinman. Nothing was said about possible contingencies. Who wins? Ans.—Bets always go with the race, and as the race went to Carver by forfeiture, A wins, just the same as he would had the race been shot and Carver had won it.

Club Elections

CLUB ELECTIONS.—Secretaries and other officers of clubs not having previously done so will confer a favor by sending us the names of all such organizations, with a list of the officers elected for the current year.

AT the very recent organization of the Elmore Gun and Rod Club of Elwood, Idaho, the following were elected officers of the club for the ensuing year: President, E. M. Wolfe; vice-president, R. W. Smith; secretary and treasurer, Wm. V. Helfrich; executive committee, R. W. Smith, W. A. Reynold and H. C. Mallison.

AT the recent annual meeting of the Buckeye Gun Club of Dayton, O., the following gentlemen were elected officers for the ensuing year: President, Dr. L. C. Adams; vice-president, W. Scott McDonald; secretary-treasurer, Wm. Stark; executive committee, C. W. Raymond and Al Wroe; captain, R. O. Heikes.

Amusements

SCHILLER THEATER.—That distinguished dramatic star, Mr. Wilson Barrett, in the celebrated new drama, "The Manxman," begins an engagement at the Schiller Theater next Sunday evening. "The Manxman" is Mr. Barrett's own adaptation of the renowned and widely read novel of the same name, written by Mr. Hall Caine. Not less as an author and an adapter for the stage than as a great actor, has Mr. Barrett won his present high place in public regard. His thrillingly interesting drama, "Ben-my-Chree," is always remembered with the keenest pleasure, and the new play, "The Manxman," is universally conceded to be even more intensely fascinating, and is undoubtedly the dramatic sensation of the year. Its production in England in the early part of the season provoked more criticism and aroused a greater degree of public interest than has attended the presentation of any drama for years, an interest which has been repeated in the United States, and "The Manxman" has proved an attraction which has delighted thousands. The story is one of the most intensely interesting ever put between the covers of a book or represented upon the stage.

CHICAGO OPERA HOUSE.—Last week of Mr. Beerbohm Tree. Tuesday, "Merry Wives of Windsor" and "The Ballad Monger;" Wednesday matinee and Thursday, "Hamlet;" Wednesday evening and Saturday matinee, "Captain Swift;" Friday evening, "An Enemy of the People." Next week, Mr. Frances Wilson in "The Devil's Deputy."

MCVICKER'S THEATER.—Last week of Mr. Thomas Keene. Tuesday, "Othello;" Wednesday matinee, "Merchant of Venice," night, "Hamlet;" Thursday, Friday and Saturday, "Richard III;" Saturday matinee, "Richelieu." Next week—Hagenback's Zoological Circus.

ROYAL ENGLISH WINTER CIRCUS AND GERMAN WATER CARNIVAL.—This week the wonderful Zamora family; Prof. Burke and his wonderful dogs; Mlle. Alberta, and Charles Fish.

AUDITORIUM.—Last two concerts of the Chicago Orchestra, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening this week. A choice Beethoven—Wagner program.

COLUMBIA THEATER.—Last week of Rice's "1492." Only a few more nights as next week Miss Marie Jansen will appear as "Miss Dynamite."

HAYMARKET THEATER.—The picturesque naval comedy-drama "Old Glory," by a great cast and with fine scenic effects.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—Otis Skinner in "His Grace de Grammont."

THE LINCOLN.—"Special Delivery." Next week—"The Ensign."

MADISON STREET OPERA HOUSE.—"The Bullfighter."

DOG TRAINING

DOGS thoroughly trained on quail for the season of 1894-95. I killed very few birds on my training grounds last year, and have thousands this season. My preserve consists of over 10,000 acres of the prettiest quail ground in the world, every variety of cover, and open enough to give a dog range as great as will the prairies of the Northwest. I have the best natural kennel location in the world, pure water, good healthy food, and the care of a competent kennelman Not once in ten years do we have the distemper without its being brought to us, and it then occurs in a very mild form entirely free from serious results except in very rare cases. W. W. TITUS, Waverly, Clay Co., Miss. 42-18-tf

THE ANNUAL DUCK HUNT OF THE M. H. D. C.

BY THOMAS KATTE

About 3 o'clock on the morning of September 20, a casual observer might have noticed three shadowy forms going to and fro between two barns across the alley from each other. Finally a two-seated spring wagon was run out of the larger barn, and two tough little broncos hitched thereto. This rig contained a camping outfit and eatables enough apparently to last a week, but as the M. H. D. C. got through with each meal, the wagon was found to be considerably lighter than before.

Having made sure (?) that nothing had been forgotten, the aforementioned three shadowy forms, clad in Winter overcoats, clambered aboard and the "caravan" moved eastward. In spite of all precautions one of the halters was left lying in the alley, where it was found on our return.

The party consisted of Mr. S—, an insurance man of aldermanic proportions, and who generally carries off most of the prizes in an athletic contest. He is a good shot, a jolly companion, and his usefulness around camp is great, especially in that quarter wherein is located the commissary department. The second member of the party was Mr. T—, who sells the justly celebrated J. I. Case threshing machines. He is built on the shanghai pattern, but nevertheless handles a shotgun in a manner very detrimental to the ducks. In fact any duck that attempts to pass within sixty yards of him will find that it has bitten off a large sized bite if it expects to pass by with feathers unruffled. T— is a recently elected member of the M. H. D. C., and covered himself with glory (and mud) on his first trip therewith. The remaining member of the party was ye scribe, also built similar to a shanghai rooster, and of whom little need be said. These three constituted the present membership of the outfit.

S— shot an old nine-pound, 10-gauge English gun loaded with 3¾ drams of E. C. powder and 1¼ ounces of No. 5 shot. T— carried a seven and three-fourths pound Colt gun, and his load was 3½ drams Hazard powder and 1⅛ ounces of No. 6 shot. Katte had engraved on the lock-plate of his 12-gauge gun "W. R. A. Co." and his load was 3¼ drams of E. C. powder and 1⅛ ounces of No. 5 shot.

We bowled merrily along until about an hour after daylight, when we came to an old millpond some eighteen miles from home. There was a small flock of teal on this pond, but they were too far off to shoot, and having no boat, we came to the conclusion that we didn't want to shoot any ducks then anyway. About a mile further on, a covey of prairie chickens flushed from some tall grass and disappeared over the top of a hill. We marked three of them down in a stubble about half a mile away, and T— and I went after them, leaving S— to follow with the wagon. We could only find one of the birds, however, and that one T— missed. We then walked toward a lake a mile east, and on the way three prairie chickens got up in front of us. T— failed to stop any, and I missed the center bird with the first shot; but my second shot called it down in a hurry, and I turned just in time to stop the old lady as she was disappearing over a knoll. Just before we got to the lake three mallards arose from a small slough and flew away without giving either of us a shot. A farmer shot at them at about eighty yards but failed to get any. There were only two or three ducks in this lake and they were way out in the middle; so we drove down to the south end and ate a hasty breakfast, after which we continued on our way eastward. The monotony of this part of the trip was only broken by the persistency which our wagon wheels had in finding all the stones, badger-holes, deep ruts, etc., within several feet of the path we were pursuing.

We didn't get another bird, in fact we didn't see another to shoot at until about two miles south of Hawley, Minn., where S— got one mallard, and I shot a pair of jack-rabbits. The latter we tied onto the rear end of the wagon until we reached the next farmhouse.

By this time it was past noon and we began to think about dinner. I held the attention of the enemy in front, while T— approached from the right, and S— executed a skillful left flank movement, and together we carried the grub over to the shade of a barbed-wire fence, where we proceeded to demolish the enemy and strengthen our own breastworks therewith. After dinner we hitched up and drove southward. Not seeing any sloughs, we turned and drove to within about a mile and a half south of Hawley, where S—, in driving into the road after passing a load of hay, drove into it at a place where the roadbed was about a foot lower than the surrounding prairie and broke every spoke but two in the right hind wheel of our wagon. T— shot over the side and landed all right, and S— and I immediately followed suit. Here was a nice pickle to be in to be sure! Running the wagon out to one side of the road, T— procured a monkey wrench from a mowing machine near by, and we took the wheel off. After considerable trouble we fixed the wheel so that it would bear the wagon to Hawley, while the M. H. D. C. footed it. At Hawley we got another wagon and left ours to be fixed, and we pulled out and drove three or four miles north. On the way we passed numerous sloughs, but the ducks were, in most cases, conspicuous by their absence, and by nightfall we only had five or six ducks

While preparing to pitch the tent I tossed a tent pole to the ground and broke it in two, constituting accident number two. We repaired it with some strong cord, so that it held all right. The tent was pitched on the lee side of a haystack, and, after another successful raid on the commissary department, we put on our overcoats, crawled under the blankets and went to sleep.

At 6 o'clock next morning we were up and had breakfast over, but it was so foggy we couldn't see to shoot, so that by the time we got back to Hawley we had added only three ducks to our string. On arriving at Hawley we found our wagon nearly repaired, and after going down (way down) into the depths of our jeans for the necessary cash with which to pay the blacksmith, we gave what birds we had to the hotel keeper for the use of his wagon, and started out again. We then learned that my shooting coat, containing about forty shells and two shell extractors, was missing. This constituted accident number three. Up to noon we had only shot three ducks and these we traded for a big jug of milk, and rather thought we had the best of the bargain.

After dinner we hitched up and "piked out" for home, with not a bird in the wagon. About 4 o'clock it began to rain and continued, off and on, until we reached home. During one of the "off" spells a freight train scared up a covey of prairie chickens which settled near us. S— and I got out, but the birds were wild and I shot three times and only got one chicken. S— did not get a fair shot at any of these birds. We arrived home at 7 o'clock and put the ponies in their respective stables, after which T— and S— strung the "game" over a gun, and after much exertion succeeded in getting it safely to S—'s house. After S—'s folks had complimented us on the amount of game we had brought home, S— hung it up in the shed and went down town. When he came back that poor, lone chicken was nearly all stowed away inside of the family cat.

Thus, owing to a prolonged series of unlooked-for accidents, this trip was not a successful one as far as game was concerned, but we had all the fun there was lying around loose, even if we did not get a wagon load of birds.

GUNS

BY L. I. FLOWER

The gun question has been prolific of discussion in the AMERICAN FIELD, and it is a theme of which I do not soon tire. It is always entertaining, and often profitable to me to read the honest opinions of others, whether they agree with mine or not. I have no fault to find with the man who tears my pet theories piecemeal, so long as h does it in a decent and gentlemanly manner; and for the ungentlemanly critic none of us need care; his own words are often all the condemnation he needs.

I remember that some time ago Wandering American, in an interesting little letter to the AMERICAN FIELD, from some point in Europe, mentioned that hammerless guns were not so generally used there as in America, and predicted that the rage for them on this continent might eventually abate. Whereat a correspondent, signing himself Hammerless, went for him with a full head of steam and impugned his knowledge of "gunology" for even hinting that the hammer gun was the peer of the hammerless. And here is where the joke comes in. Most of us who read the AMERICAN FIELD carefully and have the ability to put two and two together know as well as we want to that Wandering American is business manager for a celebrated professional shot whose collection of fine guns is noted wherever the English language is spoken. He probably handles more fine guns in a year than ever Hammerless and I together have seen. Surely the dignified silence of Wandering American was the best answer to such an attack.

What is the best gun to one man is not the best to another. I can prove that without going outside these columns. Whether it is a hammer or a hammerless that is the gun for any man, depends on what qualities in a gun he may value most highly. Two men may use the hammerless gun for widely divergent reasons and neither be a lunatic, while a third may prefer a hammer gun and be equally sound in mind. Your correspondent, Picus, says that he uses a hammerless gun because it saves time in reloading, and consequently wear and tear. I use one because the hammers are not catching onto every thing, or wearing holes in my gun case, and be cause one slight motion of my thumb enables me to command both barrels when game springs suddenly in front of me. I do not care a fig about saving time in reloading. I usually have far more time than I need. My friend, D. W. Pilkington, than whom there is no better wing shot in this province, uses a hammer gun because he thinks it looks better, and he knows he can get a better trigger pull (for him) than he can find in any hammerless. On the latter point I agree with my friend. The lock mechanism in a hammerless is crowded into so small a space, that the springs are short and lacking in elasticity, and the trigger-pull is stiff and harsh compared with that of the best hammer guns. For this reason I came very near going back to the hammer gun, after having shot a hammerless three years.

As between European and American guns I have for some time considered the former ahead, and I see no reason for changing my opinion. I did not hold the same belief four years ago, but I think I am better qualified to judge now than I was then. The "English, you know," slur that some ultra Americans throw at men of my views does not apply to those who, like myself, concede that France, Belgium, Germany, and even Scotland are included in the term "European," and that fine guns are made in all those countries.

I have the highest respect for American gunmakers In shooting their products are second to none; for alas! the best shooting gun in the world does not exist outside of an advertisement. No one will deny that American gunmakers are ingenious, and it is vastly to their credit that they have made so much progress in so short a [illegible] A man who has a good American gun that fits him is well enough off. But in point of workmanship, in my opinion, he has not the best. In America gunmaking is, comparatively speaking, a new industry; in Europe it is as old as the art itself. The European gunmakers, I think, excel in attaining a proper distribution of wood [illegible] in order to get the best "hang," "feel," or balance, their fitting of metal to meta., and wood to iron, is better than that of their American cousins, [illegible] of better design. One correspondent thinks the difference of "feel" in guns is largely imaginary. I believe that if one will take five American guns of say 7½ pounds and one Greener weighing the same, and blindfold me and give me the privilege of grasping each just forward of the action and weighing it, I can pick out the Greener. I have shot some as good and some as bad feeling guns as any man, and the latter were not made in Europe. I almost felt as if I was a half-brother to Mr. W. W. Titus when in his "Reminiscences of a Dog Trainer" he toldthe story of the "Old Bar of Iron"—the trigger action American-made gun of such ill-balance and good shooting qualities, for I shot its counterpart from 1881 to 1887.

Friend Ross, of Boston, from whom, when he was associated with G. W. Turner in business on Dock Square, I believe I bought the before mentioned trigger action gun, thinks he would like indicators on a hammerless. That is a question of taste. They may be of some service on a lever cocking gun, such as the Bonehill and the Talley, but I have no use for them on a barrel cocker. In the gun I use, when I have the sheils in it I know it is cocked; but even in a gun that admits of loading without cocking one can easily de ect the force of the mainsprings when closing the gun if the sear has failed to engage with the tumbler. As for the check-hook which some prize so highly, it is useful to that class of persons who break their guns across their knees, but I can get along very comfortably without it. It is a careless person who yanks a properly made gun open with force enough to strain the hinge.

One American gunmaker advertised in connection with his gun: "No compensators needed to counteract the results of poor work," and with him I believe that screw compensators should be eliminated from the science of gunmaking. It is a well-known fact that if the bearing surfaces of lugs, frame, etc., of a gun are perfect it will give much better service than one in which the bearings are so uneven that they only touch here and there. In the one case the entire face of the lug, or frame, has to wear down before the gun can get shaky; in the other only a few lumps have to be worn off. In the one the barrel is wedged so tightly in its place that it cannot start; in the other there is a motion with the first discharge that increases with each subsequent explosion in the barrels. I have in mind now two guns made in the different countries, each with the Greener cross bolt. When you hook the barrels of one to the frame you have to use a moderate force to push the hook down to its place. The barrels of the other engage with the frame as easily as a boat hook with the chock in the bow of a raft boat. Neither will shoot loose very soon, but if they are kept equally well oiled the latter would fail much sooner than the former.

One writer hints that the stories of guns without screw compensation that have been shot many thousands of times without repairs are unreliable. It is every man's privilege to be skeptical when anything is told him that does not, to him, seem reasonable. A skeptic is often a hard person to convert, and in this case I shall not try. I will merely state that I take some stock in these stories and give my reasons therefor. In 1887 there came into my hands a Lafaucheaux action, pinfire gun made by one Guyot of France. It had been used for fifteen years by a "globe trotter," and had seen service, as Thackeray says, in "Jerusalem and Madagascar, and likewise South Amerikee." The pin holes in the breech end of the barrels were enlarged to twice their original size. The checkering on the grip and foreend was worn quite smooth. I sold it to Byron Chase, a professional market-hunter, and he has shot it constantly in season with heavy charges of powder and small shot, buckshot, bullet or whatever suited his whims. He killed a large moose with it only a few days ago. He killed more geese last Spring than all the other shooters around here combined. That gun has no screw compensators. It never was tightened, and it is tight now; therefore I believe Dr. Carver when he says he shot his Greener 100,000 times without tightening and without repairs. Other people can do as they please about believing either him or me.

I know, Mr. Editor, my views are not those of the majority of your readers, but if these rambling notes should happen to be the means of leading even one to look into the whys and the wherefores of things before adopting extreme views on any branch of "gunology," I will feel amply repaid for one hundred times as much work.

MICHIGAN GAME NOTES

Grand Rapids, Mich.

[illegible]D:—Mr. Chase S. Orsborn, the [illegible] game and fish warden, took the [illegible]y, February 7, and at once as[illegible]rtment. Mr. Orsborn is one of the best known of our young sportsmen, has hunted and fished in nearly every state and territory, and is an exceedingly bright young man. The friends of game and fish protection are to be congratulated upon this most excellent appointment.

The retiring warden, Mr. Chas. S. Hampton, has made a most efficient officer, and, considering the small amount of money allowed him by the last legislature for pay and expenses of deputies ($2,000), has obtained most flattering results. The present legislature is now considering a bill increasing the salary of the state warden to $2,000 per year and appropriating $8,000 with which to pay deputies. There appears to be very little opposition to the measure and it will undoubtedly become a law.

There were several subjects brought before the State Game and Fish Protective League, which met at Lansing recently, which gave rise to considerable discussion, and upon which there was a wide diversity of opinion. The first was a section of a proposed bill to abolish Spring shooting. This was championed by members of the sportsmen's clubs in the western part of the state and opposed by residents along the Detroit and St. Clair rivers. After a hot discussion, lasting several hours, a vote was taken resulting in the de eat of the measure. The deer season was made from October 15 to November 10; quails and partridges October 15 to November 30; snipes and woodcocks August 1 to November 30. The sale of woodcocks, quails and partridges, is to be prohibited entirely. The open season for trout and grayling was fixed from May 1 to September 1. The transportation of any of the birds or fish mentioned above, to any point outside the state, is prohibited absolutely. The maximum penalty for violation of any of the game or fish laws is placed at $125, or imprisonment ninety days, and cases have to be tried in the circuit court. Too much cannot be said in support of this measure. Our late warden, Mr. Hampton, could tell of scores of cases brought in a justice court, where the evidence was absolute and practically uncontradicted. Verdict of jury (composed of friends of the accused), "not guilty." This is very discouraging to the state warden and his deputies, who work hard to secure the very best results possible, and to bring violators to justice.

A case was tried recently in Muskegon, where they have one of the strongest local protective clubs to be found in the state. The defendant was accused of "hunting deer during the close season," and "using a dog to hunt deer," two separate offenses. The evidence showed beyond any question that the defendant's dog was on the track of a deer all day; that the defendant and three others followed the deer and dog all day; and that they all carried guns. The defense was that the dog ran away and got on the track of the deer, and that the men followed, not to hunt the deer, but to get the dog, and a justice court jury, after deliberating seven hours, returned to the court room and gravely announced their inability to agree. They were discharged and another jury drawn, and as a result of the second trial a conviction was secured. The judge (?) then proceeded to impose sentence, making it $1. Could anything be more absurd?

During the hunting season, hunters from other states (mostly from Indiana) flock in here by hundreds. Warden Hampton estimated the number here last year at 2,000. Of this number probably ninety per cent. are market-hunters. Our game law prohibits the shipping of venison outside the state, and every effort is made by these fellows to evade this law and get their venison to the Chicago market. Last Fall Deputy Warden Brewster arrested thirteen men in one day on their way to Indiana, and an examination of their baggage brought to light sixty saddles of venison. They were taken before a justice, found guilty and fined, which was promptly paid and they took the next train for home, poorer by a good round sum, and lighter by over a ton of venison, which which was distributed by the deputy to the poor of Iron Mountain. Under the proposed law they would have been taken before a justice of the peace, and on the proper evidence would have been bound over to the circuit court for trial. This would necessitate a trip for them back to the county in which the alleged violation took place for trial when circuit court convened. The trouble and expense incident to such a trial would be more than any fine that might be imposed, and would go far toward preventing violations by outside hunters who pay nothing toward supporting the laws or the propagation of our game and game fish.

The bill to tax non-resident hunters is being thoroughly discussed, the bill fixing the license at $25. It is meeting with considerable opposition, and its passage may be considered as extremely doubtful. A bill prohibiting the killing of more than two deer by any one person during the season has been introduced and has many friends.

THE SPORTSMEN'S EXPOSITION

The demand throughout the country for information concerning the exposition to be given by the Sportsmen's Exposition Association (Incorporated), at the Madison Square Garden, New York, on May 13 to 18, 1895 has forced upon the management the necessity of issuing weekly bulletins containing the information necessary to keep the public advised of the exhibition, and to guide the manufacturers, artists and private individuals who desire to make exhibits, either for business purposes in the manufacturing department or for educational exhibitions of private collections of objects of historical interest in the Loan and Trophy department. Secretary Frederic S. Webster sends us the following regarding the exposition;

The haste of some of the manufacturers to be identified with the exposition is quite marked. When the exposition was first planned a number of the manufacturers who were quite indifferent to the affair are now hurrying in in earnest, and showing increased confidence in the advantage to be derived from being conspicuously represented, and are now among the most enthusiastic promoters. A brief glance at the prospectus issued a short time since will outline the extensive character of the exposition. Fourteen distinct classes are provided for, which will cover in every essential detail the general interests of the sportsman. Every article used by the sportsman will be included. There are, up to the hour of sending this, thirty-four leading firms who have taken spaces. Some of the exhibits will cover 520 square feet of floor space, in which will be introduced many new and novel features. For months past some of the manufacturers have been busy preparing their elaborate exhibits and have made importations from foreign countries in order to enable them to prepare entirely new material for this occasion. The marvelous beauty of the firearms and weapons to be shown will be imposing and a revelation to the profession as well as to the novice. Both barrel and blade will show the skill of the designer and engraver. Art in firearms will here be demonstrated. The beauty and quality of ancient Damascus steel has been wrought and wrought until the production of the firearms manufacturer of to-day outrivals all efforts of the gunmakers of the ages. The mechanism and devices invented for rapid firing and safe control of the modern firearms will be an exposition alone.

The exhibits of the ammunition makers will show the master hand of the chemist and subtle power and strength of the explosive agents of the hour, which seem to be unlimited. Exhibits showing the power of the powders and the skill of the marksman will be illustrated by targets and diagrams. These displays will be gotten up by the most important manufacturers of this country. Gun implements showing inventions of unique and practical character will attract the visitor and not only interest the dealer but the consumer.

Those who will attend the exposition will not be able to move very far among the mass of exhibits before finding near at hand the sailing craft of the primitive hunter, as well as that of the modern Nimrod. The dugout of old, the bark canoe of the Indian, the sober boiling launch, the shining sails of the phantoms of the sea, those shafts of the silent waters which almost defy Father Time, all will be there side by side, a record of the crafty savage, and of intelligent man.

The comprehensiveness of the other classes of the exposition is quite as complete, and includes fishing tackle, athletic goods, camping outfits, kennel supplies, cameras, horse equipments, taxidermist's art and literature, trophies of the chase, ancient firearms, valuable oil paintings, old prints, books, etc.

The following list will show the number and character of the exhibitors who have engaged space: Winchester Repeating Arms Co.; E. I. Dupont de Nemours & Co.; Union Metallic Cartridge Co.; Forehand Arms Co.; Union Hardware Co.; Colt's Fire Arms Co.; Herman, Boker & Co.; Iver Johnson's Arms and Cycle Co.; Welbusch and Hilger Limited; American Field; Forest and Stream; Von Lengerke & Detmold; Maine Central Railroad; Wm. Lyman; Lefever Arms Co.; Tatham & Brothers; Hunter Arms Co.; A. G. Spaulding & Bros.; Shooting and Fishing; Bridgeport Gun Implement Co.; Cushman & Denison; Remington Arms Co.; Spratt's Patent (American) Limited; Schoverling, Daly & Gales; Cleveland Target Co.; United States Cartridge Co.; Gas Engine and Power Co.; Parker Brothers; Sporting Goods Dealer; T. W. Fraine; Hazard Powder Co.; Hardware Publishing Co.; The Webster Studio.

Every week now adds to the number of exhibitors. The choice spaces are being rapidly allotted and now number upward of seventy-five, leaving but a limited number at the command of the association. A day's delay may find some very important exhibitor without space. It is unfortunate that there are not a greater number of spaces, for it will be impossible to provide for all who may wish to be identified with the exposition.

The association will arrange for reduced traveling rates from all points in the United States. The rates will be low and will offer every inducement to attend the Exposition at a season of the year when traveling is delightful.

The importance of the exposition as a means of extending the public interest of the manufacturer and the dealer cannot be over-estimated. Every step toward the education of the public tends to broaden the knowledge of the novice and quietly enlist new disciples into the ever increasing and changing ranks of the sportsman. The old followers drop off and the new step in, and whenever this fact is realized in any profession the live man of business grasps the opportunity offered to keep up with the advancing host, and finds himself and his interests keeping pace with the evolution of business and of the conditions. If to fancy that old successes can accomplish much that is vital in that of the present, that man's confidence in himself is misplaced. If a narrow conception of the advantages of the Sportsman's Exposition is fostered and an indifference to the efforts of the managers be indulged in, nothing can demonstrate more conclusively (to change the old adage so as to read) "That none are so blind as those who will not hear."

The Sportsmen's Exposition will not be a commonplace affair. The strong list of exhibitors certainly is a guarantee that success is sure to crown the efforts of the promoters of the enterprise.

NITRO POWDERS

Auburn, N. Y.

Editor American Field:—While emphasizing all the claims I have seen made for Walsrode smokeless powder,

I wish to call the attention of sportsmen generally, through the columns of our universal medium the AMERICAN FIELD, to a point of excellence which I have never seen claimed either by the manufacturers of Walsrode or any of its fast-recruiting army of admirers.

Aside from the unequaled qualities of that powder as to exactness under atmospheric changes, etc., I find that it has a power possessed by no other powder, of sustaining velocity, penetration and accuracy, when shot against a heavy wind blowing directly into the gun muzzle. I could give plenty of concrete cases in proof of this, where theory and private experiment have been borne out by practical results, shared in by competent witnesses, who, when in heavy wind 42, 45, and even 48 grains of other smokeless powders seemed powerless to throw shot against the air cushion of wind-pressure (and we retrieved dozens of targets bearing shot marks but unpunctured), have turned to the 29-grain Walsrode load and at once began to pulverize every target shot at. Possibly the Fulford 56-grain live bird load might do as well under such circumstances. I haven't tried it. But one can get only sixty-two such loads out of a pound of powder, they must be loaded in a special three inch, high priced shell, and but few men can withstand the excessive recoil. A pound of Walsrode powder loads one hundred and twenty-nine shells, and may be used to advantage in the cheap Climax shell and give no perceptible recoil. Still another point. In live bird matches, every sportsman has noticed the tendency of shot to drift in strong cross wind. Some guns are especially accurate under such conditions, little or no allowance being necessary at ordinary range with No. 6 shot, while other guns necessitate more or less allowance being made. But I hold that Walsrode will improve the accuracy of any gun; and with a good gun, with which my experiments have been made, there is no need to allow for "drift" at 40 yards.

I am in the strictest sense an amateur, having never shot for money, and am not subsidized by any gun or powder firm, and yet few professionals have made more thorough and painstaking tests than have I in the past four years. While the results of my tests coincide with the claims thus far made by Mr. Armin Tenner and the Walsrode people, the fact that within the past year I have fairly outshot the "Walsrode gang"—Messrs. Oscar Hesse, Al Ivens and Throckmorton, of Red Bank—in friendly contest at the traps, using their load, but shooting on a rival team, is fair evidence that I do not have to give my opinions second hand, in practice or theory.

But men are very skeptical, and gun cranks are no exception; so get out your penetration pads and target paper and try Walsrode for accuracy in cross winds, and penetration against head winds in the next March gale, and then tell me if you do not find the little load that holds its own with anything in fair weather, king of them all in foul weather.

WANTON SLAUGHTER OF GAME

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The clipping I send herewith was taken from the New York Herald of January 28. My first thought was to criticise it through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD, but on second thought I concluded that its publication would tell more effectively its own sad story and furnish to true sportsmen its own commentary. I cannot understand how such wholesale slaughter can be alluded to as sport. Read:

"A tale of sport in Florida of such an extraordinary nature reaches me that it would be incredible were it not vouched for by Colonel M. J. O'Brien, who sends the story to the Herald under date of Tampa Bay Hotel, January 25.

"It seems that Mr. and Mrs. Bergner, of Philadelphia, determined to go shooting at Tampa Bay, and secured the services of Arthur, the best guide connected with the great hotel.

"In three days they bagged six hundred and twelve quails, one hundred and eighteen snipes, three deers, twenty-five herons and all the plover and wild pigeons they cared to carry home.

"This, I believe, beats the record for three days' shooting that is not preserved."

The item, as the reader will see, winds up with: "This, I believe, beats the record for three days' shooting that is not preserved." It should read: This beats the record for three days' indiscriminate slaughter of game that should by conscience be preserved. I can only characterize such an act of shame as crying out for immediate legislation to curb such wanton waste.

I also inclose a typewritten letter from Kissime, Fla., that makes strong bids for this extermination, and also records more acts of this unsportsmanlike, wholesale slaughter. Look on these figures. Three days' shooting: "612 quails, 118 snipe, 3 deer, 25 herons, and all the plovers and wild pigeons they could carry home." Poor herons, plovers and pigeons! In the other letter, one day: "115 quails, 116 snipes." Then it says a pot-hunter killed last season 200 deer. Where, alas! is the distinction in any of them? Well, it is all productive of: "Woeful waste makes woeful want."

Before closing my remarks on the eyesores I would like to say that I hope the New York legislature will simplify our game laws and amend same to read thus: Open season from October 1 to December 1; no Spring shooting; no shipping of game in the state or out of it. Make the fines heavy and the penalties severe, and if our sister or adjoining states would make their laws to conform to these dates, so as to prevent skipping over borders from one state to another, we would very soon have no occasion to go away from home for shooting, and game once more would become as plenty in the North as it is in the South at present, and this would result in a commonwealth preserve for the poor as well as the rich, and would be effective if the laws were enforced. Here is one of the greatest evils, the non-enforcement of existing laws.

WASHINGTON A. COSTER.

PHEASANTS

NORWALK, O.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Under the above title, Mr. Verner de Guise, in his article in the AMERICAN FIELD of March 2, regarding the varieties of pheasants best adapted for stocking preserves, strongly advocates the English pheasant; and in the same article fires a barrel evidently at me, as he quotes from my article, published some months ago, in which I say the English pheasant seems too tame to be a game bird, by saying that my pheasant experience is of but a year's growth.

Let me inform Mr. De Guise that the Linndale Protective Association was chartered in the Winter of 1891, and the pheasants were obtained from Oregon in the Spring of the same year and an extensive hatchery built. The writer had, the year before, shot the Oregon pheasants in the Willamette Valley, and I will say right here that they are "good enough sport for me." I did not see any "foot race" work between dog and bird, but on the contrary my old dog got points all day, and the birds lay well, rocketing as they rose, making a difficult bird to kill. They are certainly hardy and not easily killed by our coldest Winters.

Now in regard to the varieties. We bought one hundred birds in Oregon, eighteen of which died in transit; fifty we turned loose at different times. These have wandered some, having been seen nine miles from where they were liberated, but from eight to fifteen come every night to roost around and on the hatchery. So Mr. De Guise will see that the Oregon birds are not such terrible wanderers after all.

In the Fall of 1894 the writer imported direct from Cirencester, England, two trios of English pheasants (ringnecks). Two hens were dead on arrival. The four that arrived safe I have in my park, at my residence, together with Oregon birds, and I will wager a hundred dollars that Mr. De Guise nor any living man with his "twenty years' experience and raising thousands of pheasants," can tell them apart. I have raised from the Oregon bird pheasants with no ring around their necks at all, and also one bird mottled white. So much for the difference between the Oregon and English.

Mr. De Guise is correct in his statement regarding their laying. I have never before heard of one bird bringing off three, or even two, broods. They are more like a common hen, lay a number of eggs, then set and I have never got any eggs after the middle of July, and very few after June 15. I wish it distinctly understood that the Linndale club is not in the pheasant business for profit. When we have birds or eggs to dispose of, they are sold at barely cost. We advocate no variety, and antagonize no breeder or dealer having cross-bred birds for sale. The Oregon bird is good enough for me, and to anyone who is interested I will be pleased to show our birds, and also let him see our dogs work on them.

W. L. GARDINER,
President Linndale Game Protective Association.

NOTES

A GENTLEMAN who has given the matter much attention and made extensive inquiries from different sections of the country informs us that in many localities the common gray, or cottontail rabbit, has become almost extinct because of the liberal use of ferrets in hunting them; and that wherever the ferret is permitted to be used it eventually destroys this species of game. In cold weather, or during heavy snows, the rabbits burrow, or hole up, and it is then, more than at any other time, that the ferret creates the greatest destruction. It may be sport in a measure to hunt rabbits with ferrets, but it is not sportsmanlike, and should never be indulged in by anyone claiming to be a sportsman, and it would be better far for lovers of field sports with dog and gun if the use of ferrets was not permitted. The ferret is the meat-hunter's best friend, but the enemy, when used for the annihilation of game, of the true sportsman. The same gentleman also says that the pinnated grouse or prairie chicken, when taken into a section of country where there is not an abundance of open land will not remain, but will travel many miles to find a locality that suits it; and to demonstrate the truth of this statement cites the fact that the Robins Island [illegible] years since, purchased a number of [illegible] them out on its preserve, but they went [illegible] ward; yet twenty miles or more from [illegible] to that locality were seen that, when [illegible] to be prairie chickens. This probably [illegible] to many who have purchased prairie chickens and liberated them in sections where the country was not sufficiently open, why the birds did not remain and propagate. The prairie, or a large extent of open country, is the natural home of the prairie chicken, and those who attempt to establish them where these conditions do not exist, need not be surprised if their efforts in this direction fail. The birds do not seem to mind a thickly settled section of the country, if there is plenty of prairie or open land, for often in Illinois and other prairie states they have been seen following the plow, as it were, and feeding on the worms and insects found in the freshly plowed ground; but they are averse to cramped localities and too much timber, or to sections of country where there is not plenty of high, dry ground. It is not alone because the prairie states have been settled up that prairie chickens are no longer found there in large numbers, but because they have been hunted at nearly all seasons of the year until they have been almost annihilated.

I READ with much interest the article in a recent issue of the AMERICAN FIELD, by A. G. Solstman, of Philadelphia, Pa., in regard to the protection of that most noted game bird, the ruffed grouse. To get at the root of the whole matter we should not simply enact good laws, but enforce them when enacted. There are many ways to protect our game, and to prevent its final extermination, but it seems that no plan has yet been decided upon which will fully accomplish the desired end. The prevention of the sale of game seems to be the right thing, but I do not think we should stop at that point, but go a little farther and put a limit to the number of birds that may be killed by one person in a single day. I believe there is as much mischief done in the wholesale slaughter of game by expert marksmen who want to make a big bag and then brag of it as in any other way. Such work stimulates to try to excel and thus causes an unnecessary destruction of game. If the killing of more than a certain number of birds was made a misdemeanor punishable by a heavy fine, it would, in a large measure, prevent the wholesale slaughter of our game, and would do more good than to shorten or change the open season. The next thing necessary in our state, is to have good game and fish wardens, men that take an interest in the game and fish of our state. We do not want men that merely serve in that capacity for the money that is in it for them. I think the time has come when each state must take care of its own game and see that its game law is framed so as to prohibit the killing of more than a stipulated number of birds each day, and then with good, faithful game wardens to enforce the law we will have all the game protection needed. But a law to be of any account must be enforced. We have a law in our state prohibiting net fishing in our public streams, with a heavy fine attached for each violation, but this law is violated with impunity every season. Why? Because we have no one to enforce the law, or whose business it is to watch and arrest violators.

Lebanon, Pa. J. H. CILLEY.

I HAVE been a voter for more than twenty years, and have always advocated, both by voice and vote, the principles of the tariff party when it came to business transactions with foreign nations, but in interstate transactions I draw no discriminating lines; on the contrary I advocate absolute free trade. I am not narrow minded enough, or contracted to such a degree in my conception of American freedom, as to say that a barrier should be thrown around some favored state and thus say to brother sportsmen of other states, cross our boundary line and you must pay from ten to twenty-five dollars for the privilege of hunting in such protected state. I see in the AMERICAN FIELD that several states have, or are trying to have enacted, such laws as demand an especial license tax from residents of other states. To my mind such laws smack of no small degree of selfishness and tend only to sever the bond that binds the multitude of sportsmen in this country into one common brotherhood. I have no objection to, but rather favor, a special tax on sportsmen, if the revenue thus derived be applied to the payment of game wardens for protecting the game; but I am not in favor of imposing any greater tax on a non-resident than on a resident of a state. Let me illustrate: Suppose the state of West Virginia should pass a protective game law and Ohio allow free hunting to everybody (which she does), would any true sportsman from West Virginia feel himself at home while enjoying the free, generous hospitality of Ohio, knowing his own state was walled against reciprocating to a resident of Ohio? Certainly not. Such a law properly interpreted [illegible] hunt in your state and I will hunt with you, but you must pay for the privilege of hunting in my state. I say again, impose a tax to be applied to the protection of game, but impose such tax on one and all alike. Favor itism, selfishness and mock courtesy do not belong to the true sportsman of America. This is written for no per- [illegible] as I do my hunting strictly within the bor- [illegible] own state.

[illegible]. TRUE AMERICAN SPORTSMAN.

[illegible] year is approaching when those who have been penned up in offices, stores or workshops all Winter wish to know of a place where a few days' outing can be enjoyed thoroughly, I take the liberty to say through the columns of the great and only AMERICAN FIELD that I know of no place more suitable for such an outing, nor one more easily reached that offers anything like the inducements presented here, than Spirit Lake. The town is easily reached from Chicago and the east by two lines of railroads, the B., C R. & N. Railway and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul. I am not an advocate of Spring shooting, yet I but speak the truth when I say that ducks and geese are usually found here in goodly numbers in the Spring, and some seasons a great many are shot. As for fishing, this place is hard to beat. Take it from about May 1 to June 15, almost any amount of wall-eyed pike, pickerel, croppies, bass (white and black), and very fine perch can be caught in most any of our lakes. Spirit Lake proper is perhaps the best, and I understand that Hotel Orleans, on the B., C. R. & N. railway, will be open on May 15, to accommodate sportsmen who wish to try the gentle art. There is no place that I know of where one can have such sport fishing so near the railways. In May, or even in April, one man can catch from 100 to 200 pounds of the fish above named in one day in Spirit Lake, provided he has a good guide and boat, and there are plenty to be had, and plenty of accommodations most anywhere around the lakes.

Spirit Lake, Ia. M.

THE time is passing rapidly and it is highly important that sportsmen and all others interested in the passage of important amendments to game laws in the several states should lose no time in pushing forward all these measures. Two years will elapse before there will be another opportunity to attempt to do what may be left undone now. The marketing of all kinds of game should be discouraged as much as possible everywhere. The game warden system should be a law in all states; non-export laws should be passed in every state and strictly enforced. The taxing of non-resident sportsmen and taxing every gun not held in stock, say one dollar each, will produce sufficient revenue to pay expenses in any state for game protection. These are very simple methods and the cost to individuals trifling, but if adopted will be the sure means of accomplishing a great purpose, viz, successful game law enforcement by men paid for their work.

M. R. BORTREE,

Chicago. Pres N. G., B. & F. P. A.

IN years gone by we had the best of shooting here, but now the ponds are about all drained and very few ducks come to this section; and when they do come they stay only a few days. A few quails and prairie chickens are left, but the pot-hunter and law-breaker are rapidly getting them. In saying the law-breaker, I mean the man who always manages to kill a number of birds befor the open season, and thus get the cream of the shooting. The pot-hunter can always be found when not wanted. During one of our recent hard Winters a flock of quails came into my feed-lot, and from there went to the cribs and granary, where I saw them and gave them wheat every day. They finally became as tame as chickens. I fed them for two months or more, and then the pot-hunter put in an appearance one day when I was not around and killed the whole bevy not twenty yards from my home. Perhaps my blood was not up when I found out what had become of those quails.

Monticello, Ill. CHARLIE BRYDEN.

IT seems to me that Mr. de Guise is in error in some of his statements. He says "pheasants, like all other wild birds, do not commence to nest until Spring arrives and all danger of the eggs being frozen is over." Woodcocks often lay their eggs long before danger of freezing is over, and I doubt not many a nest of woodcock eggs are frozen. He also says "it is a well established law of Nature that no wild bird lays eggs in the Autumn, and that it is an absolute physical impossibility for a hen pheasant to rear more than one brood during a year." I have often seen young quails in November that were not over a month old, and on one occasion saw a bevy after November 10, not a week old. I have seen it stated that a pair of quails sometimes rears three broods of young in a year. The general opinion among sportsmen is that two broods are common. Therefore it is not "an absolute physical impossibility for a hen pheasant to rear more than one brood during a year."

Sidney, O. EMORY P. ROBINSON.

[illegible] snow here this Winter, which [illegible] for game birds, for less trapping [illegible] several years. It is a fact not generally known that the southern tier of counties in this state have become wonderfully well stocked with quails, and the trappers not being allowed to trap the birds have resorted to pot-shooting them and have nearly exterminated them. It is amusing to read the different opinions of writers as to the causes of the scarcity of game birds. In my opinion they are all wrong. It is an unpleasant confession to make, but it is a fact that here we shoot and trap too much, and we should not expect any other result than the present scarcity. When this country was new we had lots of game and lots of hawks, weasels, minks, skunks, etc., but there were no market-hunters or game-hogs. Man is the bird's worst enemy.

Beresford, S. D. J. N. WASS.

THE sportsmen of this city, recognizing the fact that game is very scarce in this vicinity, recently organized themselves into a club so as to work in unison in the matter of game propagation and the introduction of new species of game in this section. The club has leased about 3,000 acres of land near the city, for a term of years, on which it intends to place quails, partridges and jack-rabbits and protect them until they have multiplied sufficiently to afford good shooting without the danger of extermintion. Each member has contributed to a fund to be expended in the purchase of "seed," and at the present writing there is $200 or more in the treasurer's hands that will be used as above indicated. The club has been named The Ulster Hunting Club, and although not yet three weeks old has a membership of fifty.

Kingston, N. Y. A. H. COOK JR.

THE Luzerne County (Pa.) Sportsmen's Association will give away $130 in prizes; $60, $40, $20 and $10 to the four persons who, between March 15 and March 31, have the most points to their credit for killing animals and birds destructive of game birds. The animals and birds named and the points allowed each are as follows: Catamount, 10; weasel, 9; fox, 8; mink, 7; great horned owl, 5; hawk, 3; owls, other than horned, 2; skunk, 1. The conditions are that the contestants must produce skins or scalps, with both ears attached, that no two men can put their scalps or heads together to count for one man, in order to win a prize, that the birds or animals must be killed in Luzerne County, and that each contestant must make affidavit that the rules governing the contest have been complied with.

I WROTE the AMERICAN FIELD a short time ago that if the game bill now before the Illinois legislature became a law Minnesota and the Dakotas would retaliate and make laws requiring non residents to take out a license to shoot in these states. North Dakota has taken "the bull by the horns" and has passed a law requiring non-residents to take out a $25 license each year before they will be permitted to hunt in that state. Had it not been for the Illinois bill North Dakota would probably never have gotten up such a law.

St. Paul, Minn. R. W. MATHEWS.

IN 1892 I turned out nine Chinese pheasants on our farm nineteen miles below this city on the Ohio River. Our farmer counted nearly fifty full-grown birds in five coveys that Fall. I also turned out half a dozen crested California quails. They have all disappeared from our vicinity and have evidently wandered into other parts of our state, or into Kentucky, and I should like to hear from any of the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD who have seen or heard of any of them.

New Albany, Ind. N. T. DE PAUW.

MR CHAS. W. TWAY writes us as follows: "I have arranged for the control of five hundred acres of land close to Michigan City, Miss., that is quite a home for quails and it is now being posted to protect it from the market and illegal shooters, and the prohibition will be strictly enforced. Quite a quantity of quails can now be found on the place and in two years, with favorable prospects, the shooting will be par excellent."

THE Columbus Shooting Club, an organization at St. Paul, Minn., about three months old, has a shooting preserve of 240 acres in Anoka County, Minn., with an excellent club house upon it. The preserve is situated about four miles from Forest Lake, bordering on Howard and Columbus lakes, and is considered one of the fines game preserves in that state. The club's lease of the preserve is for five years, with an option for a five-year extension.

WE have had a very pleasant Winter in this locality. At present there are indications of approaching Spring. Wild geese and blackbirds put in their appearance here to-day, which is several days earlier than I have ever before recorded their appearance. We have not had over six inches of snowfall during the Winter. Prairie chickens in large numbers and quite a good many quails have wintered nicely.

Stewart, Minn. FRANK RICHARDS.

IT is reported that a bill has been prepared and will be presented to the New Hampshire legislature, prohibiting Mr. Austin Corbin from purchasing, to add to his already large game preserve, more than an additional 1,000 acres of land. As another 1,000 acres is probably more land than Mr. Corbin will care to ever add to his park at Croydon, he is reported as making no objections to the passage of the bill.

A BILL was introduced in the lower house of the Maine legislature on March 1, amending the game law of that state so that counties obtaining fines in convicted cases of violation of game laws shall retain such fines instead of returning same to state as now. The bill is said to be sanctioned by the game associations of the state as an inducement to county attorneys to prosecute game law violations.

JACK DARLING, the well-known Maine hunter, guide and erstwhile game warden, will hereafter be located at Lake Sebois, of the grand lakes, Maine, having sold his Nicatous Lake camps to New York parties. His new location on the East Branch will afford sportsmen an abundance of fine trout fishing and big game hunting, and the camps he has erected are said to be of the best.

MR. A. L. FOOKES of Columbus, Ohio, is now spending a week in the South, the guest of Chas. W. Tway, of Michigan City, Miss. The shooting is good at the present time.

J. M. ALDRICH of Michigan City, Miss., is on a week's hunt in Arkansas, ducks being the game in view.

NEW PATENTS

The following patents in the sporting goods line have just been issued and are reported especially for the AMERICAN FIELD by Joseph H. Hunter, Attorney at Law and Solicitor of Patents, Washington, D.

Bicycle saddle, Reuben W. Perry, Boston, Mass.
Safety device for revolvers, Frank B. Felton, Hartford, Conn.
Catcher's mitten, Adolf Slomka, New York, N. Y.
Driving mechanism for velocipedes, Jean Marty, Paris, France.
Pneumatic tire for cycles, John W. Hall, Birmingham, England.

A FINE RED IN THREE HOURS

WACO, TEX.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—How I did long for my friends, Mr. James and Mr. Sinclair, on the night of October 22. I am sure the gentlemen would have forever discarded their shotguns when going fox-hunting and would have become convinced that there are hounds that can catch the cunning reds under the most trying circumstances.

I had been informed by a farmer that there was a large red fox killing his poultry; that it had become very bold in its raids, coming sometimes right into his yard after them, and that unless I came and ran it off he would be compelled to shoot it. I promised him that although it was very dark and dry I would be there on Monday night, October 22.

Accordingly, on said night, several friends and myself set out to try our luck with his foxship.

Our pack was composed of Wheeler, Squeeler, Nell, Nancy, Top, Monk, Kittie, Effie and Daisy (all Walkers), Clide, George and Wildhorse (Julys), Trouble (a Rhea dog), Mag (a Rhea and shaggy) and Red Rock (a pot-licker or native). We reached the farmer's house, situated on the edge of the Basque Brakes, and making a circle we drove down the brakes for two miles, when Wheeler opened up; the whole pack put in, and in ten minutes we had him on his feet and going, making the start at 9:35 p. m.

Down the Basque Brakes he carried them until he reached the Guyton Branch; up it he went, and doubling back he crossed a small glade near where they had made the start with Clide and Effie leading the pack by fifty yards. Down by the old fox pen he went, and then up the brakes to Lambdin Hollow; but circling back he skirted the brakes and led off for the lower country. Clide had dropped back with the pack, and Effie, Top and Red Rock were cutting out the pace and before the pack was aware of it were two hundred yards in advance and going like the wind. He again reached the mouth of Guyton Branch, and wheeled right back; and before Effie, Top and Red Rock could straighten it out the pack was up with them. Wheeler and Nancy went to the front, with Daisy a close third, and again they crossed the same glade, Nancy and Wheeler going as if they were yoked and Daisy trying hard to get on even terms, with the pack not fifty yards away. Up by Uncle Billy Walker's they went and over to Lambdin Hollow. There, among those deep gulches and cañons, he did some nice doubling. Nancy, Wheeler and Daisy led off, with the pack still circling, trying to find which way they had gone. We rode down into the Basque Bottom just as Nancy, Wheeler and Daisy came rushing down the Burnt Hills and crossed near us. Thence our fox turned east and made for the Buzzard Roost; making a quick angle he ran its rugged sides.

Wheeler caught the scent right and was pressing hard, and for a few minutes it looked as though he had it all to himself; but not so, as Nancy and Daisy were flanking him, and on the first turn caught it and challenged Wheeler for the lead. Down the Brakes they rushed and we listened to their music as it slowly died away in sweet cadence down a deep cañon. We listened for a few minutes for the sound to rise as they should ascend the other side, but not a sound. Riding rapidly in the direction we last heard them, on nearing the edge of the cañon we could hear their faint notes as they emerged on higher ground a mile behind us. We wheeled and rode at full speed in that direction for a mile, when we drew rein on the small glade near where the start was made. We could not hear anything, and presently the hounds that had got thrown commenced to drop in, until they were all with us except the Walkers, and in thirty minutes more they all straggled in, except Wheeler, Nancy and Daisy. Thirty minutes later Wheeler and Daisy came in. Thinking that perhaps they had jumped a gray fox and it had taken to a tree, we started out to jump another, but had hardly gone a mile before we could hear Nancy coming quartering toward us; the pack heard her also and lost no time in getting to her. Top and Wheeler immediately led out for Nancy but she had no notion of giving up the lead. Around and around they circled, with Top Wheeler and Nancy leading and going like the wind. Down deep gulches and up steep declivities he went, but now he was unable to shake them off, and though dark as an Egyptian night they were running hard and fast; they had ceased to make wide casts and were running straight for their game. As a last resort he jumped into a hog lot and succeeded in throwing them off; but it was only for a moment, for Top's trombone voice called the pack to close up and nobly they responded, Another short circle and he sought the shelter of Uncle Billy Walker's barn; again they were at a loss for a few minutes, but Top was equal to the emergency, and vaulting a high fence he darted under a part raised about ten inches off the ground, his fierce bark telling that he had found his game. But he had hardly opened before he rushed out for fear the fox would get the start of him; he circled the barn to make sure the fox was still there, and then under he went. Another quick bark, and out he came. But Old Foxy was sharp and did not intend to leave cover unless he had the advantage or was forced to. Trouble also had now located the game, and he and Top both rushed under. Trouble immediately came out, but Top rushed at his foxship. Out came the fox, with Top right behind him. Mr. Thomas Harrison and myself had gotten off our horses and gone inside the lot, and the fox passed within three feet of me and turning a corner met Trouble, whereupon it wheeled and very nearly upset Mr. Harrison. Around the barn and over the high fence he went like a bird. The pack had all harked to the voices of Top and Trouble and dashed around the lot just in time to join them as they cleared the fence. And such running they were doing, with Top and Wheeler leading. Down Walker's Hollow they plunged, made a quick circle or two, then a short fight seemingly among the hounds and all was over, making the catch in a little less than three hours.

I walked down to where the kill was made and struck match after match, but failed to find him. The next day Mr. Walker sent me word he had found him. I drove out and took a look at him, and he was certainly a fine specimen of his kind. I would not have caught him for ten dollars if I could have helped it, as we have not many reds here.

Now, my friends, James and Sinclair, here was a full grown red fox caught in less than three hours under the most disadvantageous circumstances. Get you some good dogs and try them once.

T. H. BROWN.

NOTES

MANY a strange anecdote has been told in conection with foxes and hounds, and the following are worthy a place in the scrap book of the hunting man. The Lewiston Sun of January 31 relates how "Mrs. T. P. Glover of Hartford, Maine, witnessed a fox hunt recently which ended in a very novel way. While standing at the rear door of her house she heard the baying of hounds in the woods, but as the sound is a common one in that neighborhood she thought little of it. She left the door open, and, as she walked about the kitchen, the sounds became more distinct and appeared to be coming nearer to the house. Soon Mrs. Glover heard a noise in the pantry, and going there she found a fox jumping about, tipping over pans of milk and making a mess of everything there. She closed the door and let the fox thrash about as much as he wished. Soon the hounds came along on the trail and dashed against the pantry door, and then the hunters appeared. They were informed of the condition of affairs and one of them went into the pantry and dispatched the fox." But it is not always the fox that comes to grief from untoward happenings, as may be seen from the following incident, of which Mr. Lewis Haight of New Berlin, N. Y., sends us a brief account: "One of my foxhounds was lost some weeks ago, and was found dead in a hollow tree in Charles Goodrich's woods a few days since. The tree had blown down and lay upon the ground. There was an opening in the stump on the under side of the tree large enough for the hound to squeeze himself through, and he had no doubt run a fox into the tree and become wedged in himself so that he could not escape. Mr. Goodrich in cutting up the log sawed off one forefoot of the hound that was frozen in the tree. The hollow extended seven feet up the tree, and the hole in the stump was one foot in diameter. The hound when found lay in a cramped position, showing that he had tried hard to get out."

BEING a reader of the AMERICAN FIELD and seeing the sport the hunting clubs are having, I will say while I do not belong to a club I am a lover of the sport. I had a fine time this Winter until the snow got too deep. Have got one hound, have killed seven foxes, broke one's leg and did not get it, and run three to ground. We think of organizing a club; if so, you will hear from us. There are lots of red foxes in this country, but it is very hilly and hard on the hounds.

Fish and Fishing

CATCHING TROUT ON THE FLY

BY A. W. RHOADS

The Fly-Fishers' Club was the name originally adopted by six brothers seventeen years ago, and for fourteen years the club has taken an annual camping trip, with its number unimpaired. The membership of the club is limited to six, and to become a member one must be a fly fisherman and able to cook with some degree of originality, as no professional cook is taken upon the outings. The duration of each annual trip is limited, in days, to twice the number of the party, thus giving to each member two days of cooking; and on each day a new dish must be prepared by the person who is the cook for that day. This rule—which is strictly enforced—keeps the cook hustling for an original and palatable dish, and, as no canned goods or vegetables, except potatoes, or meat are taken along, one can readily imagine that no grass grows under the cook's feet.

Three years ago one of the members left the state and the club limit was made up by taking in a new member in the person of Mr. Charles E. Randall, editor and proprietor of the Catawissa News Item, a man who thoroughly enjoys all classes of field sports and is an adept at most of them. The present members of the club are E. A., B. E., F. R., G. B. and A. W. Rhoads and Charles E. Randall. Up to the time of his application for membership in the club Charley had done all his trout fishing in the old-fashioned style, with the ever-seductive angleworm. Charley was anxious to become a member of the Fly-Fishers' Club, but, as a prerequisite qualification for membership is "under no circumstances to take trout except on a fly," the worm fisherman was practically disqualified.

Under the promise of foregoing his favorite red worm and to adopt the fly he was taken in for a year, on probation, with the understanding that if at the end of that time he could say he had taken trout by no other means than on the fly and had made satisfactory progress in the art of fly-fishing, he should be admitted to full membership. At the end of the probationary year, upon showing he had redeemed the required promise, and having demonstrated his ability to hook enough fishes to feed himself, he became a member. For two seasons Charley was a most exemplary and enthusiastic member, and committed no breach of the club's peremptory rule regarding the taking of trout; but then, under peculiarly trying circumstances and when sorely tempted, he fell from grace most ignominiously.

For fifteen years the club's annual camp had been pitched on Bowman's Creek, in Wyoming County, Pa., as fine a natural trout stream as ever ran down grade. Then the advent of sawmills and tanneries, [illegible] driving for the former and the acid [illegible] caused good fishing in that noble stream [illegible] the past. Two years ago, by a vote of [illegible] was located upon the Lehigh River, in Monroe County, Pa., nine miles from the railroad and as many miles from any human habitation.

For a most flagrant infraction of club ethics, Charley is now threatened with expulsion from the club, and while he pleads he has not technically violated the rules, yet he has, in spirit, violated his obligation as a club member.

When the club started out last June, Charley had a gun case among his other and more cumbersome luggage. We all noticed the gun case and were not a little surprised thereat, for the reason that—all being gunners—we knew the season was closed for all kinds of game in the state. Still we also knew that Charley was devoted to his dog and gun, a crack field shot and no mean antagonist at the trap: and, therefore, as with one accord, we came to the conclusion that Charlie intended to practice on swallows in the evening, or, perhaps, shoot frogs on the days when he was to act as cook. We little thought then to what base uses a first-class fowling piece can be put.

We had whipped the stream very successfully for three or four days, Charley having done fairly well for a novice or converted worm fisherman, but we could see that No. 2 (Charley's camp number) was dissatisfied with the number and size of his catch—being naturally ambitious to excel—and uneasy, and that he paid more than the usual number of visits to the nervine chest during the evening.

On the morning of the fifth day we were up by daylight, and after partaking of a fine mess of scrambled trout and potatoes—the invention of No. 2—prepared for the day's onslaught. No. 3 and myself (No. 1) decided to go up to the white rocks and fish down, No. 4 and No. 5 were to go down to the mouth of the Tobyhanna and fish up, leaving No. 2 and No. 6 to fish Stony Run from the meadows to the Lehigh.

Fishing on the Lehigh that day was poor indeed, owing to the presence of millions of flies (greendrakes) on the surface of the water; and still countless millions were flying through the air, and yet other millions were being hatched out every minute. These flies are hatched under the water, at the bottom, rise to the surface, float along quite helplessly for from fifty to one hundred feet, and, having gained strength and confidence, flutter and then fly, only to alight on the water, where their frantic efforts to rise again make them bright and shining marks for the voracious speckled beauties.

No. 3 and No. 1 were whipping every pool, rapid and eddy thoroughly, with but indifferent success. Every now and again, through the quiet mountain air, we heard the report of a shotgun, the sound coming from down the stream. Naturally we wondered who could be shooting so industriously at that season of the year, not once thinking of Charley and his Greener.

We kept at our fishing, however, until we were near the place where the shooting was being done, when I suggested that we take to the woods and from an unseen position discover the shooter and at what he was shooting. After reeling up our lines and unjointing our rods, we proceeded through the thick brush to a point opposite the shooter, where we cautiously crept toward the bank of the stream, and peering through the brush, were dumfounded to see the editor (No. 2) sitting on the opposite bank, with his gun at his shoulder, sighting at something on the surface of the water. He kept sighting and slowly moving the muzzle of the gun down-stream.

We scanned the water closely, at the point indicated by the pointing of the gun, to see what the object was at which he was evidently shooting, but could see nothing save the thousands of greendrakes floating along.

Presently, however, we saw a fine big trout make a splash at a fluttering greendrake, and at that instant the gun cracked and the water in the vicinity of that fluttering fly was considerably agitated. By the way, so was the editor, for he dropped his gun, made a lunge for the water—which was running quite rapidly at that point—waded quickly to the point where the shot had struck, made a dive to the bottom with his hand and came up with a trout fully a foot long.

The next thing No. 2 did was to wade triumphantly to the shore, resume his former position, take a flask from his pocket, and after unscrewing the top take a long pull at the coffee it contained. Then he placed his gun at his shoulder again and sighted at the floating flies, following them from fair range above to the same distance below, and then at another batch, and so on until a trout jumped, when he would fire instantly.

We watched him until, after numerous misses, [illegible] had killed four trout. At this point No. 3 asked in a gruff tone of voice:

"What are you doing there?"

No. 2 looked about him with a startled expression on his somewhat flushed face, and replied:

"Fishing, can't you see?" at the same time grabbing and holding up his rod.

"That won't do," said No. 3; "you have violated the [illegible] club. How many have you?"

[illegible] said No. 2, holding up as fine a lot of trout [illegible]

"[illegible] you catch them?" I asked.

"[illegible]" was the answer.

I should like to have the opinion of fishermen as to whether he was fly-fishing?

Wilkesbarre, Pa.

NOTES

Locally, here at Indianapolis, we have scarcely any game or game birds and conseqnently none to protect. As a result, we have devoted our attention to the violation of our fishing laws. During the early part of the Summer we captured a great many nets of various kinds, but because of the "private pond" plea a number of them got away from us. The same may be said of the violators. Two of the latter, however, went to the workhouse for one hundred days each, and some others for shorter terms, and still others paid fines. Because of the activity of our association we succeeded in largely breaking up this netting business right here in town, through which flows White River—a splendid bass stream at one time. We were influential in securing the appointment of a number of wardens in the various counties, and constable powers were conferred upon these by the sheriffs of their counties. Here in Indianapolis, however, the sheriff refused to confer the powers requested, so that all our work had to be done by paid constables, and proved rather expensive. Our Commissioner of Fisheries receives a salary of only $300 per annum and has $500 for expenses; so that he is unable to do much work, and, furthermore, he has no police powers, which makes it all the worse. The strawboard works, of which there are a number in the state, have greatly damaged our streams in the matter of fish life. These are all operated by wealthy corporations, which fight to the bitter end any action taken against them. The waste products of oil wells and fuel and illuminating gas works also contribute largely toward the destruction of our fishes. We hope, however, to remedy this at the present session of the General Assembly. New measures have been prepared, circulated, discussed and altered to conform, as nearly as possible, to the general idea of the majority of those expressing opinions, and we hope to have them enacted. I am of the opinion that netting of private ponds should be prohibited by law, for while some few owners of nets kept for such purpose will respect the law, there are a larger number who will not. We have had a good deal of trouble with these nets. They are a menace to any public waters in the vicinity, and are largely used unlawfully. Such, at least, we have found here.

The annual meeting of the Anglers' Association of Onondaga County was held at Syracuse, N. Y., the evening of March 4, President Dwight H. Bruce in the chair. Mr. Frank H. Nye was elected to membership. The report of the executive committee shows that at various times during the past year the club had employed three different private game protectors, two of whom—Henry Jackson and Arthur Cottet—were on duty during April. During May, June and July Protector Jackson served; in August the association had no protector, but Charles S. Potter was engaged in September and is still in the employ of the association. The committee, while admitting in the report the fact that Mr. Potter was inexperienced when employed, lauded his services and commended him to the association. The waters upon which the private protectors operated were Oneida, Onondaga, Skaneateles, Cross and Seneca lakes, Seneca and Oneida rivers, Nine Mile, Onondaga, Butternut, Limestone and Chittenango creeks, Geddes, Furnace, Harbor and Alvord's brooks. During the year the protectors traveled 2,826 miles and seized thirteen flat-nets, twenty-eight gill-nets, four fyke-nets, twenty trap-nets and four seines. Seventeen violators were arrested, nine of whom were convicted or pleaded guilty. The report of Treasurer Charles H. Mowry showed the financial standing excellent, with a balance in the treasury of $144.37. The club membership is 309, of which 270 members are in good standing. The election for officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: President, Gen. D. H. Bruce; vice-president, Amos Padgham; secretary William Everson; treasurer, Charles H. Mowry; executive committee, for two years, J. W. Page, John Buss, Wm. Everson; one year, J. E. Bierhardt, Myron Weidman and R. A. Molyneux.

It is said that a fishoil factory has been started at or near New Orleans. The mouth of the Mississippi River is teeming with fishes of various kinds, especially a very oily and [illegible] fish of the sardine family, and the [illegible] plant have now one weir in operation [illegible] ty tons of fishes are taken two or [illegible] is the first weir ever used in those [illegible] t the end of the weir becomes [illegible] s, also mackerel, pompanos and other choice fishes, and usually from one to six tarpons are taken out. The big fishes are speared and lifted out and the small ones are scooped out, and all are taken up the river to New Orleans. Perhaps some of the choicest edible fishes may find a way to the markets and be eaten, but all the rest—including the gamy tarpon or silver king—go to the factory to be made into fishoil and fertilizer. The plant is intended to handle 100 tons of fishes daily.

At a point about eleven miles north of Quincy, Ill., in Bear Creek, hunters report the water is obstructed with millions of dead fishes, principally dogfish and carp, which were frozen or smothered under the ice during the recent extremely cold weather and heavy snowfall. Were it not that the decaying carcasses may cause an epidemic, the disposition of the dogfish is a subject upon which to congratulate the people of that section. If the farmers could haul away the dead fishes and use them for manure it would be a benefit to all the residents in the vicinity. A similar instance of fishes being frozen by thousands is reported from Rush Lake, in Minnesota, but there the fishes are of better quality, being pickerel, mascalonge and bullheads. There the farmers have been hauling away the dead fishes by wagon loads.

The steelhead fishing on the California coast is about over for the season, but the anglers at Point Reyes landed a few belated fishes on February 23 and 24. The anglers are now looking forward to the opening of the trout season on April 1, and as the prospects are for unusually good fishing great preparations are being made in overhauling fishing tackle and in buying new outfits. At a recent meeting of the Walla Walla Fishing Company of San Francisco, the following officers were elected: President, George Staeglich; vice-president, Otto Bartholdy; secretary, Henry Helms; treasurer, Harry Stephens; sergeant-at-arms, Ed McGregor; financial secretary, Fred Staeglich; Jonah, I. Cohen.

The expert anglers who are so fortunate as to be in Florida are having great sport. Bluefish have been running at various points along the coast, Jupiter Inlet and Lake Worth being named as places at which bluefishing has been prime of late. Red snappers, weakfish, channel bass, sheepheads and other varieties of fishes so plentiful in those waters afford the best of sport for saltwater fishermen; and large-mouthed bass, pickerel, bream, etc., furnish equally fine game for anglers on fresh water.

I am a constant reader of the American Field and have been for years. I notice sometimes in the Natural History department accounts of freaks and curiosities, and would say that I have a very great curiosity in the shape of a fish. It is one of the sunfish species, of medium size, fully developed and has two distinct mouths, one above the other. It is well preserved in alcohol.

A bill to prohibit the taking of trout less than six inches in length, which was recently introduced into the Massachusetts legislature, has been killed. By vote it was referred to the next legislature; that vote, however, was reconsidered in the House, but in passing to be engrossed it was lost by a vote of seventy-eight yeas to eighty-three nays.

The Knox County (Me.) Fish Protective Association has elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Jesse M. Blackington; secretary, Robert H. Crockett; treasurer, Arthur H. Berry; directors, John W. Anderson, Everett A. Jones, William F. Norcross, Jesse M. Blackington.

On March 11, State Fish Commissioner H. M. Garlich, of St. Joseph, Mo., resigned from his official position because the state appropriation for the purposes of the board had been placed at $15,000 although he declared the board required $24,000.

At Erie, Pa., the state fish hatchery has in the hatchling troughs 25,000,000 of whitefish eggs. If these hatch out successfully the state fish commission will have a good many young whitefishes to liberate in state waters.

THE REPTILES OF MICHIGAN—NO. 8

BY MORRIS GIBBS

Milk-snake; Thunder and Lightning Snake; House-Snake; Chicken-Snake.—Ophibolus doliatus (Linn.).—This harmless species is also, in common with the water-snake, called the spotted adder and is credited with great virulence by many ignorant persons. It is one of the most peacable, inoffensive serpents in the great lake region, will not offer to bite and it could not more than slightly scratch one's hand if it made the attempt. In the genus Ophibolus there are recorded in the Government Report, of 1892, six species and fifteen varieties in the Union. But of these the above is the only species found in Michigan, and it is probable that the snake referred to under this heading is the variety known as O. d. triangulus. At any rate the history of this snake will be given, even if prominent herpetologists have disagreed as to various specimens submitted for identification. The appearance of this serpent varies greatly, both as to size of the specimen and coloration and as regards the season. These changes, especially as regards coloration, are greatly due to squamation. Just after the Spring or early Summer shedding of the outside coat the appearance of this serpent is very handsome, and there are few snakes that compare with it in beauty of markings.

Although so commonly known, a short description will be presented here to guide observers in identifying the commoner variety of the chicken-snake in the great lake region: Ground color ashy above, with more or less brown, sometimes reddish. Above are five series of blotches and spots, a dorsal row and on each side two lateral. The dorsal blotches, broader than long, vary from forty to sixty in number; their color varies from grayish-brown to brownish-red and they are more or less bordered with black. The dorsal spots often coalesce with the blotches on the sides, giving an irregular appearance. The under parts are blotched with black and creamy white. Speaking of this serpent, O. P. Hay, in his "Reptiles of Indiana," says:

"In its distribution, the species ranges from Maine to Panama, and illustrates well the changes which a widely spread species undergoes when traced from one region to another."

All snakes are credited with evil deeds, but this one being quite generally known from its prominence in marked coloration, and from its fearlessness in approaching the habitations of man, is especially accused of many singular and bad traits. Not the least of these deplorable yet interesting and doubted characteristics are its predilections for bringing lightning and thunder, stealing chickens and eggs, milking cows, and getting into houses and other buildings. That the spotted adder can and does swallow an occasional small chicken I do not doubt, and they are so very unsuspicious that they frequently get into outbuildings and, I doubt not, into houses. Especially are they noticed about spring-houses where milk is kept, and this selection has given the snake a reputation of drinking milk, a habit which I will hardly credit though I will not deny it. In truth, so many tales are current regarding this snake's dairy habits that I cannot refrain from giving a story in full. This tale can not be vouched for; but I am willing to swear that it equals in truthfulness the average snake story.

A farmer saw one of his cows running about the field, and upon investigation found two snakes clinging to the cow's teats. Upon seeing the farmer the snakes—who were full of milk—loosened their hold and escaped into a sugar maple grove. This act was repeated for several days, when, one afternoon, the farmer hearing a noise in the woods sneaked in and witnessed the following sight: The snakes had saved a lot of milk and were preparing it in dairy style; one was about finishing a good-sized cheese, and the other one had just churned a lot of butter in an old empty sap trough. The farmer waited until the old snake had patted the butter into shape and then thought to capture the prize. He noticed that the roll of butter had a hole through it while the cheese had a handle attached to it like a jug. The observant farmer now prepared to charge. But the "dairy snakes," hearing a noise, thrust the ends of their tails about the dairy products, climbed a tall tree and laughed at the astonished farmer. And then there was a terrible thunder-storm, and lightning struck the trees in the grove and ripped things up beautifully. I nearly forgot to say that when the farmer awoke he had a hard time in getting home. The next day he was "tuck" down with "numony." But he told the story, and though it rained so hard that there were very few "to the fun'rel," still the neighbors all believe the tale.

The milk-snake is generally found on low ground and usually at no great distance from water, and I have never yet seen one on the high muddy soil selected by the blow-adder. The choice of location in the neighborhood of milk coolers about springs often leads to its destruction, for the farmer's wife or boy meeting the unsuspicious creature often declares it venomous, and it is instantly clubbed to death. This harmless snake, like other species, makes a neighborhood its home, and an individual or pair may be found in a locality for years if undisturbed. I have met with specimens fully four feet long, though about three feet is the common length. I have not found the larger specimens in trees, but the smaller individuals are often arboreal and a common place for the smaller ones to occupy is the space between the dead bark and wood of old stubs and logs. De Kay says that it climbs well, and adds that its beautiful colors change almost immediately after death.

This species is oviparous and sometimes deposits its eggs in a manure pile. At first I thought that this was for the purpose of securing the heat from the decomposing and fermenting mass, and perhaps this is correct; but the second find was entirely different in condition and situation, being placed under a board in the highway. The eggs are white and shining, and of the elliptical shape of all snake's eggs. They are sometimes found inclosed in a skin sheath or delicate membrane which connects them. The old snake is said to guard the eggs.

Holbrook says that this snake feeds on mice and various insects. I can add that it also eats frogs and toads. It has a small head, but slightly wider than the neck, which gives it an innocent appearance.

According to Dr. Goode's investigations the old snake, at a sign of danger, opens her mouth and the young ones disappear down her throat. I have never seen an exhibition of this kind.

This snake has been found by me in Kalamazoo, Van Buren, Kent, Ottawa and Montcalm counties, Michigan.

NOTES

BEING in Brewer the other day I called on Mr. Manly Hardy with the intention of seeing his collection of birds, which, I am informed, is the most complete of any private collection in the country. Owing to business in Bangor I was unable to get to Mr. Hardy's until late in the evening, too late to see his collection that night, but as I shall call again earlier in the day, next week, I will then give the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD a brief account of some of the rarer birds in his possession. Although too late to see the birds I had a very interesting conversation with Mr. Hardy, who is a practical naturalist and one who draws his information from actual contact with and patient study of the animals in their native haunts. Referring to the habits of the beaver, which some naturalists have affirmed will suck the air from a a stick of wood which they have felled in order to facilitate its sinking, Mr. Hardy says: "It is the greatest nonsense to suppose that any animal with a mouth as small as that of a beaver could suck the air from a stick of wood three and even four times greater in diameter than that of the beaver's mouth, as is affirmed by some writers on this subject." It is an old yarn handed down from generation to generation, but one to make actual observers of the habits of the beaver wonder why such inaccuracies are not corrected. Speaking of the intelligence of the beaver, Mr. Hardy related an instance which occurred on one of his trapping trips while in the woods with only an Indian guide. They came upon a stream, where they found evidences of beavers' work. For some distance on either bank there were no trees, with the exception of one birch as large as a man's body. Only one, a bachelor beaver, inhabited this stream, and, owing to the lack of more suitable food, he had felled the big birch. The birch leaned over the water, and, it being so high, had not great care been exercised it would have fallen across the stream, and the beaver would have been as badly off as if it had not been cut down. Evidently foreseeing this the beaver felled the tree lengthwise of the bank, cut it into pieces and rolled them down the bank into the water, where he could sink it and eat it at his leisure. This and many other incidents were related during the short time I stayed, which I may write about in the future.

Orland, Me. F. W. CHAPMAN.

ON Sunday, November 4, 1894, I took out of a low, thick, scrubby bush near our cemetery a last Spring's nest of a finch, or perhaps a bunting, in the bottom of which and completely covered was a cowbird's egg. This cow blackbird is really a starling, of a dirty brown or black color, and frequents outlots near to farmhouses, barns, or fields where cattle are pastured. Like the cuckoo it builds no nest, but deposits its eggs in the nests of other birds. This finch had built its nest and woven or wattled it together of wood fiber and grasses, and lined it inside with soft material and hair. The female cowbird, dropping an egg here and there in other nests, found by chance this beautiful nest, and while the mother finch was absent laid an egg in it. The pair of finches, when they returned, looked in wonderment at the egg so unlike their own in color and size, and finding they were unable to roll it out or destroy it built a floor or bottom of the nest over it, and thus shut it out from all possibility of ever hatching or interfering with their own family affairs. This, of course, lessened the depth and comfort of the nest, and they were compelled to add a rim all around the top of it, thus making it higher and deeper. The rim addition is very evident in the nest. It is not only curious but a very unusual thing to find a nest just in the condition of this one. I read the AMERICAN FIELD and enjoy it.

NEAR Harrisburg, O., on March 6, the three-year-old daughter of Charles Gates, a farmer, was attacked by an immense hawk, which swooped down and fastened its talons in her face and neck. The father succeeded in driving away the bird by the liberal use of a club, but not until the poor child had been seriously wounded.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—NO. 8

BY A. K. DELANEY

A Resume of the Russian Occupation

Chirikof, commanding the St. Paul and who on June 20, 1741, had parted company with Bering in mid-ocean, reached the northwest coast of America in latitude 55° 21′, or along what are now known as the Prince of Wales Islands, on July 15, probably about thirty-six hours before Bering saw Mount St. Elias three degrees farther north. On his return to Kamchatka he sighted several of the Aleutian chain of islands, but owing to confusion of names and localities it is somewhat difficult to determine which. Toward the close of his return voyage he and his crew suffered all the hardships endured by the Bering party excepting shipwreck. The ravages of the scurvy had reduced their number nearly one-half, and Yelagin, the sailing master, was the only officer able to keep the deck on October 8, 1741, when the vessel entered Avacha Bay. Chirikof barely survived, and La Croyere of the scientific corps expired on the ship's deck in the vain attempt to reach the shore. On August 26, 1742, nearly eleven months later, Stellar and the survivors of Bering Island reached Avacha in a small craft built from the wreck of the St. Peter. On board this craft were nine hundred sea-otter skins, taken by the party during the nine months' stay on Bering Island, and worth at that time from 80 to 100 rubles apiece in the Chinese markets.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—ALEXANDER BARANOF, THE FIRST GOVERNOR OF THE RUSSIAN COLONIES IN AMERICA

It is, therefore, not to be doubted that the succeeding expeditions from the Siberian coast toward the rising sun were stimulated quite as much by the gainful fur trade as by the spirit of discovery. As these [illegible] stitute, in part, at least, the foundat[illegible] that dominion Russia ceded to the Uni[illegible] resume of the more important ente[illegible] Bering's discoveries may not be [illegible] American reader.

The next Summer after Stellar's return a Cossack sergeant, named Bossof, made a voyage in a vessel of his own construction from Avacha to Bering and Copper islands, and repeated this voyage in each of the years 1745, 1747 and 1749. In 1745 a schooner was constructed by a company at New Kamchatka, situated at the mouth of the stream from which Bering in 1728 started on his first voyage along the Asiatic coast to the north, and was placed in command of a sailor of the ill-fated St. Peter, named Nevodchikof. This vessel reached the islands of Agatoo and Atou, the latter of which now marks the western limit of our land dominion. In 1749 a small vessel belonging to an Irkutsk merchant reached the island of Atka, and, ten years later, Glottof advanced as far as the Islands of Umnak and Ounalaska and subsequently charted the whole of that group of the Aleutian chain now known as the Fox Islands. In 1760 Adrelan Tolstyk, who had made several successful voyages to the Copper Islands and the westerly of the chain, reached the island of Adahk and explored it and the surrounding group, which after him are called the Adrelan Islands. The same year the Gabriel, the largest vessel which up to that time had been engaged in the fur trade and owned by a Irkutsk merchant named Becheven, touched at Umnak and passed the next succeeding Winter off the coast of the Aliaska Peninsula. In the Autumn of 1762 Glottof, who had previously discovered Ounalaska and the Fox group, reached the island of Kodiak. In 1768 two captains of the imperial navy, Krenitzen and Sevashof, sailed from Kamchatka in two government vessels and the former passed the succeeding Winter at Ounalaska and the latter at Kodiak.

Thus, during the twenty-five years succeeding the death of Bering, the Russian ensign had been planted along the entire Aleutian chain, from the Copper Islands to the mainland of the North American continent. Possession and occupation everywhere followed discovery, and settlements and trading posts sprang up at the more favorable points along the line. Fostered by the ever alluring profits of the fur traffic, expeditions were constantly fitted out from the Kamchatkan ports and along the Sea of Okhotsk for voyages of exploration and trade to the new country. Lieutenant Elliot, in his report on the seal islands, published with the tenth census of the United States, estimates that no less than twenty-five different companies, with quite a fleet of small vessels, were thus employed as early as 1772. By far the most important of these companies, prior to the organization of the great Russian-American corporation, and one that has left behind traces of its influence, was headed by Ivanovich Shelikof.

This gentleman was a merchant of Ryisk and first appears in Alaskan annals in the year 1776, and from that date to his death, in 1795, continued to be one of the most conspicuous figures of the Russian colonies in America. His first ventures met with great success as nearly every vessel despatched by him returned with very rich cargoes, and in 1783 he left Okhotsk with three ships—accompanied by his wife—and the next year founded the first permanent settlement on the island of Kodiak, which for a long period continued to be the headquarters of his operations. In 1788, upon the report of the imperial college of commerce and the recommendation of the Governor General of Siberia, which even went so far as to advise that he be granted a credit from the imperial treasury of 200,000 rubles for the purpose of carrying forward his enterprises in America, he obtained exclusive privileges over the territory occupied by him. From Kodiak expeditions were sent out, one of which crossed the strait which now bears Shelikof's name—situated between Kodiak and the mainland—and explored the coast of the continent as far as Cook's Inlet, on the shores of which a settlement was established in 1786.

The same year Gerassim Pribylof, a Muscovite ship's mate in the employ of a rival company, sailed in a small sloop from Ounalaska and discovered the islands which bear his name and are situated in the heart of Bering Sea and now far-famed as the great seal rookeries of the known world.

By the year 1788 Shelikof had extended the field of his operations over Cook's Inlet, Prince William Sound and as far south as Yakutat Bay, including Kayak Island, where in 1741 Bering had dropped the first anchor to find a holding on the northwest shores of America. It would appear that Shelikof was the first person to whom Pribylof divulged the real truth concerning the importance of his discovery and the hordes of seals and sea-otters he had found on the seal rookeries. The former, perceiving the vast importance of this new discovery, instantly bent his energies toward obtaining a monopoly of the territory held by his company, and also, if possible, to consolidate with his now portentious rival. In furtherance of these objects he returned to Russia and after obtaining the recommendation of the Governor General of Siberia and the favorable report of the imperial college of commerce he obtained an audience with the Empress Catharine II, who finally granted the ukase awarding him exclusive privileges over the territory occupied by his company.

In 1790 Shelikof concluded an agreement whereby Alexander Baranof became the chief manager of his enterprises in America, and for the next thirty years the latter was the most conspicuous Alaskan figure and, taken all in all, the most remarkable man connected with Russia's occupation of the territory.

While at St. Petersburg Shelikof met Nicholas Rezanof, one of the nobility and a courtier of Catharine II and ultimately the founder of the Russian-American Company. Before him Shelikof laid the plans of his future operations in America. Rezanof, while a man of ability, force of character and ambition, was not bountifully supplied with worldly goods, and prompted, doubtless, by somewhat the same motives as actuate our English cousins in forming matrimonial alliances with American heiresses, he sought the hand of Shelikof's daughter and was accepted. Then he went to work indefatigably in furtherance of the schemes of his father-in-law, who, however, died at Irkutsk, in 1795, before the consummation of his plans was reached. Shelikof's wife, Natalie, who had accompanied him everywhere over the steppes of Siberia and to the wilds of America—succeeded to the management of his affairs, and being an [illegible] business woman and aided by Rezanof [illegible] the consolidation of the three leading com- [illegible] America, and on August 11, 1799, the [illegible] was signed chartering the world-renowned [illegible] company, which for nearly seventy years [illegible] undisputed sway over the lands, waters and islands of Russia's North American possessions. The company's capital stock of 725,000 rubles was quickly absorbed, the most of it being taken at St. Petersburg, and among the subscribers were the Emperor, Empress and Grand Duke Constantine. Baranof was made chief manager of the company and governor of the Russian colonies in America.

Although the vast coast line of Alaska continued—after this as before—to be visited by English, Spanish, French and American vessels in quest of trade in furs, the organization of this company, chartered by royalty, patronized by nobility, sustained by the sinews of consolidated capital and led by the tireless energies of Buranof, clinched Russia's title to her North American Possessions.

Eight years before the company was organized, Baranof reached Kodiak, in pursuance of his agreement with Shelikof, and at once transferred the headquarters of the company from Three Saints' Bay to the harbor of St. Paul, where the village of that name now stands, and the next year (1793) one of his skippers passed round the western extremity of the Aliaska Peninsula and along its northwestern coast to Bristol Bay, discovering the Kvichak River and Lake Ilyamna, and crossed through these and over the portage into Cook's Inlet, thus discovering the shortest and safest route for small craft to pass from Shelikof Strait to Bering Sea. In 1794 he established a shipyard at Resurrection Bay, on Prince William Sound, and the next year saw his trading posts go up at Yakutat Bay. In April, 1799, he left Kodiak with two vessels, manned by twenty-two Russians, and accompanied by a fleet of two hundred canoes and bidarkas started to the south and east toward the Alexander Archipelago. He was reinforced at Prince William Sound by one hundred and fifty additional canoes; and, after losing thirteen of his fleet in the surf off Kyak Island and suffering a night attack from the natives, he reached Norfolk Sound and began the settlement at old Sitka, some seven miles north of the site of the present town of that name, on May 25, 1799, three months before the ukase creating the great company was issued. This settlement was completely swept out of existence in the Summer of 1802 by an Indian massacre, while Baranof was absent at Kodiak. But the iron governor, nothing daunted, returned in 1804 and reëstablished the post on the site of the present Sitka, then known as New Archangel.

By the Spring of 1805, aside from settlements and trading posts along the Aleutian chain, Baranof had established thirteen ostrogs or fortified stations between the Aliaska Peninsula and Norfolk Sound, two at Kodiak, one at the entrance of Cook's Inlet and three along its shores, one on Afognak Island, two on Prince William Sound, one at Cape St. Elias, two on Yakutat Bay and one at New Archangel on the bay of Sitka.

In 1805 the headquarters of the company were changed to Sitka, and for the next succeeding fifteen years from his castle situated on a butte of basaltic rock—which overlooks both the town of his creation and the thousand isles of Norfolk Sound—Baranof continued to push the enterprises of his company as chief manager and to wield the powers of a feudal autocrat as governor.

In January, 1818, orders reached him relieving him from service, and, although he had often requested it, the order was a complete surprise and deeply painful as it came in such a way as to leave the inference that the company had lost confidence in him. The officer entrusted with duty of breaking the news to the governor bungled the matter in such a way that the old man was completely prostrated, He soon rallied, however, and went to work transferring to his successor the property and effects of the company, which had grown to such enormous proportions that this task was not completed until September of that year.

Then followed the leave-taking, the details of which are touched in the extreme. Before his departure he revisited Kodiak and [illegible] called at the various settlements along [illegible] bidding farewell to the compan- [illegible] braved the perils of land and sea, [illegible] ve population, faced ice and snow, [illegible] found and maintain their coun- [illegible] 's ragged shores. He was then [illegible] It was nearly thirty years since [illegible] blow at St. Paul, on Kodiak Island, and in the uninviting fastnesses he had invaded he had seen a new generation grow up around him.

To add to the deep depression which during these closing hours must have weighed heavily on the old governor he was almost penniless. Though his income had been quite considerable, thousands had gone for hospitality and thousands more for charity, and though millions upon millions had passed through his hands he had failed to accumulate. Old age was upon him and his iron frame was slowly but surely giving way under the encroachments of years, reinforced by continued exposure and much conviviality. Where should he go? What should he do? At first he contemplated returning to his brother at Kamchatka; then decided to go to the Sandwich Islands and pass the rest of his days at the court of Kamekameha, with whom he appears to have been on the best of terms. Finally an officer of the navy, who was an old friend, persuaded him to go to St. Petersburg, urging that he would be of great service to the managers in advising them as to the direction of the company's affairs in the colonies. This last consideration no doubt decided the governor as to his future movements. To one of his restless disposition and tireless energy the hope of yet being useful, especially to the company which if he had not created he had led to unprecedented success, was a potent influence and he adopted his friend's advice.

On November 27, amid the lamentations of the entire settlement, stories of which are yet told with tearful eyes by the gray-haired survivors of Russian days at Sitka, he embarked on the long voyage down the Pacific and Indian oceans, round the Cape of Good Hope and up the Atlantic to that native land he had not visited in forty years. Under the circumstances that then surrounded him we may not doubt that the old man's rugged nature gave way, and we may well believe the story related of him, that as the vessel gained an offing and began to take the heavy swell of the Pacific Main and he turned to gaze for the last time on the little town he had reared from out the wilderness, the old man "wept like a child."

The voyage, however, was his last. For some reason the vessel was delayed at Batavia, on the island of Java, directly under the tropics, for nearly forty days. During this time the governor began to fail and sank rapidly, and when, at last, the vessel got under way she was scarcely out of the Strait of Sunda when, on April 16, 1819, he breathed his last. The next day, as the vessel drifted slowly over the smooth waters of the Indian Ocean, which glanced and shimmered in the bright, tropical sunlight, his remains, amid the awful solemnities which always attend a burial at sea, were committed to the bosom of the mighty deep.

I have become strongly impressed with conviction that an unjust estimate of the old governor's character obtains among the English-speaking peoples, arising partly from his intercourse with foreigners who chanced to frequent his region, and partly from Irving's account of him in Astoria. He is there thus described:

"A rough, rugged, hospitable, hard-drinking, old Russian; somewhat of a soldier, somewhat of a trader, above all a boon companion of the old roistering school with a strong cross of the bear, but as keen and crafty at a bargain as the most arrant water drinker."

While this description contains much of truth it is not the whole truth, and if Baranof may be judged by the tasks he accomplished the "bear cross" must have been a good one. He was undoubtedly reticent and guarded toward strangers, and often surly and ill-natured, especially to those who attempted the fur trade within his dominions; but to all coming on other missions, from the government embassador to the roving skipper, he dispensed a lavish hospitality. His old castle was the scene of many a boisterous carousal, but the drinking ended at his festive board; and the man who invaded the mountainous and forbidding fortresses of nature along the northwest coast of America and there founded and maintained that possession which led up to the confirmation of his country's title to six hundred thousand square miles of the globe was more than a hard drinker. His thorough business capacity is demonstrated by the fact that his successor was not able to find a single discrepancy in accounts covering more than a quarter of a century and involving millions of money, and the further fact that he left the service a poor man is a volume of evidence in support of his integrity. He was prone to melancholy, which increased with his advancing years, aggravated, no doubt, by the gloom and solitude which forever brood over the vast wilderness he had invaded. His temper was violent but he was quick to redress an injury, and thousands would not cover the sums he dispensed to the poor and unfortunate.

Behind his rough exterior there must have been something of culture, as his library was crowded and contained some of the standard literary and scientific works of every leading nation in Europe; and the spacious rooms of his castle on the cliff were adorned with many excellent paintings and pieces of sculpture. He was keenly susceptible to the influence of music, and his daughter—the offspring of his union with a Kolosh woman and who under the instruction of a German governess, became quite accomplished—never failed with the aid of music to dispel the father's fits of temper and melancholy. He was deeply and devotedly esteemed by his people, old and young. Tradition still survive at Sitka of his frolics with the young people, and after hearing these it is not difficult to imagine the bald, wrinkled, sallow, stoop-shouldered old man coming down, on a sunshiny day, from his aerie on the butte for a gambol with the children on the placer. These brighter colors of a somewhat darksome character are given additional light by the concluding sentence of his report to his successor, which reads as follows:

"I commend to your special care the people who have learned to love me, and who under judicious treatment will be just as well disposed toward those who shall watch over them in the future."

At the time of Baranof's death the company had reached the zenith of its power and prosperity. His successors continued explorations along the coast of the mainland northward, and up the valleys of the Kuskovim and Yukon rivers. In 1835 the station at St. Michaels, at the mouth of the latter river, was established, and in 1838 Point Barrow was located. To check the ever-encroaching operations of the Hudson Bay Company, which had become the Russian monopoly's most formidable rival, a stockade fort was erected in 1833 at the mouth of the Stikine River, near the site of the present town of Wrangel. While these extended somewhat the field of the company's operations the far-seeing policy of the first manager—sustained by his dauntless courage, restless energy and unwearied perseverance—had long before placed within the company's grasp the richest and most productive fur-bearing regions of the globe. From 1797 to 1820 the net earnings of the monopoly exceeded 7,685,000 rubles, over one-half of which had been distributed as dividends; and the rest was added to the capital stock, which, in 1820, had reached 4,570,000. rubles. Under the second charter, from 1821 to 1841, the dividends alone amounted to 8,500,000 rubles, while the gross revenues reached the fabulous sum of 61,400,000 rubles. These figures were never repeated. The decline from 1841 to 1867 was steady and irresistible. When the field opened by the monopoly's ablest and most indomitable chieftain was harvested, the golden days of the Russian-American Company were gone forever.

THE CHICAGO SHOW

The sixth annual show of the Mascoutah Kennel Club, held in Battery D and Second Regiment Armory at Chicago, March 5 to 8, records an unqualified success in number of entries, quality of dogs and the large and constant attendance during the four days of good weather, which it fortunately had. Financially the show was the most successful since the first one given by the club, in 1889, when only one building was used. This year, with two buildings, and expenses doubled, a handsome surplus lies in the treasury of the club, which augurs well for the success of future shows. President Bryson was complimented on all sides for his perfect system, and everyone who had a claim was made happy by the prompt payment of the same, no one having to call a second time. From the opening of the doors on the first day there could not have been a complaint of the attendance, as the buildings were comfortably filled during the morning hours, crowded in the afternoons and jammed during the evenings, testing the full capacity of the two buildings. Evidently the "four hundred" of Chicago attended the show.

Judging commenced promptly at 10 a. m. Tuesday. The judges numbered thirteen, and at least five of them made their débuts in the ring. Ten of them only had one breed each assigned to them, one had five breeds, another nine, and Mr. Davidson the balance. There seemed quite a little dissatisfaction with many of the awards, as a lot of "kicking" was indulged in for a while. The judges were provided with handsome badges—so much so that it was the subject of notice in the daily papers. A marked catalog, and quite a correct one, was ready on Thursday morning. A large room was placed at the disposal of the exhibitors, and a check room near it, where wearing apparel and packages were checked for them without charge. Spratts Patent did the benching and feeding, Messrs. Ehrmann, Oldham and Murphy attending to the company's business in an acceptable way.

Prof. Wormwood, with his trained dogs and monkeys, gave an unusually attractive performance daily at 2:30 and 8:30 p. m; he never failed to draw a crowd covering all available space.

The officers of the club most in evidence were the president (Mr. W. J. Bryson) and the chairman of the bench show committee (Mr. Walter C. Gunn), with the following members of it: Messrs. Arthur J. Caton, J. Wallace Wakem, W. E. Rothermel and Secretary J. L. Lincoln. Their work required constant attendance and ability, and it is almost needless to say it was performed promptly and satisfactorily. Mr. S. Clifford Payson, treasurer, regretted very much he could not be present, ill health compelling his absence in Florida.

George H. Hill was the superintendent, and he never appeared to better advantage. He was ably assisted by H. T. Draper, of New York.

The complete success of this show should result in future good to the club and exhibitors. The weather could hardly have been better, and it is questionable if it kept a single individual from the show.

POINTERS.—(Mr. B. F. Seltner, judge.) The total number entered was forty-three (thirteen absent), and quite all present were shown in good coat and condition. The judge took pains to get at correct awards, yet in a few instances I do not agree with them for reasons given hereafter. Moulton Banner, in the challenge class for heavyweights, was in good form. Josie Bracket won in the class for bitches. Woolton Game, the other entry, absent. The open class for heavyweight dogs had seven entries; all present. Lord Bracken was correctly the winner. He is fairly headed, a trifle short in muzzle, and a suspicion of thickness in shoulders; a longer neck would improve his appearance. He is good in eye, chest, body and legs and feet, standing well on his legs, with good movement. Hempstead Prince, a rather poor second, was described in Detroit report; there were two or three better dogs in the class. Dick, third, a lemon and white, is a little heavy in skull, ears only fair, has good shoulders and body, not good in pasterns, and was in good coat and condition except being soft in flesh. Ridgeview Regent, fourth, was described last week. Lad of Beaufort, another lemon and white, has fair head, ears well hung, eyes a trifle light, a little out at elbows and a trifle leggy, otherwise a fair dog. Brush of Hessen and King Bang were V.H.C. Brush is fair in head, a little thick in shoulders, good in chest, flat in loin, and with fair legs and feet. King Bang is good in head, neck, shoulders and chest, straight in stifles, leggy in appearance, fair legs and feet. In the open class for bitches (three entries) only one was present. Peppo's Girl, a fairly good one all through, good enough in head, good eye, ear well hung, a trifle wide at top of shoulder, good body and hips, but dropping a little too abruptly from hips to root of stern, good in stern, quarters and stifles, fair in feet. In the challenge class for lightweights. Ridgeview Tenny and Arthur Lad were both in good form, winning in order named. Wild Lily was absent in the class for bitches, leaving Miss Rumor to take the honors without competition. In the open class for lightweight dogs Chancellor and Comet contested for first honors and were finally placed in order named. Comet is best in muzzle, body, bone and pasterns and should have won. Kent's Priam, third, is poor in head, fair in shoulders, rather straight and light behind, good in forelegs and feet. Col. Kent, fourth, is fair in head and shoulders, deep but flat in chest, slack in loin, fair in stern, legs and feet. Brine Bow, H.C., is fair in head, good in neck, shoulders, body, quarters and stifles, fair in legs and feet, front feet toe out; a better dog than Col. Kent for fourth place. The awards in the open class for lightweight bitches in part I cannot agree with The class was not a strong one and hard to decide. Marguerite Kent was rightly first. Trinket's Nell, second, was not good enough for the place; she is not good in head, being weak in muzzle and nearly bare of stop, ear not well hung, only fair in shoulders and chest, round turned in hips and not good in quarters and stifles, her weakest points. There were two better bitches in the class—Lady Reveller, placed third, and Fannie Kirk, V.H.C. Lady Reveller, though shown in light flesh, was a better bitch than Trinket's Nell at any point. Fannie Kirk was the best headed bitch in the class, and while she is a trifle thick in shoulders and round turned in hips she should not have been lower than third place, and a contender for second honors. Rene, third, is only a fair bitch. In the puppy class Maiden Kent, the only one present, was an ordinary one and lucky to get the blue ribbon. The awards for specials are given under that heading.

ENGLISH SETTERS.—(Mr. W. B. Wells, judge.) A number of good setters were shown and the type selected by the judge was better and more uniform than at previous shows this season. In the challenge class the competition was again between Glendon and Cactus, Glendon winning this time. Both have their faults (not many) and in the estimation of them, the one's against the other's, the decision hangs. Glendon must be in best of form to win, and he was not in that condition here. Victress Llewellin, with Albert's Nellie absent, was again alone in the challenge class and won; she is in better form than usual this season and ready for stronger competition. The open class for dogs had sixteen entries, two marked absent Dan o' Light, the winner, is an extra good one and there is little to say against him. He is not quite clean cut under the eyes and his head as a whole could be better, but he is good in eye, has a well hung ear, is good in shoulders and chest and excellent in body, loin, hips, quarters, stifles, lower thigh and legs and feet, standing well on his legs, with good movement and a good coat. He was distinctly better than anything in the class, and his win an easy one. Dash Antonio, described last week, was second. Washtenaw Grouse advanced from his previous position and was third. It is questionable if he was not entitled to second place, as he is better at each end than Dash Antonio. Cincinnatus' Pride, well known, was fourth. Count Beaufort, a dog of another type, got the reserve card. English Jack was a trifle lowly estimated at H.C., and was a better dog than King Gladys, who won the same honors. Gladys is only good in front. Wordsley Dude, looking well, but a trifle too fat, deserved mention. The bitch class had several good ones in it, and it required skillful work to get them right, and even good judges had a chance to disagree in the estimate of the faults of each when they were not many. Bly took the blue ribbon. She is good enough in skull but a trifle light in a rather good shaped muzzle; beside this a well shaped bitch of medium size showing much quality. The fault of the second, Countess Antonio, was also in head; aside from it a nice bitch throughout but rather too light. Sue H, nearly white, having a little lemon color, was a large bitch—the largest in the class—and outside of head and throatiness an excellent one; probably the best one in the class. Little, if any, exception could be made to her except in features named. Miss Shattuc, fourth, is a richly marked black and tan, nice in head, and a good bitch throughout. Katie Wells, reserve, is good in head, short in neck, fair in shoulders, good in body, legs and feet, but not quite flat coated. Maid Marian, while not of the type fancied by the judge, is too good a bitch to pass unnoticed in any company. Easter Lily, H C., was the best headed bitch in the class, and while she was good enough in eye, the lids seemed inflamed, giving a rather bad expression; aside from this she is an excellent bitch and was entitled to a place among the prize winners. Bell Boy, the winning dog puppy, is an ordinary puppy throughout. Prince Gladys, second, was removed before I could see him. Namona, winner in the bitch class, is a good one and decidedly the best puppy shown; she is good in head, looks a trifle leggy now but should grow out of it, has a racy form, and should prove a speedy one in the field; there is little to say against her and her development will be watched with interest. Van's Own, second, is only fair in head, but a good puppy besides.

IRISH SETTERS.—(Mr. John Davidson, judge.) The classes were fairly well filled and the dogs were generally of good type. In color they were about all that could be desired, and nowadays one off color is the exception. Finglas, Kildare, Kildare Glenmore, Tim, Pride of Patsy and Blarney Jr were the entries in the challenge class. Pride of Patsy was absent, and Champion Tim was marked for specials only. The fight for the honors narrowed down to Kildare and Finglas, the former winning. All in the class were in good form. The challenge class for bitches had Bessie Finmore, Ruby Glenmore, Queen Vic and Norna, and the result of the competition was the as at Detroit, Queen Vic winning, with Bessie Finmore reserve. The open class had ten entries, and none absent. Bob Jr, well known, repeated his New York and Detroit wins. Lord Elcho Jr, second, is fair in head and eye, good in shoulders, chest, forearms, legs and quarters, but does not seem quite evenly balanced, showing a little light behind compared with the fore parts; he was shown in beautiful coat and condition; a nice dog. Third prize went to Chief Red Cloud, good in skull, eye and ear, but muzzle could be a little better; he is good in shoulders, chest, body, hips, quarters, stifles and legs and feet, and of good color but shown a trifle light in flesh. Winnebago Jap was fourth; a dog with a fair head, short neck, a little thick in shoulders, but having a good body and legs and feet and shown in only fair condition. Patsy's Pride, reserve, is good in skull and eye, fair in muzzle, straight or upright in shoulders, has a good but rather short body and is straight in stifles. Red Chief drew the reserve card; he is coarse in head, has fair shoulders, good body and legs and feet, but was shown in poor condition. Pride of Kansas, H.C., is fair in head, good in eye, shoulders and chest, drops away a little at hips, has good quarters and stifle, shown in rather light flesh. The bitch class of twelve entries had six absent. Lady Swiveler, the winner, and Nona, second, were similarly placed at Detroit last week and were described then. Pride's Heather, third, is a little off in muzzle and a little light in eye, is good in neck, shoulders, chest, body, legs and feet and color, toes out a little in front. Bonnie Belle, fourth, is off in head, thick in shoulders, round in barrel and hips, and shows little of Irish character; a far inferior bitch to Pride's Beauty, placed below her, and H.C. would have been liberal notice for her. Pride's Beauty, reserve, is a trifle off in muzzle, has good eye, neck, shoulders, chest, body and legs and feet and stands well, was a trifle light in flesh, of good color and movement and showing good quality. Lady Florida, V.H.C., is not good in shoulders and is out at elbows; a fair bitch besides. She was the only entry in the puppy class and was awarded first prize. The special awards appear elsewhere.

GORDON SETTERS.—(Mr. John Davidson, judge.) Heather Lad won over Leo B in challenge class, as he has been doing under the same judge right along. The dogs were specially mentioned last week. Highland Yolo retained her position also over Princess Louise in the corresponding class for bitches. In the open class a new one turned up in Louis S, easily the best one in the class and quite equal to anything in the show, condition considered. He is good in head and eye, ear well hung, good in neck, shoulders, chest, body and legs and feet, standing well on them, and good in movement, tan good and well placed, coat in beautiful condition, all making a handsome dog. Dwight Don, second, was described in the Detroit report, as was Highland Kent, placed third here. Guy, fourth, also was mentioned last week. Highland Louis, V.H.C., is fairly good in head, has good eye and shoulders, is slack in body and loin, and only fair in quarters, good in tan, legs and feet good enough and stands well on them. Sandy, the reserve dog, was out of his stall. The bitch class had seven entries, three absent, and the winners with one exception are well known, viz., Dwight Pearl first, Maid of Waverley second, and Santa Marie third. The fourth prize winner, Beulah M, is good in neck, shoulders and chest, legs, feet and tan, but her thin condition made her look leggy. The dog puppy class had four entries. Lake View, the winner, is a fair puppy all through but at present is leggy; shown in fair condition. Highland Piper, second, is better in head and general form, showing more quality and seemed the best for first place. Highland Monarch, reserve, is coarse in head, barely fair in shoulders, good legs and feet, but the tan markings are not clear[illegible] tan on hindlegs being mixed with the bl[illegible] lower thigh. Dwight Jim, V.H.C., is [illegible] good shoulders and chest, fair body, [illegible] and tan is well placed, but he is not [illegible] ing to some extent his otherwise g[illegible] the class for bitch puppies Dwight S[illegible] sick along with Dwight Ellie and had [illegible] recovered. She is a good puppy throughout, shown thin in flesh. Highland Leola had the best head in the class, is fair in shoulders, right in hips, quarters and stifles, good in tan, and was well shown. Dwight B is fair in head and good in neck, elbows seemed to hug under chest, is long in loin and not flat coated, good in tan markings. Special prizes under proper heading.

FOXHOUNDS.—(Mr. John Davidson, judge.) These classes were extremely light, not one having over two entries, and a total of seven in the show. Bowsprit, a well-known good one, was alone in the challenge class for American dogs and bitches. In the open class for American dog hounds Big Strive was an easy winner; he is a good hound all through and in fine form. Buckshot, second, is only fair in head, a little short in neck and a little upright in shoulders, otherwise a clean made dog and shown in nice condition. Pearl Strive, winner in the bitch class, has been described; she was in good form and an easy winner. Glenwood Belle, second, is fair in head, but inclined to be thick in shoulders, fair in quarters; she was shown in excellent condition. The English class had two entries. Songster, first, is an excellent dog throughout. Villager, second, while only a puppy, made rather a poor showing beside Songster. Villager is only fair in head, rather slight in body, showing legginess, and a little straight in stifles; he was well treated in receiving the second award. The bitch class had no entry.

BEAGLES.—(Mr. John Davidson, judge.) The beagle classes were well filled and in some instances the competition close. Mr. C. S. Wixom carried off the principal honors, of which he is proud; and of the long list shown he is the breeder of all but two, and he is justly proud of it. The challenge class had five entries, four competing. Cherry was easily the winner, Adam taking the reserve card. Cherry was shown in too much flesh, causing him to appear thick in shoulders; aside from being soft in flesh he was in good form. Elf and June M met in the corresponding bitch class and were placed in the order named. Elf, now about eight years old, carries her age well. June M is a year younger. The open class for dogs over thirteen inches had six entries, the first award going to Hawkeye and Roger W taking second place. I failed to see the reason for this award, as Roger is best in head and shoulders and not inferior in any point, and therefore should have won. Joe, third, is not good in shoulders, elbows out, and is stralght in stifle; otherwise a fair dog. Dan J, reserve, is thick in shoulders, stands wide in front, and is not right in coat. Pomp, V.H.C., is good in head and a fair dog throughout. The same can be said of Trump, placed in same position. In the bitch class (over 13 inches) Daisy Corbett was an easy winner; aside from being soft in flesh, she was in good form. Fancy M, good in head, is not good in shoulders and forelegs, and loses too much in this respect to beat Alice, a better bitch in head, shoulders, back and legs, and better in movement. The open class for dogs under 13 inches had three entries, Razzle winning; he is well known. Royal Dick took second, but Little Wonder, far better in head and neck, and equally as good in other points, seemed the best dog for the place. The contest for first place in the bitch class was between Kitty Clover and Evangeline. Both are good bitches. Evangeline was best in head, shoulders and movement. Kitty is best in coat. Ada, third, did not seem the equal of Dazzle in any point; she has only a fair head and is wide in front. Dazzle is best in this respect and should have had third place. Flight, V.H.C., is a fair bitch only. The awards in the puppy class were right. Alice first, Bessie Brown second; both are promising puppies.

CHESAPEAKES.—(Mr. John Davidson, judge.) Only two were shown, and they in the open class for dogs. Mr. Merrill's October was best in form and coat and won over Don Pedro. J. M. TAYLOR.

MASTIFFS.—(A. Trickett, judge.) There was a very respectable entry of this grand old breed and the quality all through was of a high order. Elkson, the winner in the challenge dog class, had no opposition; he has grown very throaty but was in good condition and looked well. In the challenge bitch class Sinaloa was the only entry and was shown very fit, as were all the dogs from the Peoria kennel. In open dogs Marquis was declared the winner. He has no serious faults, neither has he any superlative merit; a good sound little dog shown in the pink of condition and standing on good legs and feet; he moves well and is of good type, but is lacking in bone and substance, particularly in second thigh and from the hocks down. His skull is nicely molded, eye dark, muzzle a bit deficient in depth and bluntness and he wants more individuality, character and masculinity. To sum up, he looks effeminate and would have made a charming bitch had nature so ordained. Prince Cola has been shown in better condition, but he beats the winner so much in skull and muzzle, bone, body and hindquarters that in spite of his ginger face he should have won. Ealderman, third, has been the subject of a great deal of controversy, his ears being the bone of contention; he lacks face coloring and his eyes are very light, but his skull, muzzle and front leave nothing to be desired; he droops in quarters and moves badly in one hock. Leamington, fourth, has an enormous skull and great bone, but his muzzle is weak and his heavy ears are very slovenly in carriage. Beaufort's Boy, reserve, has a fairly good head, neat ear and size, but he is very straight behind and was, I thought, suffering from chorea. Alarm, V.H.C., has some character in head but is rather flat in rib and light in quarters. Every dog in the class received notice and was graded correctly. I thought Minnie Beaufort held her class safely, as she scores so heavily in skull, muzzle, width of chest, body and bone, but she was awarded second, first prize going to the [illegible] Rowena, who is light in eye and very shallow in [illegible] and scores in no single point except condition [illegible] more massive opponent. Cerene, third, has so much [illegible] proved in condition in her new quarters that I [illegible] recognized her, and she easily turned the tables on [illegible]

Minting, always a good one but beaten in size. Ripp[illegible] reserve, was second at Detroit last week. Morse's [illegible] V.H.C. beats Queen Isabella, H.C., in head and [illegible] ter is the better in action. The puppies [illegible] ner undersized for their age. Leamington [illegible] class with Rossington, small in head [illegible] and Beaufort's Boy third. Mr. [illegible] special for the best exhibit of [illegible] for best dog and best bitch with Marquis and Rowena, which should have gone to Prince Cola and Minnie Beaufort (according to my way of thinking). With these exceptions the mastiff classes were very well handled, and Mr. Trickett proves himself an exceedingly careful as well as a competent judge.

ST. BERNARDS.—(R. J. Sawyer, judge.) Sir Bedivere and Rustic Beauty were the only entries in the challenge classes, but they are a whole host in themselves. In open rough dogs Le Prince turned the tables on his conqueror of last week. Mindful of his defeat, caused by the way in which he was shown, no chances were given away on this occasion. He had been well cared for, washed and groomed, and although still far from his best in condition and coat, he was so much improved that he won correctly although by a very narrow margin, and no one is more ready to congratulate his owner than myself. American Cæsar, though beaten, is not disgraced, and when Le Prince gets into the challenge class the former will have a clear field. Safford, third, is a big, well-formed dog with a very pleasing head and expression although a trifle light in eye and plain in muzzle. He is wanting slightly in bone and substance but is a very sound dog and a good mover. These were correctly placed, but I could not follow the judge in placing the fourth prize, which was given to a very plain-headed, long-faced dog with shocking bad eyes and a vile expression. In color and coat he has nothing whatever that is pleasing to the eye and his size is his only redeeming quality. Captain Nedep, V.H.C., is very bad in hocks and lacks face markings, but he has a grand head, immense size and capital front legs with good bone and coat. Victor Roloson, V.H.C., has no shadings, but he is a very massive, compact dog with a good head, and very much resembles his sire, Grand Master. Lord Dante, H.C., was not in good form, but his nice type and expression will always commend him to notice. Prince Wyatt is small but has a very nice head and good bone, coat and color. Alto, unnoticed, is of good type, and all of these can beat the fourth prize winner in every essential point. Samuel, H.C., is not a St. Bernard at all (I hope I shall not be asked what he is, for I don't know). La Princess easily headed the open bitch class, with the nicely marked Alta Berna, who does not improve in expression and was out of coat, second. Baroness Streatham, third, is a good-bodied bitch with a nice coat and massive head, which might be more pronounced in stop. Artilla, V.H.C., I thought would have been an easy fourth, scoring as she does in size, straightness of bone, head, body, coat and color, but Jessie W—curiously enough a litter sister to the fourth prize winner in the dog class—was selected for the position. She bears a strong family resemblance to her extremely plain fraternal relative and should have been well beaten, not only by Artilla, but also by Aristocratine, reserve, Burnadetta, V.H.C., Chesterford Lady, C., and Lady Taylor, unnoticed. Lady Scott, Fernwood Rose II, Lady Gladys, Cleo Gayorma and Freedom Madge were absent. Duke Wadsworth won in dog puppies; a very promising youngster, big for his age and well grown, having any amount of good sound bone and capital hindquarters. He is just a trifle cut away in muzzle, but good in skull, eye, stop and markings. Marko II, second, is a big one, rather long-faced and weak in head at present, and his coat needs attention; his bone and body are much above the average. Bitch puppies were only moderate, and Suzon's grand lengthy body and good bone made her almost equal to any in the class, although her muzzle is a bit weak. In the novice class for rough-coated dogs and bitches Mayor F was placed first, but I very much preferred Artilla, C., for the position, with Captain Nedep, Patrick and Mascot Imperial following in the order named. It is worthy of notice that although Artilla got three letters in the open bitch class she got but one here.

Champion Melrose won in challenge smooth dogs, with Alton II reserve, and Lawrence Garza close up. These three are litter brothers, being all by Alton out of good old Judith, and they are a credit to her. Pratt's Belle won in challenge bitches without opposition; she was shown a trifle thin. Lord Melton, second at Detroit last week, was placed first on this occasion, with Patrician, a nice-headed young dog a little wanting in bluntness of muzzle, second. Clovis, third, has a very beautiful head, but he is small. Lord Keeper, fourth, is weak in muzzle and wants more brow and stop. Illinois Pontiff, reserve, has a bad muzzle and is weak at his pasterns. With the placing of these dogs there is no fault to be found, but it was absolutely wicked to disgrace the grand headed St. Augustine with a highly commended card. In head and expression, type, size, massiveness and straightness of bone he smothers his class, and he should have been an easy first or nowhere. Judith's Rachel, a large, grand bodied bitch with a good head, was an easy first. She is an almost entirely white bitch and her peculiar head markings rather conceal the grandeur of her head and expression. Marie Stuart is good in body and bone, but she is too straight in profile and long in face. Princess Rosa, third, lacks shadings and is a bit strong in head. Lady Keeper II, fourth, a white with orange markings, has a good body and very fair head, which, however, lacks markings. Sabah, reserve, has a plain head, and Polly M, V.H.C., is small and weak in muzzle. Sir Nero W, the winning dog puppy, has a plain muzzle and weak underjaw; and Pharaoh, V.H.C., is poor in color and plain. The winning bitch puppy is a moderate one. In the novice class for smooth dogs and bitches Judith's Rachel was an easy first, Marie Stuart second, Clovis third, and Lord Keeper reserve. Rustic Beauty won the silver cup for the best bitch, but I thought La Princess should have won, as she is a larger bitch that her mother and scores immensely in body, loin and hindquarters and is a better mover, although both are good in this respect.

[illegible] Muss-Arnolt, judge.) Major [illegible] challenge dogs and looked [illegible] he was a trifle lame. Osceola [illegible], won in head, neck, type [illegible]lly in body. Beau Brummel, second, was the winner at Detroit; he scores immensely in body but loses in head, also in straightness of bone and in action, to the winner. Leo Woldemar, third, a dark brindle, is good in type of head and size, but is very faulty in hocks and a bad mover. King Willam, fourth, has a plain head, but he is a very sound dog with excellent legs and feet, a good stern, and is a very nice mover. Fritz, reserve, is flat-ribbed and light in quarters. Tiger is bad in pastern and feet, also flat-ribbed. Osceola Neverzell, although showing the result of age and maternity, was an easy winner in open bitches, her head, eye and expression being absolutely faultless, while she still retains her beautifully arched neck and clean shoulders. Victoria, second, is a big harlequin standing on good legs and feet, but I did not care for her head and she certainly lacks character and expression. Ella, third, is rather short in head and is low to the ground, but her back, body, set-on and carriage of stern and action are all good. Lady Spot, fourth, is a fine big bitch with a nice head and neck but she is light in bone and her feet are not of the best. Madge, reserve, I thought should have been higher up; she is a trifle full in lip, but has a good type of head, good neck, shoulders, legs and feet and grand body. These were a grand lot of bitches and very well handled. There was a big class of puppies which ought to have been divided by sex. The ring was altogether too small to get the dogs moved, and consequently there were one or two slight errors made which were very excusable. Osceola Dey, the winner, is a golden brindle with a nice head and neck, a good body, nicely carried stern and very useful legs and feet. Osceola Bey, second, is a light fawn colored dog with a coarse head but grand bone, body and hindquarters. Equal second was given to an undersized little bitch who can never be anything but a weed. The best bitch in the class was Esther; she has a head of the right type, a beautiful clean neck, good body, legs and feet and a good stern. If she had been placed second no harm would have been done. Lady Spot was a very easy winner in the novice class, the others being plain and coarse.

NEWFOUNDLANDS.—(John Davidson, judge.) Here Sir Edwin Landseer, the Detroit winner, was an easy first. Fuido, second, and Flora, third, are very poor specimens.

BORZOIS.—(John Davidson, judge.) These were precisely the same entries as at Detroit and were placed the same, with the exception that Trojan was placed over Czar; the latter the better in head and outline, but had lost flesh and was on this occasion in very poor condition.

DEERHOUNDS.—(John Davidson, judge.) There were no entries in the challenge class. In open dogs Strebor had no difficulty in winning from Rob, who loses in head and size. In open bitches Ghost won from Bertha; a close decision, but correct. Madge, third, and Lassie, reserve, are too small.

GREYHOUNDS.—(John Davidson, judge.) Gem of the Season was alone in the challenge dog class. In that for bitches Champion Southern Beauty won rightly, scoring immensely in chest, loin and hindquarters. Between Bestwood Daisy, reserve, and Wild Rose it was a near thing; the latter's good legs and feet and substance might have won her the empty honors. Southern Rhymes, the big black and white dog, had no trouble in winning from Spring o' the Valley, and the latter was rather uncomfortably pressed by Robert the Devil, a very racy looking black dog. Fear Naught, reserve, is coarse but well formed and built for speed and bottom. Dallas, V.H.C., is rather coarse in head and might be better behind. Southern Fury was absent. Southern Gay Girl won in open bitches, but she is leggy. Idlewild, second, is a useful looking bitch; but Pansy, third, is a very poor one and might well have given way to Chips, whose head, neck and shoulders are very good but she is very soft and lacking in muscle on quarters.

SPANIELS.—(A. Laidlaw, judge.) Dark Despair and Raven were absent in the class for open black dogs, and Endcliffe Ebony won very easily from a very moderate specimen in Major, transferred from the cocker class. In bitches Spracklin's Belle won, with Dorothy, short of coat, second and Nellie Ray, a very poor one, third. Nonpareil won without opposition in the any-other-color class; he is the black and tan puppy that was second at Detroit.

In challenge cocker dogs Champion Black Duke did not compete, which left a walkover for Pickpania. Red Roland had no competition in the challenge class for dogs and bitches of any other color. In open dogs (black) Governor, wrong in head but good in body, bone, legs and feet and coat, was placed first; second prize going to Woodland Clipper, shown in beautiful condition but faulty behind. Adam came third, and were he shown in full bloom he would take some beating, as his body, legs and feet are very good. Woodland Princess won in the bitch class, with Woodland Topsey second; the latter is a bit snipy, a trifle long in body and high on the leg. Third prize went to St. Lawrence Novel, and St. Lawrence Princess was very highly commended. The former was hardly in her best trim but is a very useful bitch. Rosalind, reserve, might be better in head and her coat is too wavy. In open dogs (red or liver) Red Jocko II, a very promising puppy, light red in color with a very nice head and good eye, won, with Red Robin II, not right in head and too high behind, second. Red Justice, third, was at Detroit; wrong in head and front legs. Red Beauty won in the corresponding bitch class, closely pressed by Mrs. Bow Wow, described last week. Queen Bess is toyish in head but was easily in front of Governess, a big liver-colored one that must have been very close to if not actually over weight. Tonita won easily in the class for dogs and bitches of any other color. She was looking much better in her coat than she did last week. Woodland Bessie, the liver and tan bitch that was second at New York, came next; rather plain in head and long in body, but she must have been very closely pressed by St. Lawrence Beauty, whose good body and excellent legs and feet made it a question whether she should not have been second. Brantford Snap, reserve, is toyish in head. In the puppy class Miss Mae rightly won; with Queen Bess second. Yellow Jack and Bell Boy were absent.

Major G, the winning Clumber, is a good specimen, massive in body and bone and good in coat and color, and had he a little better head would be a hard one to beat. Second prize was withheld, and third awarded to Sir Joe, transferred from the any-other-color cocker class; but even this prize should have been withheld, as the recipient has no claims whatever to be called a Clumber.

In Irish water spaniels Patsy B's size and character could not be denied, although he was not in good coat and what he had was faded in color. Irish, second, is short and weak in head; in other respects a very typical dog, excelling in coat, topknot and color. Musha, third, is a nice dog good in color. Willy Reilly, reserve, is woolly in coat. Durward, H.C., has a bad expression and is out of coat. Bridget O'Donohue, the winning bitch, is a gem; good all over and one of the best seen in a long time. Nora O'Donohue is good in type, but shows age and is blind of one eye. Kitty of Cork, third, was entirely out of coat.

COLLIES.—(J. A. Long, judge.) There was a big entry of collies, which must have been very complimentary to the judge. In challenge dogs Sefton Hero had no trouble in winning from Roslyn Wilkes, beating him in head, carriage of ear, size, and legs and feet. The little dog was looking very well, and this remark applies to all the dogs shown by this formidable kennel. Charlton Phyllis was all alone in the challenge bitch class; a large handsome collie, which will persist in getting one ear up. Poor Rufford Ormond was brought out again in the same helplessly lame condition as at New York; it is a sin and a shame to cart this noble dog around to shows in his present condition when absolute rest is so necessary for his recovery. It is also a question whether, good dog as he is, he has a right to win in his present condition. Temporary lameness does not disqualify, but permanent lameness does. He was lame at New York and is lame now, three weeks afterward, and there is no telling whether he is permanently lame or not. At any rate the dictates of humanity should prevail. "The merciful man is merciful to his beast." Would it not be much better to place him in temporary retirement, than to risk his usefulness and value by exhibiting him when suffering and disabled? Rufford Ormond won. Gold Dust, out of coat and only a shadow of his former self, was placed second, and Cragston Douglas third. This was altogether wrong. Both should have given place to Woodmansterne Trefoil and Woodlawn Trefoil. The former was shown in grand condition and should have been an easy second, with his son third. Gold Dust is beaten in size, coat, head, ear and carrige of stern by both of these dogs, and Douglas is beaten by them in head and expression. Hempstead Chief is worthy of notice in any company, but he was entirely overlooked. Cragston Amazement is a grand headed puppy with perfect ear carriage and grand legs and feet, body and coat; he was also unnoticed. Cragston Wallace, a trifle short in head but good in coat and ear, was turned out without a mention. Grey Steel, also unmentioned, is a big, well made dog with a very fair head, nice ears, and a very serviceable jacket. Either one of these is worth a whole streetful of such dogs as Corrielaw, highly commended. Chesterford Hero, highly commended, is much too small. Christopher Columbus, reserve, is a pretty little dog but was simply outclassed by the dogs that were unnoticed. Lady Gay, winner in open bitches, is a very nice little bitch with a good coat and nice ears but weak in face. Cragston Blue Ruin, second, is prick-eared and should have given way to Sunset, third, who beats her in head, size and ear carriage. Flora May's good head and perfect ears should have placed her third. Lady Fidget should have been fourth, and Blossom, whose head and ears are very good, should also have been in front of the second prize winner. To pass over Ormskirk Susie without a notice and to give a reserve card to the prick-eared Minuet is a farce on judging which should not be allowed to pass without the severest condemnation. In puppy dogs Cragston Donald, a good coated sable and white, won, with Cragston Douglas second and Christopher Columbus reserve. Cragston Amazement was again unnoticed; and so was Ellesmere, a good black and tan dog with a very nice head and ear, a good coat, and the best of legs and feet. Selden Wallace, V.H.C., has too low carriage of ear, and so has Rob Roy V. The bitch puppy winners were in the open class and were all from Cragston. Rufford Ormond won in novice dogs, with Cragston Donald second and Cragston Douglas third. Lady Gay was in the pride of place in novice bitches, with Cragston Blue Ruin second and Minuet third. Cragston Dulcet got the reserve card; and Ormskirk Susie, who had been unnoticed in the same company in the open bitch class, now has three letters tacked onto her number. It is quite possible, at this rate of progression, had there been a few more classes to wade through, she might have been placed at the top of the heap. Altogether the judging was unique in its incomprehensibility.

POODLES.—(John Davidson, judge.) Ponce de Leon, the winner, is a nice dog of good type and won rightly from Lais; both rather short in cord. Nero, third, was in his wrong class; he is a curly coated dog, a poor specimen, with some white on chest and a long coarse stern. Prince, who won in curlies, has a good close coat. Black Jack Jr, second, is a bit long in body, but has a nice coat. Dahomey, third, is close in curl, but rather short and heavy in skull. Theo won in bitches; a nice stylish animal with a good coat and shown well. The same owner's Princess and Topsy got second prize and reserve; the former a bit short in head; the latter is a nice stylish bitch rather short of coat at present. Queen Zip, third, has a light eye, her head is a trifle thick, and she is not chiseled out enough in front of the eye.

In the class for dogs and bitches (any other color than black) Lou Lou, a very nice white, was alone and was awarded first.

DALMATIANS.—(John Davidson, judge.) Jack, the winner in the class for dogs is much the best in markings. The spots on a Dalmatian should be round, well defined, and not run into each other. Sport, second, has a half-marked face and is not clean enough in markings. Kelly C, third, is badly marked. The winning bitch, Fanny, is rather small and weak in muzzle, but was the best in markings. Edith, second, and Spot, third, are black dogs with white markings instead of being white dogs with distinct round black spots.

BULLDOGS.—(E. A. Woodward, judge.) There was a small but very select collection of these on exhibition, all but one coming from the well-known Woodlawn Park Kennels. In challenge dogs Wal Hampton had no opponent and, looking very well, was awarded the blue ribbon. Graven Image had evidently frightened off Duchess of Parma, for the latter did not put in an appearance, leaving the white bitch a walkover. King Orry, looking in great shape, was all alone in heavyweight dogs. He attracted great attention, so much, in fact, that it was impossible to get through the crowd of admirers that eagerly pressed to his stall in the afternoons and evenings; but the King took it all in good part and displayed the utmost indifference and good nature. Hucknell Gipsy won very easily in heavy bitches from Sally Brass II. Miss Mischief was absent. Nuggett, with his well-wrinkled head and short face, was alone in lightweight dogs; as was Juno II who won in the corresponding class for bitches, Princess Venn being absent.

BULL TERRIERS.—(Wm. Mariner, judge.) Cardona, looking very fit and well, won without opposition in challenge dogs, and Attraction won rightly from Lady Dinah in the class for bitches, from which Vesper Bell was absent. Open heavyweight dogs had Bellerby King in front. He has fair bull terrier expression and a nice skull, but his eye is too light; he is very shallow in body, lacks substance all over, and carries a very gay stern Prince Gully, second, has a fair head but he is not sound in front. Chautauqua Clyde, third, has a very good body and stern and was shown in excellent condition; his failings are a rather short head and he might be stronger in front of the eye. Lord Roseberry, V.H.C., is wrong in head, eye and expression and is light in bone. Dutch Billy, H.C., has a long head which is a bit thick in skull, and he has been very badly cropped; he is grand in front of the eye and has one of the best bodies imaginable, well ribbed, strong loined and very muscular quarters; his stern is good, and his bone, legs and feet leave nothing to be desired. When put down in good shape (and he can be very much improved) he will be an eye-opener. Duke of Rochester, Greenhill Nunthorpe and Aspiration were absent. Flower of the Valley, the winning bitch, was put down in excellent shape; she is a little fine in muzzle and light in bone, but neat and catchy in appearance. Queen Lilly, second is a very nice one with an extra long, clean head and very good in front of the eye; her body, stern, bone and legs and feet will bear the most critical inspection, but she is slightly full in eye, and, like her brother in the preceding class, suffers from a bad crop. Edgewood Trilby, H.C., should have been third. She is a very promising youngster, good in head, eye, expression and bone; her body wants making up and furnishing, but for a May puppy she is a very forward one. Burston Kit, third, is long in body and full in eye. Countess of Dufferin, reserve, always did lack bull terrier expression and character. White Queen and White Gypsey were absent. Edgewood Matchless, the marked bitch, won very easily in her class. Lorna Doone, second, has a very nice head and muzzle but is a trifle large in eye and rather long in body. Chautauqua Nellie, third, is wide in front and has a poor stern. Emulation shows age; and Sweet Marie, a rather nice puppy, wants time. The puppy class awards might have been altered had Beverley Boy's stern been in its natural condition, but a most barefaced and clumsy attempt at improving that part of his anatomy caused him to be thrown out, and Edgewood Trilby was placed first and Sweet Marie second. The winners in the novice class have been already described.

BOSTON TERRIERS. - (John Davidson, judge.) Jem Mace, shown in very nice condition, won in the heavyweight dog class, and barring his stern and a rather full eye he is a good one. Roger, second, is a bit leggy and coarse in stern. Countess was alone in heavyweight bitches. In lightweight dogs Commissioner II won with the greatest ease, and had he a better stern (the one he has is by no means a bad one) he would be very difficult to beat. Sandy, second, is too long in stern and a trifle leggy. Hector, third, is very coarse in stern, pinched in muzzle, and badly undershot. Topsy repeated her New York success in lightweight bitches. Peggy, second, has rather large natural ears which are not well carried and she was not in good flesh. Ruth, third, I was unable to find in her stall. Reuben won in novice dogs; a white faced one with a natural ear, coarse in stern and leggy. Second went to Roger, already described, and third to Sandy.

DACHSHUNDE.—(J. Wedekind, judge.) Mr. Wm. Loeffler's Hundesport Bergmann was alone in the challenge class, but he has thickened in head and is now almost too large. Puck, the open dog class winner, has a very good head of the correct type, but he might be a trifle longer in body and he knuckles over badly in front. Nips, second, is a black and tan too big, and I preferred Reinecke's Pick, V.H.C, to him, as Pick shows much more quality and is a better size. Role Krage, Sandy and Diamond Joe are sound dogs but all are larger than they should be. Bergrath Reinecke was transferred to the miscellaneous class. Why? In the open bitch class Hexe Von Venlo and Polly were given equal firsts. The latter is too large, but her head is good and her ears nice in size and carriage. Hexe Arstadt, V.H.C., is a good liver and tan colored one with a good head, lengthy body, and the proper size. Kutschka II Reinecke is a very sweet little red bitch and should do some winning if that horrid name does not prove fatal to her. Red Tatzi was not for competition in this class: a very nice puppy which won all before it in the puppy class. Dreadnaught is a nice puppy, but is pig-jawed.

FOX TERRIERS.—(Jas. Mortimer, judge.) Warren Safeguard and Warren Captious accounted for the challenge classes, but Safeguard is putting on flesh and acted very sluggishly in the ring. Warren Daybreak won in open dogs, looking a bit light and tucked up, but his better style and front placed him well in front of Warren Tip Top, second, and Warren Salesman, third. Hillside Royal has very much improved, and with the exception that he will turn his feet out is a very fair terrier; he was fourth. Hillside Domo, reserve, retains his nice head and good front. Raby Rival and Raby Truefit, V.H.C., were described last week. Audubon Stipend, V.H.C., was shown too fat and has gone coarse in neck. Raby Domino was dead lame. Brixton Plunger, H.C., is too big and wide in front. Streak of Luck, V.H.C., is a trifle strong in head but has nice ears, good bone, capital legs and feet and a very fair coat. Culmination has a very bad coat. Export, H.C., looked light in middle piece; a nice headed terrier with some style. The Pink'un is pretty, but has no coat and is light in bone. Richmond Victory, Cawthorpe Gem and Richmond Pearl were placed in the order named in the open bitch class, and Warren Dorothy was fourth. These were all at Detroit and have been fully described. Bit of Fortune, reserve, has a nice head and ears and good bone and front, but softish coat. Judgment's Reward is too well furnished to grow; she wants to lengthen out a bit in neck and is soft in coat. In dog puppies Warren Daybreak won, with Raby Truefit second, Streak of Luck getting the reserve card. The rest of the class were not distinguished by any particular merit. Seldon Sweetness won in puppy bitches, and when matured should be a nice one; her head and expression are good, but she is light in body at present. Bit of Fortune, second, has already been described, and so has Judgment's Reward. Wawaset Luna, reserve, would not get her ears right or she might have been second. Warren Cautious was absent. Warren Daybreak first, and Warren Salesman second, was the order in novice dogs, with Wawaset Baron, a sturdy, good boned dog by Holster, third. Hillside Domo again got the reserve card. Raby Truefit, Black Rock and Streak of Luck each got three letters, and Export and The Pink'un were highly commended. Richmond Victory, Cawthorpe Gem and Warren Dorothy were first, second and third in novice bitches, and Seacroft Mystery, a bit strong in head and cheeky, got the reserve card.

In wirehaired dogs Endcliffe Brisk won, with Mister Great Snap second, and Brittle Beaut reserve. Yale Tramp, V.H.C., had a sore neck, which prevented him from showing to advantage. Compton Vindex, H.C., has gone very thick in head; and Joe, fair in head and of good texture of coat, was ungroomed and very wide in front. Roath Rennie was the only entry in the bitch class and was awarded the blue ribbon. Messrs. L & W. Rutherfurd won the special for best exhibit, and Warren Daybreak won the specials for best smooth dog in the open class, best under two years, and best dog puppy. The Garfield Park Club's silver cup was won by Richmond Victory; and the Chicago Fox Terrier Cup, offered by Messrs. Spaulding & Co. for the best dog never having won a prize and owned and exhibited by a resident of Cook County, was won by Mr. E. O. Williams' Export. It is but fair to say that in making this award on the second day of the show I reversed a decision made by me on the first day. On the first day of judging I gave the Chesterford Park Kennels' Black Rock V.H.C. and Export H.C. in the novice dog class. Then the latter looked light waisted and a bit long in loin. Spratts' Food, or some other agent, had worked wonders in twenty-four hours, for when the dogs came before me on the second day Export looked well-fed and had lost the tucked up, light-waisted appearance of the first day, and his better outline and style just managed to beat Black Rock for the cup IRISH TERRIERS.—(John Davidson, judge.) In challenge dogs Jackanapes was absent, and Jack Briggs was once more placed over Merle Grady. Dunmurry was alone in challenge bitches and looked extremely well. Briggs' Best was alone in open dogs. In open bitches first prize was rightly won by Gessela III, a nice-headed bitch with good neck and style, but out of coat. Briggs' Breeze was second, but she is very small and weak in head. Kate Carney, third, was shown too fat; she is wide in front but has a fair coat and some character. Briggs' Best won in the puppy and novice classes.

SCOTTISH TERRIERS.—(John Davidson, judge.) The Colored Preacher had no difficulty in winning from the soft-coated Kiltib, who lacks terrier character. In bitches Bessie rightly won, as Glenshea was in bad coat.

BLACK AND TAN TERRIERS.—(John Davidson, judge.) Broomfield Sultan had no competitor in the challenge dog class. In the one for bitches Queen III was placed over Gypsy Girl, shown very high in flesh. Both are nice terriers. I like Gypsy Girl's head best, and Queen III is going gray and losing her teeth, but she wins in color of tan and on this occasion was the best in outline, and she scores somewhat in bone, legs and feet. Rochelle Rush won in open dogs, scoring a bit in head and body, but Chicago Spider, third, is far and away the best in color and markings and in style, and should have won. Play Boy, second, is coarse and not distinct enough in markings. Prince, reserve, is a mongrel, and should have been unnoticed. In open bitches Gipsey Queen won, closely pressed by Rosette, a big one shown too fat but in beautiful coat and very nice in color. Canada Queen, third, is a bit short in head and looked to be in whelp, and there was little to choose between her and Chicago Maiden for the place.

BEDLINGTON TERRIERS.—(John Davidson, judge.) Had only one entry; and Dandie Dinmonts one in each class, the best of which was Lothian Judy.

SKYE TERRIERS.—(John Davidson, judge.) Sir Thomas won in challenge dogs; but both he and Barnaby Rudge are quite large enough. Elphinstone got the reserve card. In challenge bitches Queen of Skyes beat Endcliffe Maggie a little in shortness of leg and length of body. Both are very good ones. There were no entries in open dogs, and Princess May, Belle Stafford and Jenne of Dean were placed in the order written in open bitches; the latter is toyish and soft in coat. It may be well to draw attention to the fact that out of eight entries five were in the challenge classes, which shows the folly of making two challenge classes for a breed which are so few in number that the open classes do not fill.

YORKSHIRE TERRIERS.—(T. F. Rackham, judge.) Minnie York won in the challenge class, shown in good coat and condition. Nothing in the open dog class was good enough to stop the winning career of Bradford Rejected. Damfino, second, was in good coat and is nice in color, but was too fat. Fishpool Gem, third, has lost his brilliant coloring and looked faded in body color and tan. Charlie, reserve, is only fair in color. Prince Harry is smutty about the head. Jeff was absent. In open bitches Pinkie York won; a nice little one, not quite even in body color. Judy York, second, is too long in body but has a nice coat. Nina, third, has a nice coat, but is very deficient in color. Venus, reserve, has good coat and color, but she is too large.

TOY TERRIERS.—(T. F. Rackham, judge.) Rasmus was overweight. In the smooth division first prize was withheld and second awarded to Chowder, who is apple-headed and faulty in tan. The Colonel was absent. In bitches second was awarded to Goldie, a very diminutive little red bitch, third to Sadie Belle, a black and tan, and reserve to Fanny. Lotta, a very nice black and tan with a good head, was overweight.

PUGS.—(T. F. Rackham.) Old Drummer, despite his crooked leg, won well in challenge dogs from Duke Howard, a nice bodied, stylish little dog but losing wrinkle and muzzle to the old dog. Attr... very poor condition and should not hav... Haughty Madge was alone in the chall... weaker sex. In open dogs Young Penr... were placed first and second, as at l... Dong, third, is a grand skulled dog ... and a beautiful eye; he is not quite a... he might be and is rather tucked up l... but he has a good coat and color and a nice tail. Patsy Bolivar, reserve—or fourth, as it should be—was very closely pressed by Finsbury Duke, who has the better coat and style, but he is a little deficient in skull and in front of the eye. Bobbie Mac, V.H.C., is a nice little dog, very short and compact in body and standing on good legs and feet, but a little weak in head. Drummer Lad, C., has a capital skull, eye and wrinkle, but he is a bit up faced and coarse. Banker and General Seminole are wrong in skull. Medler has gone very gray and was unnoticed. Hooker was properly placed first in open bitches. Mint, second, is faulty in carriage of ear, a bit long faced, and shows age. Queen Zitka, third, is good in body and short in face. La Belle Senora, V.H.C., is a nice pug but was in poor condition as to coat. Princess Madge, reserve, is rather long in face but her muzzle is very deep and square, grand skull, very well wrinkled and beautiful body, bone and color, but she could not be induced to show. In the puppy class Queen Madge was rightly first, and General Seminole second; but had Princess Madge shown herself she must have won easily, for seeing her after the judging at exercise with her kennel companions she made a very good appearance, carrying a very nice, tight tail and is very stylish all over. In novices Finsbury Dong won easily, with Cashier's Daughter second and Royal Teddy third.

TOY SPANIELS.—(T. F. Rackham, judge.) We have been accustomed to see a good display of these popular pets at this show, but this year they were conspicuous by their absence. Miss Ruby was the only one with any pretensions to show form, and she won first in the Blenheim bitch class.

ITALIAN GREYHOUNDS.—(T. F. Rackham, judge.) Champion Spring again won from his kennel mate, Sprite, in the challenge class. In open dogs Adonis won from Prince; and Dixie Tinnie II was the only entry in open bitches. As the winners are old circuit rounders a description is unnecessary, but it might be said with truth that they are all good ones.

Two classes were made for Barbet or toy poodles, which brought out one entry in each class, judged by Mr. Davidson.

MISCELLANEOUS.—(John Davidson, judge.) Frank, a Welsh terrier, was first, an Eskimo dog second, and a rough-coated dachshund reserve.

JAS. MORTIMER.

CRUFT'S DOG SHOW, LONDON, ENG.

(By our Special Commissioner.)

Mr. Cruft's eleventh show was held in the Agricultural Hall on February 13, 14 and 15 and proved a most successful one, although many of the statements published in England respecting it must be taken cum grano salis. The lay press gave the number of dogs as 2,800 and the doggy journals put it as "about 2,000." About 1,500 is nearer the mark. The actual number of dogs entered for competition was 1,674, but a great many were kept at home because of the weather, which had been unusually cold for three weeks before the show. There was an auction in connection with the show, and 75 dogs entered for this alone were included in the benching numbers, which started with 201 and finished with 3,061, the final figure being due to the fact that numbers were "skipped" systematically between classes all the way through the catalog. There are, however, more than 1,000 duplicate entries, with 100 braces and about 50 teams, so that the actual entry, that is the total number of entry fees, would be about 3,000, or double the number of dogs. For so big a show the quality was but moderate, and it would therefore be but a waste of time to discuss the awards in detail, although a few remarks on the various breeds will doubtless be acceptable.

Bloodhounds had an entry of 14, judged by Mr. J. F. Smith, but the quality was by no means representative.

St. Bernards naturally fell to the same gentleman; there were 78 roughs and 24 smooths in the various classes, which contained nothing sensational.

Great Danes had a total of 46, judged by Mr. F. G. Arbuthnot. The number includes several owned in Germany, but none of these got into the money.

Newfoundlands were, as usual, good, the total of 62 including many of the best specimens of the day.

Mastiffs were also good and were well judged by Mr. Norman Higgs. The actual number was 28, but as most of these were entered in two or more classes there was a good muster in each case.

Borzois numbered 21, judged by Mr. A. Latz, but the classes contained nothing new.

Deerhounds had an entry of 17, and Irish wolfhounds of 9; both breeds being apparently on a down grade.

Otterhounds had an entry of 13, representing three well-known packs.

Chow-Chows had the unusual entry of 29 and made one of the features of the show.

The entry of 36 foreign dogs included many notable specimens, among which may be mentioned two African bush dogs, a Persian gazelle hound, and several Lapps.

Greyhounds had an entry of 11 in five classes, but the competition was by no means keen.

Pointers with seven classes had a total of 23. I don't know whether Mr. F. C. Lowe agrees with Mr. Arkwright that the modern pointer as seen on the bench is unfit for work, but I think it possible. Anyway, Devonshire men are highly indignant at the suggestion that hound blood is at the bottom of the trouble, and none of them came to Cruft's. Mr. Arkwright showed several pointers that took the best of the prizes; also some pictures that were more interesting than the dogs.

English setters had a total of 9; not by any means a gaudy lot.

Black and tans, for some inexplicable reason, were classed as English setters and only 2 were entered; but there were 2 more in a puppy class for any variety.

Irish setters had a total of 14, headed by Champion Drenagh, who was entered as "date of birth unknown;" an error which would at one time have led to disqualification.

Retrievers had an excellent entry—40 in all—but the judge, George Helliwell, got them mixed a bit.

Spaniels were but moderate, although no judge could be more popular than Mr. S. S. Cowell, the club secretary.

Four water spaniels were entered, but only 1 put in an appearance.

Clumbers had an entry of 18, but several stayed at home, and the quality present was very moderate. Sussex were better in quality but only had 11 in three classes. Blacks had only 8 in three classes.

Cockers made the best classes of the lot, 18 being benched and the quality being good. The American-bred Chesterton Guess was entered as "breeder unknown," an error which should be corrected; she was second in the open class, beaten by Lily Obo, the best cocker in England. The variety classes had a total of 22, quality being better than usual in these classes, which are generally occupied by the wastrels from black and Sussex kennels.

Beagles had only 9 entries, but the quality was good.

Basset hounds had a total of 24, including roughs from the kennel of M. Puissant of Merbe les Chateau, Belgium, who simply swept the decks.

Dachshunde had classes for roughs and dapples as well as for smooths and secured a total of 37, but quality was not high.

Collies had a total of 123, and, as many were entered in several classes, the competition was keen throughout. One class, novice dogs, had 43 entries and was one of the best ever seen. But there was neither a Charlemagne, a Squire, or a Maney Trefoil on view. Smooths were of good quality but small in numbers—only five in two classes. Bobtails were good, 47 in six classes, which included all the best specimens of the day.

Poodles were neither so good nor so numerous as is usual here; only 23 in five classes.

Dalmatians had a total of 32 in five classes, quality being well represented.

Bulldogs numbered 68, the first on the benches being Found It, owned by Miss Byrne of New York; he was alone in the winners' class and so scored a first, but in the open class he was beaten by Monkey Brand and Don Salano.

Bull terriers had a total of 27 in six classes. After the judging the owners and others met to discuss the proper carriage of natural ears.

Airedales had a total of 29 in six classes, most of the best specimens being benched. Old English terriers are evidently on the downgrade, three classes securing only 3 three entries, of which two were absent.

Fox terriers (smooth) had a total of 113 in eleven classes, and as many were entered in several classes, the ring was full all the time. Mr. S J. Stephens judged and took a great deal of pains with his classes, which were but moderate in quality. The Acton Produce Stakes provided by the judge and competed for annually at Cruft's proved a costly "frost;" two classes with eight prizes amounting to $100 cash and no entry fee only secured five entries. Wirehairs mustered 42 in nine classes, the quality being higher than in smooths. These were judged by Mr. Astley, who also took Irish terriers, with a total of 48, and managed to please everybody with his awards.

Welch terriers mustered 19, the interest in this breed having apparently slackened since the "English" terriers went out of the fray.

Scottish terriers had a total of 30, the classes being below par both in numbers and quality. Skyes also were moderate, having only 14 in five classes, and not a really good one among them.

Clydesdales seldom have classes in England, but 6 good specimens put in an appearance here; and Dandie Dinmonts were a good lot as times go, 42 putting in an appearance, and the quality being first rate.

Bedlingtons had a total of 11, most of them of a high quality, and black and tans had a total of 29, the large entry being doubtless due to the fact that Colonel Dean, whose invincible kennel usually scoops the pool, was judging here.

Schipperkes had a total of 37 to face an imported judge, M. F. de Medeleer, who showed his appreciation of the compliment by withholding all the first prizes, which was no joke for the exhibitors as there were seven classes.

Whippets had a total of 12, judged by Mr. J. A. Tatham. White English terriers had a total of 5 in three classes; and Pomeranians had a total of 65, showing a full maintenance of the favor extended to them about four years ago, when the Specialty club was established.

Pugs had a total of 61, including 12 blacks, a very surprising entry, as there are very few good specimens in England small enough to please the judge, Mr. W. L. Sheffield.

Toy spaniels had excellent classes, making a total of 71 in all, the number including 16 Japs.

Yorkshires mustered 17; Italian greyhounds 7; black and tan toys 19; Maltese 10; and these, with a variety class of 9, brought us to the end of the competitors, the rest being entered simply for sale.

THE RELATIONS BETWEEN THE AMERICAN AND CANADIAN KENNEL CLUBS

TORONTO, CAN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I was both pained and very much surprised upon reading in the AMERICAN FIELD the account of the annual meeting of the American Kennel Club to find that Dr. Foote was so very antagonistic to Canadian Kennel Club. Now I was under the impression that the Doctor had always been fairly treated every time he had visited or exhibited any of his dogs at Canadian shows, and I am at a loss to understand why he of all others should be so very much opposed to a recognition of wins between the clubs, more particularly as many of the wins that have qualified his dogs for the challenge classes have been made on Canadian soil.

In regard to the agreement presented by the Canadian Kennel Club to the American Kennel Club at their last meeting, I consider it a very fair one, as members of both clubs recognize the necessity of some kind of an agreement between the American Kennel Club and the Canadian Kennel Club about disqualifications. Take, for instance, a party disqualified by the Canadian Kennel Club; he can at present attend and spread himself to the height of his ambition at all shows held in the United States and laugh at the action of the Canadian Kennel Club. The same can also be done with the American Kennel Club.

The first agreement made between the Canadian Kennel Club and the American Kennel Club, in 1889, was a mutual recognition of disqualifications, wins and registrations. This worked very well until Mr. Vredenburgh, secretary of the American Kennel Club, in bringing in his reports at the annual meetings always referred to and complained of the very large amount of money lost to the American Kennel Club through Canadian dogs not being compelled to be registered with the American Kennel Club. This loss was to a very large extent purely imaginary, as a very large majority of the Canadian dogs would not under any circumstances have been registered with the American Kennel Club. To prove what I say, previous to the organization of the Canadian Kennel Club, the proportion of Canadian dogs registered with the American Kennel Club was very small compared with what were owned in Canada.

Now, from what I can see, a great deal of the trouble seems to be a matter of dollars and cents. How much money would the American Kennel Club make in a year from registrations of Canadian dogs? How many owners of dogs in Canada do, or would, register with the American Kennel Club outside of those who are in the habit of exhibiting at the shows? I would venture to say that it would not amount to $10 a year; so in reality, the American Kennel Club is fighting the Canadian Kennel Club for the paltry sum of $10.

Dr. Foote, in his remarks, states that he considers that the relations of both clubs are in about th[illegible] as they were three years ago, admitting [illegible] the more necessity for the matter to [illegible] any further delay. The agreement of [illegible] mutual recognition of wins and dis[illegible] compulsory registration of all dogs [illegible] Now the last clause was where the [illegible] in, as a very large portion of the mem[illegible] the C. K. C. are not breeders or exhibitors and do not care particularly about having a stud book or anything of the kind, yet consider it necessary to have something in the shape of a record kept in Canada wherein they can have entered or registered their dogs at a small fee, and not be compelled to send outside of the country for any little information they may require. Consequently when the matter came up at the annual meeting of the C. K. C. last September the executive committee, which had referred it to the club to be ratified, found considerable opposition, and it was just about voted down.

In regards to the last proposition, which is about the same as the previous one but in a little different form and with a few alterations and is one that should suit all parties, the A. K. C. will receive just as many registrations from Canada as it would if the agreement of 1894 had been accepted, as all parties from Canada exhibiting at shows held under A. K. C. rules are compelled to list or register their dogs, and upon making a win must register if they have not already. By these means the A. K. C. will receive the cost of the publication in the stud book, while on the other hand the members of the C. K C. will be satisfied, as it leaves them a book of record in Canada. The A. K. C. receives the greater advantage, as the C. K. C. will have to recognize a much larger portion of wins and disqualifications than the A. K C. will have to.

Now, in conclusion I may state—and I think I voice the opinions of others of the executive of the C. K. C. when I say that we have done everything that could be done to bring about a satisfactory agreement between both clubs whereby they could work in harmony and stand shoulder to shoulder to advance the cause both are interested in, and to try and avoid any unpleasantness between members in each country—that our last proposition is final. We want both wins and disqualifications recognized; not one, but both. It affects members of both clubs, and if we cannot have that we will act under Dr. Cryer's advice and "run our own show" and the A. K. C. can do the same; but I will guarantee that it will not lessen the line between both countries.

I trust that this will be received by the members of the American Kennel Club in the same spirit that I write it.

C. A. STONE.

ORGANIZATION OF THE CONTINENTAL FIELD TRIAL CLUB

A number of gentlemen met in the exhibitors' room at the Mascoutah Kennel Club's show on Wednesday evening at 8 p. m., March 6, for the purpose of forming a new field trial club. The meeting was called to order by Mr. P. T. Madison, who stated the object of it.

On motion of Mr. Madison, Mr. F. H Perry of Des Moines, Ia., was called to preside. He made a few pleasant remarks saying he felt honored by being called to the chair, being a breeder of Irish setters; he also added a few remarks presenting what he understood would be some of the principal objects of the new club.

Mr. Madison was requested to act as secretary of the meeting, when he read a list of sixty-four gentlemen who were to constitute the charter members of the club, and they were so elected. The following list was read, and in addition telegrams announced seven more: H. Hulman Jr., Chas. G. Stoddard, J. M. Freeman, H. K. Devereaux, Prof. E. H. Osthaus, Louis McGrew, Dr. N. Rowe, Thos. G. Davey, B. Waters, Richard V. Fox, Chas. Heath, Harry Dutton, P. T. Madison, Capt. E. S. Gay, Maj. J. M. Taylor, W. W. Peabody Jr., Maj. John B. Downing, John S. Clark, J. C. Freeman, R. L. Shannon, Geo. J. Gould, Geo. T. Baker, Chas. D. O'Connell, J. S. Anderson, George H. Hill, A. G. Spalding & Bros., Edward A. Burdette, John L. Barker, J. I. Case Jr., H. R. Edwards, Dr. J R. Daniels, W. H. Ehrmann, F. H. Perry, A. M. Young, Chas. I. Engel, Dr. George Gladden, J. Shelley Hudson, Davis Bryson, Dr. L. C. Sauveur, J. L. Adams, Joseph H. Hunter, C. A. Pratt, Gus Pabst, P. Lorillard Jr., E. Huidekoper, Geo. H. Ewing, W. H. Beazell, Jas. Mortimer, G. Muss-Arnolt, W. H. Colcord, J. E. Isgrigg, Montgomery Ward, A. Cramer, Frank F. Bock, Henry F. Bechman, J. Treadwell Richards, J. L. Balmer, E. O. Damon, Dr. F. S. Danatelle, W. B. Wells, Daniel E. Stirn, J. R. Oughton, L. Rausch and F. F. Merrill. Several names are withheld from publication by request, making the total number 72 names.

Mr. Pratt of Little Rock, Ark., proposed that the Chair appoint a committee of three to nominate officers of the club for the ensuing year. The Chair named Mr. C. A. Pratt, Mr. Davis Bryson and Mr. Bock, who retired for a few moments when they brought in the following list: For president, Dr. N. Rowe; first vice-president, George J. Gould, New York; second vice-president, Capt. E. S. Gay, Atlanta, Ga.; third vice-president, Chas. G. Stoddard, Dayton, O.; secretary-treasurer, P. T. Madison. On motion, the Chair was directed to cast the unanimous vote for the ticket selected.

The constitution and by-laws, as prepared, were then read, and after one or two minor amendments they were adopted. The officers of the club were made the advisory committee of the club.

It was decided to hold trials on prairie chickens in the Northwest, beginning the first Monday in September, and later trials on quails, the time and place to be decided by the advisory committee. The following stakes were adopted for the trials on prairie chickens: Derby and all-age stakes, pointers and setters running together in each, the prize money to be $350 for each, divided as follows: $125 for first prize, $100 for second, $75 for third, $50 for fourth; entrance fee for the Derby $10, and $5 forfeits, and $5 additional to start, and for th[illegible] $10 forfeit, $10 additional to start; entries for [illegible] to close May 15, second forfeit to be paid by Ju[illegible] the all-age stakes entries will close August 1, [illegible] ment of $10; the last payment in both stakes [illegible] the night before starting.

The purses in the trials on quails will be as f[illegible]

[illegible] for a pointer Derby, a setter Derby, pointer [illegible] and setter all-age stakes; first $150, sec[illegible], fourth $75, fifth $50. Entries for [illegible] 1, with $10 forfeit, $10 second for[illegible] 1, $10 additional to start. For [illegible] pointers and setters that have [illegible]es at any recognized field trial [illegible] November 1, $10 forfeit, $20 additional to start.

Mr. Perry leaving the chair, Mr. J. L. Adams was called to take his place.

Mr. Barker made the motion that the advisory committee be requested to open a champion stake if they deemed it advisable. After this selling and amateur stakes were proposed, but the stakes mentioned were the only ones adopted. The salary of the secretary-treasurer was fixed at $250 for each trial held.

The name adopted for the club was "The Continental Field Trial Club."

Decided advances have been made in the constitution, by-laws and the running rules adopted by the club, which will be published as soon as arranged and printed.

UNITED STATES FIELD TRIAL CLUB'S MEETING

CHICAGO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The board of governors of the United States Field Trial Club met in called session at Battery D, Mascoutah Kennel Club's dog show, Wednesday afternoon, March 6, Mr. J. L. Adams of Louisville acting as chairman of the board. Mr. John Barker of Racine, Wis., a member of the club, was invited to meet with the board of governors, a majority of the board being present in person or by proxy.

The following gentlemen were proposed for membership in the club, all of whom were unanimously elected as members: Edward Dexter, Boston; G. Muss-Arnolt, New York; W. C. Ehrmann, New York; Montgomery Ward, Chicago; D. W. Stearn, Milwaukee, Wis.; A. T. Hetfield, North Judson, Ind.; J. E. Isgrigg, Chicago. Messrs. Arnolt, Ehrmann, Stearn and Isgrigg, being in attendance at the dog show, were invited by the board of governors to attend the meeting. There being a vacancy on the board of governors, caused by the resignation of Mr. P. T. Madison from the club, Mr. Edward Dexter of Boston was unanimously elected as a governor for the current year.

Moved and seconded that the AMERICAN FIELD be made the official organ of this club. Carried.

Moved and seconded, that as many of our club members are unable to attend any of the meetings of the club, or of its board of governors, the secretary be instructed to send a full report of each meeting of the club or of its board of governors to the AMERICAN FIELD for publication, that all members of the club may be able to know of all business transactions of the club. Carried.

Matters of general interest to the club were discussed.

Mr. Stearn, having just joined the club, asked the secretary for some information in regard to the number of recent resignations from the club, and also how many new members had been admitted to the club this year. The secretary stated that there had been received four resignations from the club up to date, that but one of them had been accepted, and that three of them were on the table for action. He also stated that there had been twenty-seven new members admitted within the last sixty days, and that there were several applications for membership to be presented.

Meeting adjourned.

W. B. STAFFORD, Secy.-Treas.

GREAT DANE TYPE

CHICAGO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Noticing Mr. Gustav Lang's letter on type of Great Danes it struck me that, in fact, many sins are committed under the above caption; there is nothing in Mr. Lang's letter to teach anything in regard to type; the "may" and "may not" are not worthy of such an acknowledged authority as Mr. Lang is. Mr. Lang indirectly indorses my statement in regard to Hannibal by his recent decision for best Great Dane of all classes or sex at the Berlin dog show, giving it to Holle II, a bitch of beautiful outline, very close to, if not below, standard height, and among almost two hundred Great Danes. It proves conclusively my oftrepeated demand that type and quality should stand above mere size and bulk. As I never have had a controversy with Mr. Lang I cousider his footnote gratuitous.

NOTES

IN the premium list for the New England Kennel Club's eleventh annual show at Boston bloodhounds are given pride of place, but the most striking feature is the unusually liberal treatment accorded Boston terriers in the classes, together with a good list of cash specials ($160 in all) for this breed. For mastiffs, St. Bernards, pointers, all setters, American foxhounds, collies, Boston terriers and smooth fox terriers the challenge classes prizes are $15, the open classes prizes $15, $10 and $5, and the puppy classes prizes $5 and $3; except that challenge classes are not required for Boston terriers. Foxhounds, pointers, English setters and Irish setters have each a field trial class, with prizes of $10 and $5; and Gordon setters have one with three prizes—$10, $5 and $3. For English foxhounds one open class is provided, the prizes being $15, $10 and $5. Bloodhounds, Great Danes, deerhounds, greyhounds, borzois, black cocker spaniels, beagles, bulldogs, bull, wirehaired fox, Scottish and Irish terriers are allowed $10 in the challenge classes, $10, $5 and $3 in the open classes, and $5 and $3 for the puppies. (No puppy classes for the Danes, mastiffs and cockers.) Chesapeakes, Newfoundlands, the spaniel varieties, dachshunde, basset hounds, poodles, Dandie Dinmont, Bedlington, black and tan, Skye and toy terriers, pugs, toy spaniels and Italian greyhounds find $10 in the challenge classes (when provided) and $10 and $5 in the open classes. The kennel prizes for St. Bernards, pointers, all setters, spaniels, collies and smooth fox terriers are $20; $15 for bloodhounds, mastiffs, Great Danes, deerhounds, greyhounds, borzois, English foxhounds, American foxhounds, beagles, bulldogs, bull terriers, Boston terriers, wirehaired fox terriers, Irish terriers and pugs; and $10 for poodles. In the matter of specials, the newly organized Bloodhound Club makes a start by offering two gold and two silver medals, while mastiffs, St. Bernards, spaniels and Boston terriers are liberally provided for; also the club's cups are offered for best dog or bitch (bred and owned by exhibitor) of each of twenty breeds. Three noticeable special prizes are the following: A silver challenge cup (value $100) to be won three times, offered by Mr. C. S. Hanks for the best kennel of borzois; the Manice Challenge Cup (value $250), $5 entry fee, to be won five times, for the best American-bred dachshund; and $100 offered by Mr. John E. Thayer, for the best fox terrier sired by Starden's King in 1894. Where no regular class is provided for recognized breeds, if five or more are entered a class will be made; also, exhibitors have the privilege of taking a cup instead of a money prize. The entry fee is $3 for all breeds and entries will close on March 30. It is announced that "provision has been made whereby police and secret service men will be in attendance at all times." Mr. D. E. Loveland is the club's secretary. The judges we announced last week. Additional specials will be announced later.

THE Duquesne Kennel Club has issued a fairly liberal premium list for an entry fee of $3. For mastiffs, St. Bernards, Great Danes, borzois, deerhounds, foxhounds, pointers, all setters, collies, poodles, bulldogs, bull terriers, smooth fox terriers, Irish terriers, black and tans and pugs the prizes in the open classes (deerhounds have only one open and one challenge class) are $10, $5, and $3. In the challenge classes allotments vary somewhat, mastiffs and St. Bernards getting $12 and $6; pointers, setters and collies, $12; Great Danes, $10 and $5; and the other breeds mentioned $10. In the St. Bernard puppy classes the prizes are $10 and $5 and (when provided) for the other breeds $5 and $3. Novice classes (when provided) are $5 and $3. There is no challenge class for poodles and black and tan terriers, nor for English foxhounds; though there is one for American foxhounds. By the way these latter are entitled "American shaggy foxhounds;" surely this does not mean that the classes for American foxhounds are confined to hounds of Mr. Whitlock's strain. The spaniel classification has been amended, so Mr. John Moorehead Jr. informs us, to conform with the American Spaniel Club's classification No. 2, separating the sexes. Greyhounds, spaniels, dachshunde, beagles, wire haired fox, Scottish and Skye terriers have $10 and $5 in the open classes; greyhounds having two challenge classes of $10, dachshunde, one of $10 and $5, and beagles one of $10. Yorkshire terriers have but one class (open) of $10 and $5. In the toy spaniel, Italian greyhound and miscellaneous classes the prizes are $5 and $3. For mastiffs, St. Bernards, borzois, pointers, English and Irish setters and collies the kennel prizes are $15; $10 for deerhounds, greyhounds, foxhounds, Gordon setters, poodles, bulldogs, bull terriers, beagles, fox terriers and pugs; and $5 for Irish and Scottish terriers. Many breeds have several specials offered for them, and since the premium list was issued the following have been added to the spaniel specials: The Whitehead Trophy, the Bell Cup, and three cash prizes of $5 each. Entries will close on April 1. The judges were announced last week. Mr. W. E. Littell is the secretary, and Mr. E. M. Oldham will superintend. This will be the club's third show, and it should be a good one.

AFTER spending four days at the great Chicago dog show, and listening to the howls of disappointed exhibitors, I cannot help saying a word in defense of the management and at the same time offer a suggestion for its consideration for the next year's exhibit. I think it is safe to say nearly every exhibitor believed he had the best dog or dogs and fails to see the justice of the judges' awards. No doubt errors were made, and in all reason such is to be expected. Exhibitors should not condemn the managers of the Mascoutah Kennel Club because they (the exhibitors) do not agree with the judges' opinions. The judging and awarding of prizes is entirely out of the managers' jurisdiction. The grooms and keepers employed were faithful and courteous to all. I now feel it is perfectly safe to send a dog for exhibition, and that he will be well attended, groomed, fed and watered, and amply exercised. All this was done to my pointer dog without the expectation of a good round tip. At the close I did the usual liberal act of all sportsmen, gave Brine Bow's chambermaid a substantial remembrance. I do know that most of our most of our sportsmen feel that it is money thrown away to enter their dogs in competition with kennels and breeders. Sportsmen well know that breeders must win. I am satisfied that if the Mascoutah Kennel Club will offer prizes or medals, or something a sportsman can show with pride, for the best single or brace owned by one man (barring kennels and breeders) it would bring out the fine field dogs of the country. I would like to compete with my fellow sportsmen with my brace, pointer and setter. I am sure the exhibit under such a plan would bring out from three to five hundred more dogs than ever before shown. It is not the money offered that our sportsmen want; it is simply a souvenir awarded by the Mascoutah Kennel Club that a sportsman can hang up and point to with pride. Such will be the direct means of encouraging every true sportsman to get rid of a common mongrel, and breeders and kennelmen will soon realize the fact that the best is none too good to supply their demands. Let kennels and breeders contend with each other and give the sportsmen a chance to laugh at each other.

Prairie du Chien, Wis. J. P. BARNUM.

MR. HUGH DALZIEL has favored us with Vol. V of his very useful "Fox Terrier Club Stud Book and Show Record," which we acknowledge with thanks. Each winner's pedigree is given, and with the aid of this book many a terrier's breeding can be traced back to remote generations. The publication of this book is now under the patronage and authority of the Fox Terrier Club, it having been decided at a committee meeting of the club, held in February of last year, that, in consequence of a widely expressed feeling that so useful a work should not be allowed to lapse, the club might very appropriately devote a sum toward keeping up this stud book; and the committee gladly availed themselves of Mr. Dalziel's services to continue, under the direction of the club, the work which he commenced on his own account some few years ago. Vol. V contains the Fox Terrier Club's rules and standard, a list of other fox terrier clubs and their secretaries, winners of cups and produce stakes, pedigrees and show records for 1892 and 1893. As Mr. Dalziel gave up thoughts of continuing the stud book after publishing Vol. IV, two years ago, there were twelve months during which he did not collect catalogs of shows This was unfortunate, for it seems that show secretaries did not respond with proper care and courtesy to his request for copies of catalogs of the shows held in the interim; and in his preface Mr. Dalziel remarks with emphasis: "Considering how much the Fox Terrier Club is doing in the interests of fox terriers and their owners, the conduct of such secretaries is contemptible." It is a neat, handy little volume, which must be of special value to fox terrier breeders in all parts of the world importing stock from England. Anyone wishing to obtain it can order it through the AMERICAN FIELD.

I HAVE lost all of my English setters from a disease that is new to me. It may have been distemper, but if it was it affected them differently from any case of distemper that I have ever known. While I have always regarded distemper as very fatal and difficult to control, yet I could occasionally assist a dog through it and nurse him until he would get well, but this disease was a "deadner" in every instance; not one got well, grown dogs as well as puppies suffering alike. I will try only briefly to describe the malady: For more than two weeks before they were attacked they began to lose flesh, yet they would seem hearty and were fed as usual. The first symptoms I noticed of sickness were frothing from the mouth and opening and closing the mouth as though trying to expel something lodged in it. The saliva dripping constantly from the mouth kept the forelegs wet, and in this condition they would frequently take food. As the disease progressed they would begin to have fits, then linger and suffer for some time and finally die. And the strangest part of it is that my neighbors' dogs have never been affected. Is it possible that my dogs were poisoned? I think not. Had they been they all would have been sick at the same time. If any brother sportsman has had such a complaint among his dogs I would like to know it, what he did for it and what the disease is. I neglected to say that in two cases only my dogs had a distemper discharge from nose and eyes. It certainly is very trying on a fellow after having gone through the trouble of training a lot of dogs to have them taken away so suddenly. Such is life.

Dallas, Tex. MUZZLELOADER.

AT a meeting of the Montreal (Can.) Kennel Association last week Dr. Wesley Mills presided. A large number of persons interested in the proceedings were present. The club has started out to kill the business of dog-stealers and to punish them when detected. The organization of an anti-dog-stealing club, with funds subscribed for prosecuting culprits, was left to the executive committee. The following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That the Montreal Kennel Association does not approve of the cropping of dogs' ears, and sympathizes with the movement in England and elsewhere to abolish the practice. As the amount of pain inflicted in docking a dog's tail with a sharp instrument, when a very young puppy, is insignificant, and the healing process very rapid, the association does not feel called upon to express a strong opinion against this practice on the ground o cruelty, though many of the members are against all such methods of so-called "improving" the appearance of the dog, believing that they are unsound in principle.

Resolved, That in order that persons in Montreal and vicinity who may desire to purchase pure-bred dogs may know who the reliable breeders of such dogs are; the officers and members of this association do furnish to those who may make such request the addresses of reliable persons in Montreal and other parts of Canada, who breed the different varieties of high-class dogs, more especially as we have reason to believe that stolen, indifferently bred and otherwise in erior animals are disposed of to purchasers in this city.

Resolved, That, inasmuch as a large number of lost, strayed or stolen dogs are never recovered, in spite of the efforts of their owners, the Montreal Kennel Association is of opinion that if all persons who come into possession of dogs that do not belong to them would at once report the details to the Central police department, those losing dogs doing the same, many more dogs would be recovered and a better state of public opinion on this question engendered.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the chief of police and that he be asked to kindly co[illegible]e[illegible]ate in this.

THE bench show to be held here in May under the auspices of the Pacific Kennel Club promises to be the best and have the largest number of entries of any show ever held on this coast. During the past two years a great many finely bred dogs have been added to the kennels owned here, and we have to-day as fine dogs as can be found in almost any part of the world. The St. Bernard class will be unusually strong as there are now about sixty of this breed owned on the coast. Pointers and setters are also strong in number and of the best breeding. Fox terriers and greyhounds will form a special feature and all the other classes will no doubt be well represented. The club has rented the Mechanics' Pavillon, which is the largest hall in the city, well lighted, good ventilation and centrally located. Mr. John Davidson will judge all classes, and the fancy here have unbounded confidence in the fairness of his decisions. D. J. Sinclair, who officiated at the last Oakland and San Francisco shows, has been appointed secretary and will open his office on April 1. Mr. Williams, who acted so efficiently as superintendent at last show, will again act in that capacity. There is considerable feeling on this coast against the "obnoxious five hundred dog rule," which we trust will be so modified as to permit a show on this coast having three hundred entries to confer championship honors.

San Francisco, Cal. M. H.

On my return from the Chicago show, I found John Armstrong had returned from North Cortend with my string of young dogs, and he sails for England on March 27, to visit the English trials. On his return he will handle Mr. George Gould's dogs at the different trials. I wish him success, for he deserves it. No new man coming to this country can show a better record; in one season he won the All-Age Stakes in the Manitoba trials with Brighton Tobe, also the International trials with the same dog, and he won second in the Derby with Faustina at the International trials—not a bad beginning in a new country, and reports show that his dogs are well broken. I expect to compete in all the leading events this year, and will give the boys warning at this early date to look out for Brighton Tobe puppies, for I expect to be in it. Time will tell.

London, Ont. T. G. Davey.

I have sold, through my advertisement in the American Field, the young rough dog Altonian, by Champion Melrose—Alta Berna, to Mr. W.W.Thompson, of Ogalalla, Neb. He was born June last, and is making up into a grand young dog Through the same advertisement I also sold to Mr. H.M. Jones, of Des Moines, Ia., a very fine young dog by Champion Melrose—Valkyrie,dam of Patrician, same age as Altonian. I think he will surely be heard from the first time he is shown. Also, Alton III, winner of first, Des Moines show, to Mr. Sutphen of Omaha. These sales, together with many puppies, all emphasize the good offices of the American Field to breeders. I think the interest in good dogs is surely growing throughout the West, and if Omaha will hold a show this Fall, that Western dogs will be well to the front.

Alma, Neb. A. C. Shallenberger.

Gold Dust, the imported collie that came over to America with a blare of trumpets, has been purchased from the Seminole Kenuels by Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan. Being asked if he meant going out of collies altogether, Dr. Sauveur replied in the negative and said he believed he had a real good one in his recent importation, Seminole Perfection, entered at the Chicago show, but absent. This dog is by Champion Southport Perfection (the sire of over one hundred winners, though not yet three years old, and perhaps the best known collie living), out of Parbold Linda, and was known as Southport Sequah in England, where there was some trouble over his ears; however, Dr. Sauveur says he has got a certificate from Mr. A. J. Sewell, the famous canine specialist in England, to the effect that the dog's ears are natural.

Another case of a dog being replevied turned up at the Chicago show last week. On Friday afternoon Constable Wm. Dorley appeared with a writ, seized Mr. E. B. Elliott's Irish setter dog Red Chief (V.H C. in the open class), put up a bond for $500 with the Mascoutah Kennel Club, and marched off with the dog. Red Chief is claimed by a Mr. John McCarthy, of Chicago, as his property, and it was on his behalf that the constable was acting. To the inexperienced, one Irish setter looks very much like another, and if Mr. O'Fallon could mistake Beaufort's Prince for his own half-bred animal it is easy to understand that Mr. McCarthy may be mistaken. However, the trial is set for Wednesday of this week, before Justice of the Peace Lyon.

Stop my advertisement in the American Field. I have sold all my dogs, but still every mail keeps bringing inquiries regarding my advertisement in the American Field. I could have sold a hundred dogs if I had had them. I received letters from New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Georgia, Kentucky, Florida, Montana, Missouri, Arkansas, Wyoming, Nebraska, Colorado, Michigan, Wisconsin, Alabama, Louisiana and Illinois. I had over one hundred letters in five weeks. This goes to show what a wide circulation the American Field has, and I think it pays to advertise in your very valuable paper.

Ottawa, Ill. J. Allison.

The residents of the Fairview section of Bloomfield Township, N.J., are aroused over the wholesale poisoning of valuable dogs which took place there March 6 and 7. Two handsome hunting dogs, the property of B. F. Baldwin, and a foxhound belonging to Mrs. George J. McDonald were killed, and poisoned meat was found near their bodies. These animals were all prize winners at the Waverly State Fair last Fall. Among others whose dogs were poisoned are Justice J. G. Post and Abel P. Campbell. Altogether eleven dogs were poisoned. The owners of the poisoned animals have called to their aid the services of a New York detective to ferret out the poisoner.

An item in the Chattanooga Times of March 4 says: "Saturday Mr. Perry Phipps completed a deal with Judge Graves, representing Fayette County, Kentucky, and sold that county two bloodhounds, the property of George Barnes, for $100. The successful agent in the sale was happy yesterday, with a consciousness of having made a commission of $50 'dead easy.' " It is good odds that the dogs are not bloodhounds at all, and this might afford Kentucky's only bloodhound breeder, Mr. Roger Williams, an opportunity to do some missionary work on behalf of the breed he has taken up with lately.

When Heather Lad won the American Field Challenge Cup at the New York show A. L. Orr, manager of the Dwight Kennels, deposited $100 with the Gordon Setter Club and took the cup away with him. It was on exhibition at Detroit, and now has a place in Mr. J. R. Oughton's home at Dwight. Referring once again to the death of Dwight Effie, which was mentioned last week, Mr. Orr has a well grounded belief that it was caused by broken glass being administered to the bitch by some malicious person or persons.

I am pleased to note that A. P. Fish, an old subscriber of the American Field, and the most prominent fancier and breeder of setters in this section of the state, and Mr. H. Brown, an experienced and practical trainer, are about to start the Glenwood Setter Kennels. I most sincerely hope their efforts will stimulate and develop new interest in this locality.

Binghamton, N. Y. Wm. Pister.

Mr. Geo. J. Gould's kennel manager, W. E. Warner, informs us that John Armstrong, who was with Mr. T. G. Davey last year, has been engaged to break and handle field dogs for Mr. Gould. "We are going to have a kennel of field trial dogs," said Warner; and he added significantly, "but it won't be a dumping ground for old 'have-been' champions."

Robert Armstrong, manager for Pierpont Morgan's Cragston Kennels, was detained in Chicago a few days after the show on account of sickness. All the dogs of the kennels were sent home except Rufford Ormond, first prize winner in open dog class, who was kept here, on account of lameness, to go on with Armstrong.

The value of well-placed advertising is exemplified by the entries for the Denver show, which is being held this week. The Western Kennel Club Company advertised in the American Field for six weeks, and information just to hand is to the effect that last year's entry of 163 has on the present occasion been increased to 265.

The Meadowmere Kennels have sold the black curly poodle dog Rip, also the bitch Domino, to a Philadelphia party, the price paid being $275 for the brace. In consequence Rip will not be exhibited at the Pittsburg show. They have also sold five puppies, by Fuzzy Nino, to residents of New York.

In your report of the Detroit show the comments on dachshunde do us an injustice, for our dog was not taken into the judging ring at all, John Davidson did not pass judgment on him, and, under the rules of the A. K. C. the dog was marked absent in consequence.

Black Lake, Que. Venlo Farm Kennels.

Mr. A. Montgomery, the well-known artist whose canvasses are familiar to every dog show habitué, received a commission during the Mascoutah Kennel Club's show from Mr. C. A. Pratt to paint a portrait of Sir Bedivere, and is now at Little Rock, Ark., engaged on the work.

Mr. Chas. E. Bunn of Peoria, Ill., informs us that he has sold his mastiff puppy, Hegira, by Marquis—Rowena, to the Mikado of Japan, the purchase being made by Royal Commissioner Zohaida. Hegira won first at the Chicago show last week.

A contributor to our English cotemporary, the Field tells of his St. Bernard bitch, Lady Millard, having cast, on February 9, a litter of twenty-one fine and well developed whelps, by a dog named Young York. Surely this is a record.

Mr. Edward Booth, who has not yet returned to England, has sold Kingstonian Guide, winner in the novice class at New York last month; and, in our business columns, he offers for sale the celebrated Duke of Lincoln.

Mr. John Buechner, who bred Dan o'Light, winner in the open class for English setters at the Chicago show, requests us to call attention to the fact that his name is not spelled "Bruchner," as it appeared in the catalog.

The Toronto Kennel Club's annual Spring show will be held on Thursday and Friday, April 25 and 26. Messrs. J. B. Thayer of Boston, Montague Smith o' Forest, Ont., and J. F. Kirk of Toronto have been engaged as judges.

In the Great Dane puppy class at the Chicago show were seven of one litter but different owners; they were an even looking lot, all blues, and were from a litter of fourteen by Governor out of Severs II.

LETTERS FROM ABROAD

BY Q. VAN HUMMELL, M. D.

I am sorry I cannot report experiences at several coursing meets, but the weather has put a stop to all coursing for the present in England. After a delightful voyage of six days on the Lucania we landed in good health and began to look about for coursers and greyhounds. I must not forget to mention the fact of having the pleasant company on the voyage and during a week in England of Harry Jarrett, of collie fame. He made the trip a very pleasant one for Viola; had her sleep in his stateroom and gave her ample walking exercise on deck every day, so that she landed in better condition, by two pounds, than when she left New York.

On Saturday, February 2, we started the [illegible]s to London, and Jarrett and I went to make the acquaintance of Jacob Garlock, the breeder of the celebrated [illegible] tick and present owner of Pelate Black, a very [illegible] fast greyhound and now one of the successful [illegible] dogs.

On Sunday Mr. Garlock took us to the country seat of Mr. A. R. Jones, to see his kennel of greyhounds. Here we found about twenty good ones in active preparation [illegible] condition of Mr. Maddox, head trainer. A[illegible] ch by Herschel, with hopes of Waterloo hon[illegible] particular fancy. Next came a light [illegible] Young Fullerton. But all trainers [illegible] so far met say that the Young [illegible] utterly useless—faint-hearted and soft. Your readers will no doubt remember that I predicted the same about the time Splnaway was sent over here to be bred to him. I have never yet seen a brainy, cunning greyhound produce anything worth rearing.

We returned to the hotel and started out to the Earl of Sefton's home. The Earl is the owner of the Altcar Plains, over which the Waterloo Cup is run every year, and for which ground I brought over four of our American black-tail jack-rabbits, two of which were presented to me by Mr. C. A. Robinson, of St. Louis, and the other two by Mr. Charles Payne, of Wichita, Kan. By the way, we were informed by the steamship authorities that these four were the only hares ever successfully landed; that others died on the voyage. Mr. Jarrett and I discovered the reason of their death the first day out of New York, hence our success in landing these four on the Altcar Plains, where they now are in an inclosure to remain until after the breeding season is over, when they will be liberated. I hope they will do well, so that the jolly English coursers can, in another season, compare their running with the English hare.

On Monday Mr. Jarrett went to Yorkshire to buy the stallion Wild Fire, the best producing hackney stallion in all England. He succeeded and Wild Fire is now on the Atlantic on his way to Mr. Mitchell Harrison's farm near Philadelphia. I went to Birkdale, Southport, where a coursing meet was to come off on Tuesday and Wednesday. The draw was completed, but the meet postponed until Friday and then declared off, owing to the severe weather. I went direct to the Blundell Arms Hotel to see the celebrated trainer, Mr. John Coke, and found him a congenial spirit, ready and willing to furnish any information in his power; and here Mr. Jarrett met me again on Tuesday, and we saw Herschel and his kennel mates, Greater Scot, Character (winner of the Waterloo in 1893), Restorer, Racecourse, Rhimes and Button Park—seven of the best greyhounds in the world.

Mr. Coke has some fifty good greyhounds in training, four of them candidates for Waterloo honors. These are Mr. Gladstone's puppy, Green Onion (by Greentick); the Hon Osbert Molyneux's Herschel bitch, Maid of Glenetive; Mr. Coke's Cloudy Night (by Herschel), unless a damaged toe interferes, when her brother, Camerino, will be asked to take her place. The rest in training are to run at the various meetings to come off in the near future. We saw the string take their exercise; saw them done up after their morning's outing, and also saw the feet prepared, and saw them fed. I also found here a litter of January puppies by Character out of a daughter of Greentick, and I selected what I consider the choice dog puppy of the litter to accompany me across the Atlantic and battle with distemper; and if he is sucessful then to do battle in the Derbys of 1896. There are but two dog puppies in this litter; and Mr. Gladstone gets the other.

Mr. Coke took me for a long trip into the country, to see some saplings he had out at walk. This is a great system for rearing puppies, and something which we Americans lack. Here the farmer's wife takes charge of a puppy, rears him with all the care she would give a child and gives him the best of food and a good bed in the house. We found Mr. Lighthall's Bonnie Belle in fine form and getting daily exercise, but not yet ready for service. She is in good hands. Restorer is getting all the best bitches sent to the Birkdale Kennels; his puppies are running well and he is much liked as a sire.

Mr. David Marshall, trainer for the past twenty-one years for the Scotch courser, Mr. Russell, arrived from Scotland with his string of seven for the Southport meeting and to continue his training for the Waterloo Cup.

I then came to London to spend a week, but will send the ladies to Paris; and I will return to Birkdale to watch these two noted trainers put the finishing touches on their Waterloo entries, having been invited to stop at Mr. Coke's house during the Waterloo meet, the Altcar Plains being about midway between Liverpool and Birkdale,

These trainers think the winner this year will come from either Mr. Fawcett's or Mr. Fletcher's kennels. But my experience in coursing is that it is the unexpected which always happens.

I have selected a bitch puppy that I think will do battle for me next Fall in some of our all-age stakes, and perhaps at Huron for the American Waterloo Cup. I have seen quite a number of young Herschels that would suit me; but some are not for sale, and for others the price is so high that if one would win all our stakes for two years to come it could not repay the purchase price. But defeat in the Waterloo may cool the ardor of some so that a really good dog can be bought at a reasonable price.

I must see some coursing if I have to stay all next Summer.

London, Eng.

ENTRIES FOR THE ALTCAR PRODUCE STAKES

We have received from Mr. T. W. Bartels, secretary of the Altcar Coursing Club, the following list of the sires and dams of the saplings entered in the Altcar Produce Stakes, with the number of representatives from each litter:

Boomerang—Pearl of Pekin.... 6	imp. Glenkirk—Imp. Nettlefield.... 4
Boomerang—Irish Lass..... 6	Imp. Glenkirk—Lady Dell Glendyne..... 2
Twister—Lady Emma 1	imp. Tralee—Miss Lottie. 7
Twister—Colorado Belle..... 1	imp. Babazoun—Bonnie Belle. 2
imp. Royal Crest—Imp. Drytime 1	Beaconsfield—Kentucky Belle. 1
imp. Royal Crest—Wasted Time 3	King Lear—imp. White Lips... 3
Imp. Miller's Rab—Imp Scandal..... 2	Lord McPherson—imp Belle of Eltham..... 1
imp. Lord Neversettle—Imp. Verdure Clad... 3	imp. Patrick—imp. Colleen.... 1
imp. Lord Neversettle—imp. Partera..... 4	Total..... 50
Van's [illegible] 1

[illegible] it may be seen that 13 stud dogs [illegible] represented. Seven of the stud [illegible]ch of the six others is by an imported sire out of an imported dam. Of the bitches nine are imported, and several of the remainder are by imported sires out of imported dams. The total number of entries (50) is very good.

The following is a list of the nominators: Mr. George Macdougall, Butte, Mont.; Mr. T. W. Bartels, Denver, Colo.; Mr. Chas. A. Robinson, St. Louis, Mo.; Dr. Q. Van Hummell, Indianapolis, Ind.; Mr. Chas. Barrow, Denver, Colo.; Mr. J. G. Massey, Rawlins, Wyo.; Mr. L. F. Bartels, Denver, Colo.; Mr. P. J. Donohue, Cripple Creek, Colo.; Mr. E. H. Shaw, Wallace, Neb.; Dr. J. M. Norman, Denver, Colo.; Mr. S. W. Vidler, Colorado Springs, Colo.; Mr. H. C. Lowe, Lawrence, Kan.; Mr. A. C. Lighthall, Denver, Colo ; Mr. J A. Parrott, Helper, Utah; Dr. F. R. Moore, Tribune, Kan.; Mr. John Egan, St. Louis, Mo.; Mr. J. Herbert Watson, Brooklyn; Mr. Michael Allen, Chicago; and Mr. M. F. Smith. Making in all nineteen nominators, representing no fewer than ten states and territories. Truly a capital showing; though it is to be regretted that California is not represented.

If Mr. Roger Williams is not very enthusiastic over the first volume of the stud book, he is, at any rate, indefatigable in his efforts to make it acceptable to coursing men. Being unable to obtain from club secretaries some information he desired he journeyed to Chicago last Friday and spent some hours on Saturday searching through the files of the AMERICAN FIELD for the past six or eight years. He thanked us for calling attention to the Aberdeen Coursing Club's action in regard to the proposed non-enforcement of Rule 8 at the meeting next month, and gave it as his opinion that the reason for the course taken by the club is an erroneous impression that a greyhound cannot be registered unless a pedigree of three generations can be furnished. If his surmise is correct the executive of the Aberdeen Coursing Club need not hesitate to enforce the rule as to registration, for a greyhound can be registered as "pedigree unknown" if no authentic information as to its breeding is obtainable.

MR. CHAS. H. SCOTT-DURBIN has returned from his trip to England without having witnessed the Waterloo Cup meeting, or any other coursing meeting, for that matter. He reports extremely cold weather during his visit and says coursing, fox-hunting, steeplechasing and many other outdoor sports were completely frozen out. Not reckoning on a postponement, he laid his plans to return shortly after the time originally set for the great meeting and when the postponement was announced found himself compelled by business matters to leave England without having enjoyed the treat he had been anticipating. He is looking uncommonly well and expressed his intention of attending the meetings in the Dakotas next month, at which he and Mr. Arthur Melrose very probably will run Gilkirk, their smart bitch puppy, that came within an ace of stopping Glenlyon's victorious career through the American Derby last October.

MR. A. P. SLOCUM has sent us a large poster telling all about the approaching meeting of the North Dakota Coursing Club at Oakes, N. D., on April 9 and following days, when will be run the North Dakota Stakes, for 32 greyhounds of all ages, at $5 each, with $100 generously added by the club. The following prize moneys are announced: To the winner $104; to the runner-up, $63; to next two dogs, $35.50 each; to next four dogs, $5.50 each; total $260. The meeting will be run under the rules of the American Coursing Board, the club being a member of the board. It was announced some time ago that W. Stephenson and W. R. Angell will judge and slip.

WE hear that there is a strong probability of the Pacific Coast coursing men appointing delegates to the American Coursing Board.

GREYHOUNDS are offered for sale this week by Mr. G. M cdougall, Butte, Mont., and Seacroft Kennels, Essex, Mass.

RIFLES FOR BIG GAME

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD: — I am sorry to learn that, according to Mr. Brokaw's opinion, Wapiti and I are so much at sea as to what constitutes the shocking power, or killing force, of rifle balls when used on big game. However, being anxious and willing to learn, I am glad to hear from one who so thoroughly understands the subject. I have not, however, been so much at a loss as to what shocking power is, or how best to combine the elements that go to produce it so as to get the best results. Briefly my idea is, that from experience had with the .45 90-300 cartridge—one containing say 70 grains of powder and 500 of lead—it would give a greater shocking power, or killing force, when fired from the same gun. I did not contemplate "raking shots" when I had made the 500-grain mold referred to in my article of January 5, though I do not doubt that it would possess great advantages where big horns were plentiful enough to be "caught and held by the tail."

Perhaps I attach too much importance to the weight of the ball, but is not Mr. Brokaw mistaken when he says, "And even were it a foot long and weighed a pound it would still possess no advantage over the 300-grain ball, provided its speed was not increased?" I had always thought that weight was as important a factor as velocity in measuring impact, jar, or shock; and of two bodies having the same velocity the heavier would produce the greater shock. If such is the case a 500-grain ball with a velocity of 1,180 feet per second would exert, as a matter of mathematical demonstration, a greater impact as measured in pounds than a 300 grain bullet traveling 1,480 feet per second. A blacksmith can strike a much quicker blow with a small hammer than with a large one, yet it would be hard to convince him that for that reason he could strike a heavier blow with a one-pound hammer than with a ten-pound sledge. If such were not the case a bologna sausage would be as deadly a weapon in the hands of the footpad as a sandbag. The weight is more important than the striking surface, however obtained.

The 500-grain ball will have a pentration of 18 units as compared with 13 in the 300-grain. This excess, if not a benefit, is at least not a fault. It will often happen that either of these balls will not pass out of the animal struck. In such a case every inch of penetration has its value. It is by this means that the rotary movement of the ball gets its purchase and is enabled to rend and tear. Where the excess of penetration is expended on the animal, the rotary movement will have just that much more material on which to work While the lighter ball rotates the quicker, a simple calculation in dynamics will show that it has not a more "powerful rotary movement." A calculation similar to that for finding the energy of a flywheel will show this.

When we consider striking surface, whether original or expanded by impact, we must remember that a purely flesh wound will rarely, if ever, cause instant death to a bear, and to reach the heart, spine or brain large quantities of bone must be met and overcome. To do this, the ball that gives the greatest penetration and the heaviest jar, as measured in pounds, will be found the most killing.

Wapiti and I may be "all at sea" about the .45-90-300, but inquiry will convince Mr. Brokaw that there are a good many others in the same boat, which no amount of theory can overturn when it is built from experience.

ARTHUR B. WITCHER.

NOTES

THERE is a hitch in perfecting the arrangements for the rifle match for $500 between Mr. Vandeusen of Winona, Minn., and Mr. Revell of Litchfield, Minn. The latter objects to the use of globe and peep sights, and to shooting the match on the sharpshooters' range at Winona, but wishes to shoot it at Lake City or Minneapolis. Mr. Vandeusen declines to shoot the match at either of the two last places, but says if Mr. Revell will come to Winona, he will agree to erect a new range in an open field after Mr. Revell reaches Winona. Mr. Vandeusen also refuses to yield the point on globe or peep sights.

THE South Brooklyn Sharpshooters, the Miller Rifle Club and the Rockaway Beach Schuetzen Corps were admitted to membership at a recent meeting of the National Schuetzenbund, whose first annual festival will be held at Koenig's Glendale Schuetzen park, June 30 to July 8. It is expected that all the prominent marksmen's organizations in the country will participate in the contests, for which valuable cash prizes and medals will be set apart.

MR. WILLIAM GLINDEMAN, a local rifle shot of San Francisco, Cal., on February 4, scored 238 points out of a possible 250, and out of a possible 1,250 scored 1,094. Previous to that time the best score out of 250 that had been made was 236, which had been made by several different parties, but Mr. Glindeman's score of 238 has never been equaled on the Pacific Coast.

MISS ANNIE OAKLEY, the lady rifle shot, who is now in Europe, presenting the play "Miss Rora," in which she takes the part of the heroine, is, if we are to judge by the many highly complimentary notices given her by the press, meeting with great success as an actress. She will return to America early in the Summer and again fill an engagement with the Wild West Show.

THE Greenville (N. J.) rifle team has issued a challenge to shoot a ten-man match with any team in Essex County, or to shoot every team in the county, the matches to be shot one after another as fast as teams send in their acceptances.

MR. A. J. VANDEUSEN, the great rifle shot of Winona, Minn , on March 3, at the sharpshooters' range near that city, beat his own previous record, scoring 237 points out of a possible 250.

MISS MAUD, daughter of Mayor Miller, of Youngstown, O., is an expert with the rifle, having recently scored 46 out of a possible 50.

SHOT FOR A SUPPER

The Shooting Stars, C. H. McChesney captain, and the Beaverwycks, F. E. Shedd captain, teams of the Columbia Rifle and Pistol Club, of Rochester, N. Y., shot a match for a supper on the evening of February 26, with the following results, the Stars winning by 21 points. The scores in detail were:

McBEAN—BRAUN

On Friday, March 8, the gentlemen whose names appear at the head of this article shot a rifle match at the North Shore Rifle Club's range under the following conditions: 100 shots off hand, ten targets per man, distance 75 feet, German ring target reduced, combination globe sights.

Mr. McBean used cartridges loaded with 4 grains of Leonard smokeless powder and did not clean his rifle during the match. Mr. Braun used U. M. C. cartridges. The scores made were as follows:

McBean..... .....239 234 235 233 237 232 244 237 241 238—2370
Braun..... .. 239 236 246 229 233 229 226 229 235 235—2327

At the regular club shoot on March 7, six members participating, scores as follows were made: Ph. Wagner 236, Bowers 231, Braun 239, Ekhof 223, A. Sandke 210, A. Waguer 226.

H. ARRENS, Secy.

CINCINNATI, O.—The following scores were made by members of the Cincinnati Rifle Association at their range, at the Four Mile House, Reading Road, on March 10. Conditions: 200 yards, off hand, Standard target. Messrs. Gindele, Hasenzahl, See and Weinheimer are using new barrels on their rifles, made by Zishaug, of Syracuse, N. Y. As to the merits of the barrels, further practice will be required; so far, they do well. The scores:

HANDICAPPING THE EXPERT TRAP SHOOTER

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I see that trap shooters are still discussing that same old question, "Handicapping experts." I hear more complaints here in the East about being already handicapped than I do about handicapping experts. The situation around Boston, as I see it, is this: The Shooting Association's grounds at Wellington are the only ones where the tournaments in Massachusetts are held, and they are the most popular in the United States. Five or six years ago a tournament on these grounds meant an attendance of from twenty-five to thirty shooters, and they shot in every event, too. To-day a tournament on these same grounds sees an attendance of from six to ten shooters in the forenoon (experts), and about six or eight amateurs in the afternoon, who will shoot in about one-half of the events, and one will often hear the following query propounded: Why do not the boys come out to the shoot?

Now I can tell them why a great many of the boys do not come out. Boys that can break from 75 per cent. to 80 per cent. of their birds (fairly thrown birds), boys that do not want such gentlemanly shooters as Messrs. Dickey, "Leroy," "Climax" and Herbert handicapped, boys that are willing to stand up and shoot and take their chances with the big Kicker from Kickerville, or the big man with the big mouth that tries to rattle the poorer shots, insist that fair birds shall be thrown, no matter how hard or how far; not one thrown just over the top of the screen and another towering in the air. That is where they handicap the amateur. When the amateur goes out for practice, the birds are not thrown that way.

If the Boston Shooting Association would cater more to the boys (all good fellows), and let the experts take care of themselves, it would be to the interest of the club and trap shooting around Boston.

ONE OF THE BOYS.

NOTES

DESPITE the fact that the Interstate Association's third annual Grand American Handicap will not occur until April 3, 4 and 5, there is already shown a widespread interest in the coming event by the many live bird shooters of America, both amateur and expert. It is now the one topic in a number of gun clubs, and the daily practice of their members attests the interest centered in this affair. It is confidently asserted that in point of entries and monetary returns to winners, it will not only equal, but eclipse the Interstate Association's great successes of 1893 and 1894. I am in daily receipt of requests from shooters for programs and information about the tournament, and when the scores for the Grand American Handicap and minor events at Willard Park are completed, the live bird contests of the Interstate Association will be classed as the greatest events of their character ever held on this continent. Distance, comfort and expediency have been consulted, and when availed of by the contestants will cause them to give the Interstate Association credit for the expertness they will show during the three days of this remarkable tournament. It is the solitary live bird shoot of the age in which the amateur can enter with a fearlessness kindred to that of the expert, as it has been the aim of the association to conserve the interests of both classes. Progress and purity are marked as well in the plans of the management, that no modern contrivance calculated to expedite the sport has been omitted, and no safeguard overlooked that would tend to the honesty and good of the sport. I would remind those shooters who contemplate making entry for the Grand American Handicap that regular entries close March 30, and must be sent to J. A. H. Dressel, secretary-treasurer, 313 Broadway, New York City, on or before that date.

ELMER E. SHANER.
Pittsburg, Pa. Manager Interstate Association.

IN the second match between Capt. J. L. Brewer and Chris Reinhardt, at Willard Park, Paterson, N. J., reported in these columns last week, Capt. Brewer killed his sixty-ninth bird with the first barrel, and, without removing the shell from the other barrel of his gun, walked back to his chair; and just as he was sitting down, "bang" went his gun, the load taking effect in the boards in front of him and making the splinters fly in all directions. We mention this fact to show the necessity for the greatest caution in handling a loaded gun. Had Capt. Brewer removed the loaded shell from his gun before leaving the score, as he should have done, or had the referee been more watchful and enforced the rule requiring the shells to be taken from the gun at the score, this would not have occurred. It is fortunate that no more harm than the splintering of the board was done, but the thought of what the result might have been—perhaps a human life snuffed out in the twinkling of an eye—is enough to chill one's blood, and enough also to cause all shooting park or tournament managers to post, in a conspicuous place on the grounds, the warning that "guns must not be loaded until the shooter goes to the score, and shells must be removed from the gun before a shooter leaves the score." And failure to observe this rule should subject the violater to a severe penalty. The excuse that "I did not think" will not repair a mangled limb or bring back to life one who has been suddenly killed by inexcusable, if not unpardonable, carelessness.

THE Emerald Gun Club of New York held its annual meeting on March 7, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, T. F. Russell; vice-president, Gus Nowak; second vice-president, Nicholas Maesel; financial secretary, John Woelfel; treasurer, J. H. Moore; recording secretary, H. P. Fessendeu. John H. Voss and Dr. G. V. Hudson were appointed to serve on the executive committee with the officers, ex officio. The committee which conducted the last shoot of the club, announced that a profit of $275 had accrued to the club, and that 8,975 targets had been used. The renewal of the club's membership in the New York State Association for the Protection of Fish and Game was ordered, and it was resolved that the club should hold one shoot during each month of the year, excepting July and December. The next shoot will be held on March 19, open only to members. The prize record of the club was read and the prizes awarded. The first prize, a gold badge set with diamonds and emeralds, was won by F. W. Place; second prize, a shotgun, was won by J. H. Moore; third prize, a gold badge, was won by R. Regan, and H. Thau received the fourth, a gold locket. The silver berry dish donated by Col. J. H. Voss was won by J. Woelfel; and a silk umbrella, presented by Dr. Hudson, was won by Col. Voss. Dr. S. P. Leveridge and L. H. Schortemeier were also given prizes donated by members.

AT a recent meeting of the sportsmen of Kansas City, Mo., to discuss matters pertaining to the Missouri State Sportsmen's Association's annual tournament to be held in that city from April 22 to 27, it was determined, so we are informed, to bar about fifteen of the professional shooters from the target shoots. This embargo will prohibit Brewer, Elliott, Carver, Fulford, Grimm, McMurchy, Budd, Heikes, Winston, Crosby, Ruble, Courtney, Skinner, Parmalee, Lindsley, Irwin and possibly a few others who make a business of traveling from tournament to tournament in the interests of gun or ammunition manufacturers. These men are not barred from the live bird shoots, however, with the exception of the Missouri championship events, and there will be open events at targets arranged for them if a sufficient number are in attendance. There will be no regular entrance fee in the regular target program, but the targets will be placed at five cents each and guaranteed purses ranging from $10 to $25 will be offered. In addition to the guaranteed cash purses there will be a large number of special prizes of considerable value offered by manufacturers and Kansas City merchants, and these extra inducements are expected to attract a large attendance.

I AM very much in favor of the proposition in the AMERICAN FIELD of March 2, from Mr. T. H. Cohron, of Pleasant Hill, Mo., and would like to see such a project carried out; but I do not agree with him when he says, "have it at some of the 'white' tournaments," for I do not think our boys are yet ready to go before the marksmen of the country and show their little skill. I think if there was a grand prize, as Mr. Cohron suggests, donated by some dealer in sporting goods, hung up, and the boys knew it, it would cause them more eagerly to enter the match; and I also think we ought to have a tournament of our own the balance of the day, for after this grand match, which would bring all the boys together, those that did not care to enter the live bird race would enter sweepstakes in target shooting, and we colored boys could have a grand and happy time.

Holden, Mo. L. J. S.

ON Monday last we were shown by Mr. Von Lengerke of Von Lengerke & Antoine, Chicago, one of the [illegible] hammerless shotguns that it has been our pleasure to [illegible] many a day. It was a Francotte that the above [illegible] order for Mr. Marvin Hughitt Jr. and is certainly a [illegible] two sets of barrels, one for field work and the other for [illegible] trap. The barrels are the Whitworth fluid steel, the stock [illegible] of walnut, and the finish and workmanship throughout—engraving, fitting and finish—as perfect and exact as one could possibly [illegible]. It handles beautifully, balances nicely, its ejector works to perfection and we are assured that it shoots as well as it looks. The [illegible] Mr Hughitt $650, and if he does not do good work with it [illegible] may not be the fault of the gun.

[illegible] at Monte Carlo since our last report have [illegible] those grounds, all the more prominent [illegible] consequently Mr. Fred Hoey, the American [illegible] Europe, has not taken part in the late Shooting [illegible] 21 to February 26 four events were shot, the most important of which was the Prix de Pallas Handicap of £40 added to a sweepstake of £2. The attendance also grows lighter as the events grow less in importanee, though we notice that on February 26 Count Trauttmansdorf was present and divided first prize with M. A. Poizat, the former's handicap—30½ yards—being 2½ yards greater than the next highest man. On this occasion the Count scored eleven without a miss. The weather was fine all the week until the 26th when the shooting was seriously interfered with by a heavy downpour of rain.

ARRANGEMENTS are progressing nicely for the Big Four Gun Club's tournament to be held here April 9, 10 and 11. Mr. Irwin will furnish the targets and look after the traps. Mr. Al Miller, of New Boston, Ill., will be field captain and have charge of the live pigeon matches. On the first day Tom A. Marshall and S. S. Hale will shoot at 100 live pigeons for $100. The second day will be a regular tournament, open to the world. The third day, April 11, Dr. Carver, champion live bird shot of the world, will shoot a match with S. S. Hale, 100 pigeons, for $100. These live bird matches are genuine and were made at Mr. Hale's request, and he shoots with his own money. Programs will be mailed about March 25.

Burlington, Ia. SECRETARY BIG FOUR GUN CLUB.

THE dates for the shooting tournament to be held in this city have not been definitely determined yet, but it will probably be held about May 16 and 17. It will be at targets the first day and at live birds the second day, and will be under the management of Messrs. Rogers and Sharpe. As stated in a former issue of the AMERICAN FIELD, it will be similar to the Knoxville shoot, except that it will be open only to the shooters of Nebraska, and it will cost $5 instead of $10 to enter. The entrance money must be sent to Geo. Rogers, care of Windsor Hotel, Lincoln, Neb., by all who wish to participate in the shoot, by May 10. All of the money will be divided in the different events in the two days.

Lincoln, Neb. FRED W. SPRAGUE.

THE Amateur Gun Club of this city is in a prosperous condition, several new members having recently enlisted in its ranks. After the business meeting on March 9, the merits of our nation's trap shooters were being discussed, when 'Squire Mudge, one of our old shooters, read from the AMERICAN FIELD the account of the last shooting contest between Dr. Carver and Mr. Chas. Budd, at Davenport, Ia., which was listened to attentively by the members of our club; and it was the unanimous verdict that Dr. Carver stands today without a living peer, the prince of all trap shooters. May he live long to uphold the American flag, and may his nerve never become unsteady nor his eye grow dim.

Edwardsville, Ill. RALPH RINGWOOD.

BY the consolidation of the West End and the Woonasquatucket trap and gun clubs, we have succeeded in organizing a new gun club with thirty charter members, to be known as the Rhode Island Trap-Shooting Association. Among our members we have some of the crack trap shooters of the state. It is intended to hold weekly shoots and to occasionally have sweepstakes and team shoots with clubs desirous of friendly contests for glory or marbles. The officers of the association are: President, A. L. Andrews; vice-president, Phillip Randell; secretary, J. F. Russell; treasurer, Wm. W. Mosher; captain, Saml. F. Wilson; directors, Wm. Plaisteed and E. C. Whitaker.

Olneyville, R. I. J. F. RUSSELL, Secy.

THE West Newburg Gun and Rifle Association held its annual meeting at Wood's Hotel, Newburg, N. Y., on March 5, when the following gentlemen were elected officers for the ensuing year: President, David Brown; vice-president, Harry C. Higginson; treasurer, John A. Wood; secretary, William C. Gibb; directors, Joseph A. Snead, E. Kissam and John J. E. Harrison; captain, George H. Taggart. The club is in a prosperous condition and its roll of membership contains 150 names. The pleasurable event of the evening was the presentation to "Uncle" John Latourette of a handsome oil painting, which was executed by Miss Victoria Harrison, daughter of the retiring president, John J. E. Harrison.

MR. CHAS. F. AYLING, on the afternoon of March 7, on the grounds of the Syracuse (N. Y.) Gun Club, shooting at inanimate targets, made the splendid score of fifty-six without a miss. This is the best score ever made on the grounds and one also that will not be equaled in many a day on the same grounds. It is unnecessary to say that Mr. Ayling is now regarded suspiciously by other Syracuse trap shots, for had he not exhausted his supply of target loads and had to depend on borrowed ammunition in his last seven shots, they can't guess just when he would have stopped grinding the targets to dust.

THE sportsmen of Athens and Sayre, Pa., and Waverly, N. Y., have organized the Diahoga Gun Club, and it promises to be an exceedingly vigorous shooting organization. The officers of the club are as follows: President, J. S. Hamaker; vice-president, William Heavner; secretary, J. Harlan Murrelle; treasurer, R. S. Hickey; captain, A. H. Nevins. The membership at present is about thirty. It is believed, however, that the number will be increased to nearly fifty as soon as all arrangements are completed for building the club house and getting down to regular practice.

THE AMERICAN FIELD had a very pleasant call on Saturday of last week from Mr. Henry S. Humphrey, of Indianapolis, Ind. Mr. Humphrey is the vice-president of the wide-awake North End Shooting Club of his city, and is a sportsman through and through, delighting in field shooting, trap shooting and a ride after the foxhounds. He is also an ardent admirer of the AMERICAN FIELD, from the reading of which for several years he has gained much of his knowledge of guns and dogs, and obtained a very correct idea of what constitutes a true sportsman.

ON April 24 and 25 the Southport Gun Club will open the target shooting season in the Hoosier State with a tournament at its park just south of Indianapolis. The tournament will be under the management of Messrs. Ch. Lockwood, A. Grube, T. A. Gentle, Jac Art, D. Smith, S. Todd and Ed. Hardesty. These sportsmen are well-known business men, and their names to a shooting event are an assurance of success, honest management and a delightful time. Programs will be issued soon.

Southport, Ind. W. M. G.

THE Little Rock (Ark.) Shooting Association will hold an all-day target shooting tournament on Tuesday, March 26. The program announces ten events, one of which will be a two-man team race at 25 singles per man, $5 entrance, five moneys. Lunch will be served to shooters gratis and no dropping for place will be recognized. Kickers will be permitted to air their views both before and after the shooting, but must hold their fire while the shoot is in progress.

THERE is a movement on foot here to organize a sportsmen's club and to hold weekly shoots at targets and live birds during the Winter. With such sportsmen as J. M. Aldrich, Chas. W Tway, Mr. W. Pruitt and Mr. Seabrook of Grand Junction, M. L. Brewer of Lamar, and W. F. McCarley, of Jackson, who have signified joining the club is sure of success. A meeting will be called at an early date to elect officers and arrange business matters.

Michigan City, Miss. TRAP SHOT.

THE Riverton Gun Club [illegible] Philadelphia has challenged the New [illegible] West, ten men to a team, 25 live birds [illegible] match" if preferred by the latter [illegible] has accepted the challenge and a [illegible] to perfect the details. One match [illegible] at Woodlawn Park and the clubs [illegible] for the third race.

THE long-anticipated return match between Mr. Edward J. Reynolds and Arthur J. Valentine, both of the Bergen Rod and Gun Club, was decided at the grounds of the club at Flatlands, Long Island, on March 6. Valentine won the first match by four birds but in the second race the tables were turned and Reynolds won the match by two birds. A third match between the two men is among the probabilities.

INCLOSED please find notice of my fourth annual tournament, which please insert in the "Trap Fixtures" in the AMERICAN FIELD. During the last week in March we have the best flight of ducks and geese, and as Central City is within one mile of the Platte River, I can guarantee sportsmen an A No. 1 time. Programs are ready for distribution.

REPORT reaches us that the Keystone Target Company, whose works at New London, Conn., were recently destroyed by fire, will not rebuild at New London, but that a new company, known as the Excelsior Keystone Manufacturing Co., with a capital stock of $100,000, has been organized, which will establish its works at Baltimore, Md., the site for the buildings having already been secured

OWING to unavoidable complications, the management has decided to postpone the live bird shoot announced for March 13 and 14, with $500 guaranteed, until March, 1896, when a grand national live bird shoot, with $2,500 cash guaranteed, will be held.

H. O. PRICE,
Hot Springs, Ark. Southern Club.

FRANK PARMELEE, the well-known trap shot of Omaha, Neb., recently made a match with Mr. J. J. Hardin that is a little out of the usual form as to conditions. Each man is to shoot at 100 live birds, Parmelee to stand at 24 yards rise and use one barrel only while Hardin stands at 30 yards rise and is allowed the use of both barrels.

MR ROSWELL C. ERTTER, recently, at Abbottstown, Pa., shot in a 10-bird sweep and then shot three individual matches, 25 live birds each match, and killed all of his birds but the last one, scoring 84 straight. He then shot at 15 birds more in order to make an even hundred and killed 14 of them, making a record of 98 out of 100.

AT the tournament of the Standard Gun Club, to be held at Point Bergen, Md., on April 8, the club offers a purse of $25 for the best team score, each team to be composed of five men, all residents of the same county in Maryland. No entrance will be charged in this contest, and no city team will be allowed to compete.

THERE will be a team shoot on April 6, at Greensboro, N. C., between a picked team from the University of North Carolina Gun Club and a picked team from the Greensboro Gun Club, each team to be composed of five men and each man to shoot at 50 Blue Rocks, known traps, unknown angles.

THE annual tournament of the Michigan State Trap Shooters' League for 1895 will be held at Battle Creek, Mich., on April 18 and 19. The annual meeting of the organization for the election of officers and the transaction of other league business will be held on the evening of April 18.

THE management of the Rockford (Ill.) Gun Club's tournament, to be held on March 26 and 27, has decided to have both live bird and inanimate target shooting, so as to please all who wish to attend, and give an opportunity for as much pleasure as possible.

SHOOTERS who wish to keep posted on the trap shooting events in this country—tournaments, individual matches or team contests—should read the AMERICAN FIELD. It is always up-to-date in this and all other matters of interest to sportsmen.

THE first annual tournament of the North Dakota State Sportsmen's Association will be held at Fargo, N. D., on June 13 and 14. The annual meeting of the association will be held on the evening of June 13.

THE Frankfort (Kan.) Gun Club has challenged the Leavenworth Gun Club to a team race for the state championship cup. The contest will take place on the grounds of the Leavenworth club on April 15.

THE Crystal Lake Gun Club of Champaign, Ill., will, this Spring, purchase three or four acres of ground near that city, erect a club house and fit the grounds up with every convenience for trap shooting.

THE De Kalb Gun Club was recently organized at Sycamore, Ill., with a membership of twenty-two. The club will hold practice shoots at inanimate targets every two weeks.

THE Egyptian Gun Club of South Pass, Ill., has been incorporated under the general laws of the state. The incorporators were George D. Rich, B. H. Lawrence and L. M. Lyndell.

THE Elizabeth (N. J.) Gun Club will hold a two days tournament, open to all, on April 23 and 24. First day at inanimate targets; second day at live birds.

BOILING SPRINGS GUN CLUB'S TOURNAMENT

The annual tournament of the Boiling Springs Gun Club commenced on March 5, on the club's grounds at Rutherford, N. J.; the attendance was moderate. A strong wind blew across the traps and the weather was cold. Fifteen events were brought to a conclusion. Empire targets were used and the shooting was from known traps, unknown angles. The scores are appended.

RIVERTON GUN CLUB'S HANDICAP SHOOT

One of the largest and most interesting handicap trap shooting events that have lately been seen in this country was begun at the Riverton Gun Club grounds, Riverton, N. J., on March 8, fifteen of the best shots in the East participating. Originally it was the intention to have the race decided in one day, but with fifteen men entered, two tying for first place at the finish and three others on equal terms for third and fourth moneys, it was impossible to finish the race on the first day.

The conditions of the handicap were 100 live birds per man, $100 entrance, handicap rise, four moneys.

With the exception of "Fred" Hoey, Edgar Murphy and L. T. Daveuport, nearly all the high-class men in the eastern section of the country were present. As the contest was worth $750 to the winner, $375 to second, $150 to third and $75 to fourth, every man entered did his level best to make the best score of his life. As a result the shooting was remarkably good, fully up to the standard of such hot company. This is borne out by the scores, as two men howled over 94 birds, three tied with 93 to their credit, two succeeded in killing 92, and two more killed 91. The latter would have been increased to at least five had not three of the contestants retired at the 90 stage, to permit their more likely rivals to finish the stipulated 100 before dark.

Throughout the proceedings excitement was at fever heat. T. S. "Mott," George Work and J. K. "Palmer" were equal favorites, while J. S. "Robbins," R. A. Welch and F. G. Moore had plenty of followers.

Those who shot from the 30 yard mark were George Work, R. D. Welch, C. "Echert," T. S. "Mott," and J. K. "Palmer;" F. G. Moore and F. "Leonard" were the 28-yard men; W. Dowuing, J. A. Post, J. Wolstencroft, J. S. "Robbins," Capt. A. W. Money, J. "Jones" and John "Baker" stood at 27 yards, while E. C. "Edward" was at 26 yards.

As it would have been impossible for the fifteen men to shoot more than fifty birds each at one set of the traps, the sweep was split up into two bunches, eight men shooting their first fifty birds at the old grounds and seven completing their first half at the River grounds. After this the scene was reversed.

When the sport commenced, a little before 10 a. m., there was not sufficient breeze to stir the flags, but as the day wore on the air became chilly and raw. This affected the birds, which were not as lively as they would have been under more pleasant conditions. The light, however, was bad.

Capt. Money, who has not been shooting at his accustomed gait of late, for the first time in many months was not on the limit mark. He, with T. S. "Mott" and J. "Jones," succeeded in killing 47 out of 50. In the first twenty-five the veteran would have had a clean score but for his ninth bird getting away from him. In the second twenty-five he experienced exasperating luck with his thirty-sixth bird, as, through the bungling of the dog, it managed to get out of bounds, only to die within a foot or two of the flags.

Of the seven who were shooting at the River grounds, F. G. Moore stopped all of his first twenty-five birds, nor did he let any get away until he reached his thirty-third. He then missed his thirty-eight and fiftieth and when he came to try conclusions at the old ground he headed his squad with 47 to his credit. E. C. Edward had killed 46, while George Work, who let no less than four birds in his second twenty-five escape him, had killed 45. The latter then gave a fine exhibition. Shooting with great judgment and coolness, he killed forty straight at the old grounds, and as he only missed his forty-first bird in the second fifty he wound up with a score of 94. This was only equaled by Capt. Money, who killed 47 birds at each set of traps. J. Jones, John Baker and J. A. Post tied for third and fourth money with 93 kills. The scores:

Messrs. Work and Money at once agreed to divide first and second moneys and shoot off for the cup—a beautiful silver trophy valued at $200—which was to go to the winner of the handicap, the following day. Messrs. Post, "Jones" and "Baker," who were tied for third and fourth moneys, divided.

At half past 10 o'clock the next morning, the time set for the shoot off between Messss. Money and Work, an almost blinding snowstorm and a strong wind was raging; but the men were both on hand and the ownership of the trophy was soon decided.

To everyone's surprise Work, although he caught an easy bird to start with, missed it clean with his second barrel, though the pigeon was on the ground.

Capt. Money then had a little hard luck, as just as everyone expected him to take the lead his bird, though hard hit, died outside of the boundary. From here on both men shot well, most of the birds being screaming right-quarterers. In the fifth round Capt. Money made a remarkable kill of a towering incoming right-quarterer, and followed it up in the ninth round by a beautiful second on a lightning right-quartering driver. He lost the match in the tenth round by misjudging another bird in the same direction. Work in the meantime killed straight, his best effort being a screaming driver with right-quartering inclinations in the sixth round, and won the trophy.

The rest of the day, despite the storm and wind, was devoted to sweepstake shooting, and here also Mr. Work did remarkably good shooting, dividing money in four out of six sweeps. Capt. Money also participated in the sweeps but was not so fortunate as Mr. Work.

THE ALEDO GUN CLUB'S TOURNAMENT

ALEDO, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Although a little late, nevertheless, with the hope that it will not be rejected, I mail you herewith the scores made at the recent three days' tournament held in this city under the management of the Aledo Gun Club.

The attendance was all that could be expected, owing to the weather. The morning of the first day the thermometer registered 23° below zero and did not get above 15° all day. The second day was blustering and stormy, and the third day was the coldest day experienced here for a number of years. But, notwithstanding the extremely cold and stormy weather, a keen interest was manifested in the shoot. The club had made preparations for cold weather and therefore there was but little complaint. W. "Tramp" Irwin, of Peoria, was here hustling things generally, while the following shooters were in attendance from one to three days: Gus. Walpert, Spring Bay, Ill.; W. C. Harding, Virginia, Ill.; S. Wells, Piper City, Ill.; J. A. Samuelson, Opheim, Ill.; R. White, Geneseo, Ill.; E. Deterline, Ott, Elliott and Cornell, Keithsburg, Ill.; Al. Miller and Dick Roberts, New Boston, Ill.; H. Thompson, C. Thompson and Strohune, Andalusia, Ill.; H. Adams, New Windsor, Ill.; Geo. Adams, Rube Pepper and Joe Cabeen, Seatou, Ill.; L. Allen, Little York, Ill.; and a number of local shooters.

The tournament was a success, considering the extreme cold weather, and all present expressed themselves well satisfied with the management. The club expects to hold another tournament some time next Fall, time not yet fixed. The scores:

THE NEW YORK COUNTY GUN CLUB

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Herewith find scores of the New York County Gun Club, shot at Rockaway Beach, Long Island, at the March contest.

The club was favored with a beautiful day, and although the attendance was light, about 1,200 Empire targets were thrown, the majority of the events being the hardest kind of shooting. The purses were divided according to the new "straight out" system, which certainly prevents dropping for place, as the individual so dropping finds himself with less money in a division than if he had honestly tried to score all he could. To explain: In the fourth event, with only four entries at one dollar, and the birds extra, it was agreed to divide it into two moneys. Messrs. Wash, Place and Schorty tied for first money with 7 each, and Mr. Edwards took second with 5½. According to the old manner of dividing the moneys—60 and 40 per cent.—the three who tied for first money would have received only eighty cents each, while Mr. Edwards would have taken $1.60. Under the "straight out" system the three who tied for first money received $1.08 each and the only one in second received 72 cents, the rest of the four dollar purse going to the club (four cents). This was arrived at in this way: The moneys were 60 and 40 per cent., or six-tenths and four-tenths of the purse, or a proportion of six to first and four to second. There being three in the tie for first money, we will arrive at a value by multiplying six by three, equaling eighteen points. There being but one second, and the proportional value being four, it remains at four. Adding eighteen and four makes the entire value of the purse twenty-two points. Divide the entire purse, four dollars, by twenty-two points, and it gives a value of eighteen cents for each point. The three ties for first money have a credit of six points each between them. Six times eighteen cents equals $1.08 for each. The second money is four times 18, equals 72 cents. Total $3.96, with four cents to go into club funds or be added to first money as preferred. If any one of the ties for first money had dropped into second place the proportion he would have been entitled to would be $1 instead of $1.08. Thus, six and four again, as before, for first and second: Two tie for first. Two times six equals twelve. One entry stands second. One time four equals 4. Total 16. Dividing the purse by sixteen equals twenty-five cents per point. Then the two ties for first would have received each six times twenty-five cents, or $1.50, and the dropper $1 (four times twenty-five cents). Under the old system, as stated heretofore, he would have received 40 per cent. of the $4, or $1.60. So the dropper does not drop. I know not to whom we are indebted for this most excellent method, but that individual deserves the thanks of all "straight out" trap shots. The scores:

MANHATTA.

THE ÆTNA ROD AND GUN CLUB

The old Ætna Rod and Gun Club, which several years ago enjoyed considerable distinction as a trap shooting organization, was reorganized on March 5, and the event was celebrated by a shoot at inanimate targets at New Dorp Grove, Staten Island. The shooting lasted until it was too dark to plainly distinguish a target. The scores made are given below:

EVENT No. 1.—Club competition, 10 clay birds each, handicap rises, scores to count in the yearly averages for the annual prizes: James H. Brownson, 23 yards, 8; Arthur J. Pratt, 25 yards, 7; Charles B. Purdy, 23 yards, 7; George H. Richards, 25 yards, 6; Richard V. Keenan, 23 yards, 6; George W. Morton, 25 yards, 5; Harry S. Armstrong, 25 yards, 5; James W. Gordou, 20 yards, 4; Daniel W. O'Keefe, 24 yards, 5; William H. Barnard, 23 yards, 4; Thomas V. Hunt, 23 yards, 3.

EVENT No 2.—Handicap sweepstakes, 10 live birds each, entrance $1 and cost of birds: James H. Brownson, 23 yards, 6; Arthur J. Pratt, 24 yards, 8; Charles D. Purdy, 25 yards, 25 yards, 9; George H. Richardsou, 23 yards, 6; Richard V. Keenan, 25 yards, 5; George W. Morton, 25 yards, 8; Harry S. Armstrong, 25 yards, 6; Thomas V. Hunt, 23 yards, 5.

EVENT No. 3.—Same conditions: James H. Brownson, 23 yards, 6; Arthur J. Pratt, 25 yards, 8; Charles B. Purdy, 23 yards, 6; George H. Richardson, 25 yards, 8; Richard V. Keenan, 25 yards, 6; George W. Morton, 25 yards, 7; Daniel W. O'Keefe, 23 yards, 6; William H. Barnard, 23 yards, 5; Thomas V. Hunt, 23 yards, 5.

EVENT No. 4.—Handicap sweepstakes, clay targets, miss and out: James K. Brownson, 23 yards, 3; Arthur J. Pratt, 25 yards, 5; Charles B. Purdy, 25 yards, 0; George H. Richardson, 23 yards, 2; Richard V. Keenan, 23 yards, 2; George W. Morton, 25 yards, 1; Daniel W. O'Keefe, 23 yards, 0; William H. Barnard, 23 yards, 3; Thomas V. Hunt, 23 yards, 4.

MATCHES BOOKED AT SEATTLE

SEATTLE, WASH.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—No less than four shooting matches will be decided here during the next three weeks. Three of these are at live birds and the fourth on targets. The latter, in which Joe Schlumpf and A. L. Hall, of the Hardy-Hall Arms Co., figure as the principals, is at 50 singles, known trap, unknown angle, for $25 a side, and will be shot here on March 10.

The three live bird races will be shot here on March 21. I have ordered seven hundred pigeons for the occasion and if everything can be carried out as intended it will, no doubt, prove the biggest shoot at live birds that we have had here. If I am successful in my endeavors to secure enough birds, one of the matches will be carried over to March 24, as three races in one day give enough time for sweepstake shooting. The match, "Jackson," of Tacoma, vs. A. K. Churchill, of birds each man, for $200 a side. Mr. Will Hardy Arms Co., referee; E. A. Kimball, trap puller.

W. A. Eberly, of Tacoma, vs. Capt. E. P. M pigeons to each man, for $75 a side. The puller as in the "Jackson"—Churchill race.

W. E. McKee vs. Noble Wallingford, 20 for $50 a side. Referee and trap puller not y

The contestants in these matches are all section as enthusiastic trap and field shots. No matter how the matches result, others will undoubtedly follow, as a friendly rivalry exists between the two cities, and neither one is at all inclined to acknowledge inferiority at the traps. Messrs. Eberly and A. "Jackson" are members of the Tacoma Rifle, Rod and Gun Club, and have for several years figured promiuently in shooting circles here. The latter recently defeated Mr. Churchill in a 25-bird race by the narrow margin of one bird, the scores standing 23 to 22. Mr. Churchill's defeat resulted in the coming match. Capt. Miner, W. E. McKee and Noble Wallingford are all active members of the Seattle Rod and Gun Club, and regular attendants at every shoot held here or in this vicinity.

A large delegation is expected to be present from Tacoma, and other Sound points will, very likely, be represented. American Shooting Association rules will govern the matches.

THE CLEVELAND GUN CLUB

The first shoot of the season of 1895 of the Cleveland (O.) Gun Club saw one of the largest gatherings of club members that has been seen at a club contest in that city for more than a year. In the club shoot for badges, each man shooting at 30 single targets, some good scores were made. Redwing and Packard shot from unknown traps, unknown angles, the other members shooting from known traps, unknown angles. First badge was won by White, second by Silsby, third by Redwing, fourth by Bodifield. The scores in detail were:

CANON CITY VS. FLORENCE

CANON CITY, COLO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Some time ago it was arranged to have a series of matches between the Cañon City Gun Club and the Florence Gun Club.

The first of these matches was shot at Floreuce on March 7, and, while the scores may not look high, they are good when the conditions are considered. The wind blew a perfect gale, causing the birds to pitch and dip, while the dust and sand were blown into the shooters' faces, almost blinding them at times.

Conditions of the match: Six men to each team, each man to shoot at 10 singles, 5 singles expert rules, and 5 pairs, making a total of 25 birds to each man.

The highest individual score was made by Mr. L. X. Kohlman. This gentleman having faced the traps but three times before, his score of 21 out of a possble 25, under the difficult conditions imposed, was certainly a very creditable one.

WELLS VS. LLOYD

PINE BLUFF, ARK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—A match at 50 live birds each for $50 a side, American Shooting Association rules to govern, was shot at Wiley Jones' park, this city, on Wednesday, March 6. The race was between Mr. J. E. Wells, of Jackson, Miss., formerly a Pine Bluff boy, and Mr. J. T. Lloyd, of this city.

The day was perfect, and the birds as fine a lot as were ever trapped, only two out of the one hundred having to be started after the trap was pulled. About 150 persons were in attendance, among whom were quite a number of ladies. Betting was indulged in at a lively rate, both before and during the shooting, by the friends of the principals. Mr. Wells shot more steadily than his opponent, leading him from one to four birds all through the race. Mr. Lloyd was clearly out of form, having been ill for several days previous to the match, but pluckily shot it out when he should have been in bed instead of at the score.

Quite a number of sweeps were indulged in, both before and after the main event.

Another match at 100 birds each, $100 a side, will probably be arranged between the same gentlemen at an early date.

Mr. Wells used a W. & C. Scott & Son's hammerless ejector 12-gauge, 7 pounds 6 ounces, and Smokeless shells loaded with 3¼ drams of E. C. powder and 1⅛ ounces No. 7 chilled shot.

Mr. Lloyd shot a W. W. Greener hammerless ejector 12-gauge, 7 pounds 10 ounces, and his shells were the U. M. C. Trap loaded with 3½ drams hard grain Schultze and 1¼ ounces chilled No. 7 shot.

Mr. W. A. Leach was referee and Tony Neiderweiser scorer. The scores:

Wells	2*22011120 1221*22022 112111*0*1 12100*0*11 2101222022—35

TRAP AT KANSAS CITY

KANSAS CITY, MO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I inclose herewith for publication a record of the shooting done at the Washington Park grounds during the past two weeks.

The Kansas City Gun Club held its monthly medal contest Thursday afternoon, February 21, with a good attendance present. Jack Doxon won the trophy after a very warm shoot off, in which he killed 9 out of 10 birds. The scores made follow:

ZOLLER AND MYERS VS. CORBETT AND WINCHESTER

GREENSBURO, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—A long-looked-for live bird shoot took place on the afternoon of March 5, at Christian's Park, between four members of the Greensburg Gun Club. It was a team contest, Myers and Zoller shooting against Corbett and Winchester. The conditions of the match were as follows: Fourteen birds per man, 28 yards rise, 30 yards boundary; stakes $50 a side, losers to pay for the birds. The birds were an exceptionally fast lot and some excellent shooting was done. The birds were retrieved by Col. Dick Thompson's famous water spaniel, Curt, who also did good work. The scores:

Zoller	211201210211121-12	Corbett	0012120110*12*—8
Myers	1201*22111220*-10—22	Winchester	20122110002*10—8—16

Dead out of bounds: Corbett 2, Winchester 1, Myers 2.

SEARLES—ALEXANDER

ELWOOD, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I inclese herewith the scores of a Blue Rock contest between O. E. Searles of the Stone City Gun Club of Joliet and John Alexander of the Elwood Gun Club. The race was at 100 targets per man for $20 a side. Mr. Searles had the misfortune to injure his hand seriously the day before the match, and this affected his shooting at the latter end of so long a contest, yet he won the race easily with a score of 76 to 59. THE PONTIAC TEAM WON

In the team shoot at Pontiac, Mich., on February 28, between teams from Detroit, Windsor and Pontiac, for the Gotchlag diamond medals, the Pontiac team was victorious. Fred Terry of the Pontiac team made a score during the day of 46 out of 50, the best score made. The scores in the team contest, each man shooting at 25 single targets, were: Pontiac—Fred Gregory 22, Fred Geddings 20, Windiate 19. Total 61 Detroit—Parker 21, Remick 19, Klein 13. Total 53. Windsor—Buser 14, Wolff 24, Gross 15. Total 53.

GREEN BAY, WIS.—I herewith hand you the scores made by the Green Bay Gun Club, in practice, on Washington's Birthday. We have hardly got in shape for good work, but hope, with a little more practice, to make some fair scores, as most of the members are excellent shots on ducks and snipes. Each man shot at 25 single targets.

BEDFORD, IND.—I inclose you berewith the scores made on March 7 by a few members of the Bedford Gun Club. The shooting was at inanimate targets, known trap, unknown angles, under American Shooting Association rules. It was the first club shoot of the season, and owing to the cold weather was not largely attended.

EVENT No. 1.—25 single targets: Sherwood 16, Stipp 16.

EVENT No. 2.—Same as preceding: Sherwood 18, Stipp 12.

EVENT No. 3.—Same as before.

Answers to Correspondents

We are willing always to answer any question that we can answer and prescribe for dogs or other animals in these columns, but we can not answer questions or prescribe by mail. In all instances where it is necessary that a sick animal should be prescribed for by mail, we refer the owner to Professor R. J. Withers, No. 627 South Main Street, Los Angeles, Cal., to whom one dollar must be inclosed to pay for his services.

TRAP

W. K. M., Sandusky, O.—Our gun club shoots are conducted on the rapid fire system, known traps, unknown angles. A dispute has arisen as to whether a target thrown from a trap at an angle sharper than the angles illustrated on pages 6 and 7, American Shooting Association's revised rules for 1893 (which I understand to be angles of 45°), would be in accordance with the rules. Some members contend that a target thrown at an angle more acute than 45° can be refused by the shooter and he should be allowed another target. What is your opinion? Ans.—If a match was being shot at inanimate targets for a sum of money, and it was specified that it should be governed strictly by American Shooting Association rules, a man might then refuse a target thrown at a sharper angle than those described in the illustrations referred to, but in ordinary shooting club contests or sweepstakes, where it is known trap, unknown angle, a target, if of proper height, thrown at any angle except back of the screens, is generally considered a fair target and if a contestant does not shoot at it he is likely to be scored a "lost bird."

W. H. B., Heleua, Mont.—A, B, C and D shoot a miss and out at targets, two moneys. A is shot out on first round, B is shot out on second. C and D shoot to see which takes first money and which second money, and both miss their target. B then comes in and claims second money, he having been shot out on second round. Is he entitled to second money? No special rules were made before shooting. Ans.—If C and D scored their second targets in the round that B missed his, B had no claim on the money.

GAME AND SHOOTING

F. H. C., Leamington, Ont.—(1) Will the repeating shotgun give better penetration, or does it have greater killing power than the modern double-barrel shotgun, each using the same load of ammunition? (2) Will a 12-gauge, 7-pound shotgun give the same penetration as a gun of same bore weighing 9 pounds, each gun using the same load? Ans.—(1) No, not if the guns are bored just alike. (2) Yes, all other things being equal.

J. H., Albany, N Y.—(1) Will the customs authorities at New York require a man to pay duty on a gun purchased in Europe if he brings the gun with him to this country? (2) If they doubt the sincerity of the act are they allowed to compel payment? Ans.—(1 and 2) The customs laws permit any man coming from Europe to this country to bring one gun with him without having to pay duty on same.

L. M. H. V., Stevens Point, Wis.—What is the difference, if any, in the shooting qualities of 10-gauge and 12-gauge guns, and which will have the most powerful effect? Ans.—If the guns are of the same make and grade, the 10-gauge is the more effective, as it will burn more powder, handle a larger charge of shot better, and give a greater killing circle than the 12-gauge.

T. W. S., Dunnellen, N. J.—Ans.—Your queries are of a legal nature that we, not being familiar with the laws of your state, are unable to answer. You had better consult some good legal authority who is friendly to your club.

RIFLE

H. M., McComb, O.—Will you please describe the Standard target used in rifle practice, giving number of rings, size of bullseye, etc.? Ans.—Bull, 10 count, 3½ inches; 9 count, 5½ inches; 8 count, 8 inches; 7 count, 11 inches; 6 count, 14¾ inches; 5 count, 19½ inches; 4 count, 26 inches. If it is desirable to extend the rings still farther, the custom is to paste this target onto a regular Creedmoor target, which gives you a 3 count of 44 inches and a 2 count of 4 by 6 feet.

Club Elections

CLUB ELECTIONS.—Secretaries and other officers of clubs not having previously done so will confer a favor by sending us the names of all such organizations, with a list of the officers elected for the current year.

AT the reorganization of the Ætna Rod and Gun Club of New York, on March 5, the following gentlemen were elected officers for the ensuing year: President, Charles B. Purdy; vice-president, Arthur J. Pratt; secretary, Geo. W. Morton; treasurer, Richard V. Keenan; captain, Harry S. Armstrong; shooting committee, James W. Gordon, Daniel O'Keefe and William H. Barnard.

AT the annual meeting of the Amateur Gun Club of Edwardsville, Ill., March 9, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, E. B. Glass; vice-president, Henry Daube; secretary, Chas. F. Cook; treasurer, Louis May; directors, Ed. C. Chapman, John Grigsby and J. L. Schuert.

THE following gentlemen have been elected officers for the ensuing year of the New York County Gun Club: President, T. H. Kellar; vice-president, J. H. Richmond; treasurer, Gus Grieff; secretary, L. H. Schortemeier; captain, E. Edwards.

Information Wanted

IN reply to H. B., Rutland, Ia., who asked for a preparation for bluing gun locks and mountings, I will say that the best receipt I know of is to have the work done by the heating process—case-hardened, or blued. He should send his gun to the maker of the gun, or to a good gunmaker. Some machinists can do a good job also.

Danvers, Mass. RAPID.

WILL some brother sportsman kindly inform the writer, through the AMERICAN FIELD, where good woodcock shooting can be had in the States, and at what seasons of the year?

Kansas City, Mo. HOPE.

D. C. BERGUNDTHAL.—Send us your present postoffice address; letter in office for you.

Amusements

SCHILLER THEATER.—Wilson Barrett in his version of "The Manxman," founded upon Hall Caine's novel of the same name. It is a strong plot and the story loses nothing in Mr. Barrett's rendition. One's interest is awakened at the start and held to the close. The situations afford opportunities for excellent acting, and Wilson Barrett carries out the spirit of the author's work in his version. "The Manxman" has scored a triumph. Next week, Mr. Barrett in a brilliant repertory.

HAYMARKET THEATER.—The magnetic singing and dancing comedienne, Miss Lottie Collins, and her own company, in a vaudeville program of the highest type and strongest character. Next week, elaborate scenic production of Bartley Campbell's great play, "The Galley Slave," by a strong company under the management of Mr. Robert Campbell.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—Mr. Otis Skinner. Tuesday, Friday and Saturday nights, "The King's Jester;" Wednesday evening and Saturday matinee, "The Merchaut of Venice;" Wednesday matinee and Thursday, "His Grace de Grammont." Next week, the favorite Bostonians.

ROYAL ENGLISH WINTER CIRCUS AND GERMAN WATER CARNIVAL.—Two big shows daily. This week see the Zamora Family: Mons. Cliquot, the sword swallower; Loisette and his trained birds and animals; Chas. Fish, the champion rider; new ballet and new fireworks.

COLUMBIA THEATER.—The beautiful and favorite actress Miss Marie Jansen, in "Miss Dynamite." Usual matinees. Next week—Miss Della Fox in "The Little Trooper," with Jeff de Angelis, Paul Arthur, Villa Knox and the original cast.

MCVICKER'S THEATER.—The greatest exhibition in the world. Hagenbeck's Trained Animals and Zoölogical Circus. Matinees every afternoon this week.

THE LINCOLN.—"The Ensign." Matinees Thursday and Saturday. Next week—"A Green-Goods Man."

LYCEUM THEATER.—Drummond & Staley's Vaudeville Co. in continuous shows. Thirty artists.

CHICAGO OPERA HOUSE.—Mr. Francis Wilson, in "The Devil's Deputy." Matinee Saturday only.

MADISON STREET OPERA HOUSE.—The Rentz-Santley Co. Two big shows daily.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS

Advertisers are respectfully requested to observe the following rules governing the insertion of advertisements in these columns:

CLASSIFICATION.—Strictly kennel advertisements—those which relate exclusively to dogs and to nothing else—cannot be placed under headings of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange," but are subject to classification only under their proper kennel headings. When two or more breeds of dogs are mentioned in one advertisement, it destroys the possibility of giving it a distinctive heading and it is therefore classified under "Miscellaneous." For this reason it is well to advertise each breed separately.

If stud notices are included in advertisements of dogs for sale the classification given will be "Miscellaneous." Stud notices should be separate and distinct from other advertisements so as not to conflict with proper classification.

The departments of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" are reserved for advertisements relating in some way to sportsmen's goods or other articles of merchandise.

RATES.—The rate for advertisements under "Wanted," "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" is 3 cents per word each insertion. The name, address, initials and abbreviations are included and count as words.

The rate for advertisements under kennel headings is 25 cents per line for the first insertion, and 15 cents for each additional consecutive insertion. Estimate seven words to a line unless the words are unusually long. If display type is used the rate is $3.50 per inch for the first insertion and $2.50 per inch for each additional consecutive insertion. Special rates are given for displayed advertisements running three months or longer. Schedule will be mailed on application.

Remittances to cover full cost should invariably accompany advertisements. If too much is remitted we will refund you what is overpaid.

Advertisers will favor us greatly by writing their advertisements plainly, using separate sheets of paper. Copy should reach us by Tuesday of each week to insure insertion in that week's issue.

WANTED

Advertisements under this head inserted for Three Cents for each word The money must be sent with the advertisement. See "Notice to Advertisers."

DOG TRAINING

DOGS thoroughly trained on quail for the season of 1894-95. I killed very few birds on my training grounds last year, and have thousands this season. My preserve consists of over 10,000 acres of the prettiest quail ground in the world, every variety of cover, and open enough to give a dog range as great as will the prairies of the Northwest. I have the best natural kennel location in the world, pure water, good healthy food, and the care of a competent kennelman. Not once in ten years do we have the distemper without its being brought to us, and it then occurs in a very mild form entirely free from serious results except in very rare cases. W. W. TITUS, Waverly, Clay Co., Miss. 42-18-tf

A FEW active and intelligent dogs will be taken by the undersigned for practical training at the coming season; training grounds are the grouse covers of the Missouri slope, the finest region for grouse hunting in the world; all facilities and natural advantages exist for the thorough education of bird dogs. For particulars address W. J McLEAN, Bismarck, N. D. Reference, Mrs. J. M. Bartholomew, State Agent S. P. C. A., Bismarck, N. D. 12*

I SHALL attend all the field trials this year and can take two more Deroys; also a brace of shooting dogs; satisfaction guaranteed. Address J. A. GUDE, Bruceville, Ind. 11*

We Want You to Know Their Merits

1,000 Boxes of Dent's Pepsinated Condition Pills Given Away to Dog Owners.

We find, where one box of Dent's Pills go into a neighborhood, that orders for more medicine come in from that vicinity

Good dog men recommend good things to their friends.

We know: Dent's Condition Pills and all their other medicines are far better than any other medicines you have ever used; pleasanter, safer, surer, more economical and quicker in their results, which in some cases are actually wonderful.

We will, therefore, beginning March 18, present each applicant, either personally or by mail, with one regular, full sized box of DENT'S CONDITION PILLS, containing forty-two pills, same as sold for 50c. Out of town applications will be sent promptly by express. If you want them sent by mail send 8c for packing and postage. If you want a copy of the new book on FEEDING, WASHING AND THE VARIOUS DISEASES OF THE DOG, postage will be 2 cents extra.

Dent's Pepsinated Condition Pills

Are unquestionably the greatest tonic and alterative the dog world has ever known. They are absolutely pure and non-poisonous. Their value is inestimable in that dull, thin, lifeless, unthrifty condition that dogs will at times run into, their eyes becoming red, swollen and full of tears; their noses hot and dry, mouths full of ropy saliva, coat harsh, rough and thin, urine scanty, high colored and frequently passed; bowels irregular, appetite variable, at times ravenously hungry, and again re using to eat altogether; the animal stretches out at full length, groans and at times attempts to vomit, coughs, gags and throws up a frothy, greenish fluid.

DENT'S PILLS

WILL REMEDY THIS CONDITION. They have a marvelous alterative and tonic action upon all the organs of the body, increase the secretions of the stomach and intestinal juices and thus prevent souring of the food; regulate the liver and kidneys, control the bowels and effectually tone up every tissue and organ of the body, and a bright, animated healthy dog full of life, with a handsome, glossy coat and sweet breath, is the result.

WHAT THEY SAY

Mr. Ben F. Lewis, Lansdowne, Pa., who has a larger percentage of wins to his credit than any half dozen handlers in America, says of Dent's Pills: "They are the greatest thing I ever had in my kennel I have never had my dogs in as fine shape as they have been since using Dent's Condition Pills."

Mr. Ames L. Orr, manager of the Dwight Kennels (the best kennel of Gordons in America), says of Dent's Condition Pills: "They are good enough for me."

Col. R. D. Williams, Lexington, Ky. (the popular judge and breeder), says: "At the New York show my bloodhound bitch Marjorie was in very bad shape; I began using Dent's Condition Pills and before the Chicago show she was in good shape and had taken on twelve pounds of flesh."

Mr. Charles E. Bunn of Peoria, Ill., swept the boards with his magnificent kennel of mastiffs at the late Chicago show. Everyone admired their perfect condition. Mr. Bunn uses Dent's Condition Pills.

Mr. W. L. Washington, Mr. C. Cass Hendee, Mr. Whitney, Mr. Eberhart, Mr. Clayton, Mr. Wilson—in fact, if you will inquire of the owners you will discover that 80 per cent. of them are using Dent's Pepsinated Condition Pills.

DENT'S MEDICINES

Are not the product of one man's experience, but of several of the most eminent physicians and veterinarians of America and Europe who have conducted careful investigations into the various canine diseases over a period of years. They are the only line of dog medicines on the market embodying the latest ideas of modern, scientific investigation; they effect cures where all others fail; absolutely safe, pleasant and effectual.

If you own a valuable dog you cannot afford to treat him with some antiquated mass of exploded ignorance.

THE DENT MEDICINE CO.

Prepares cures for the various diseases of the dog; distemper, mange, eczema, worms, chorea, fits, etc., etc.

Ask your druggist or sporting outfitter for them, insist on having them, and take no other.

Excelsior Dog Cakes

As their name implies, are the highest grade in the world, and five gold and silver medals corroborate the fact. They are economical and nutritious and are used by the leading kennels in the United States and Europe.

The Swiss Mountain Kennels have the following to say about them:

SWISS MOUNTAIN KENNELS, GERMANTOWN, PA.

Gentlemen:—I have used Excelsior biscuits now for about five years and find them perfectly satisfactory in all respects. The dogs are not only fond of them, but even when used exclusively have always agreed splendidly with them, keeping them generally in a good healthy trim.

I have several times recommended them to other parties and have never failed to find them otherwise than pleased with them. I would here thank you for your prompt attention to all orders. I am perfectly willing you should publish anything I have said formerly or at the present time in regard to the cakes. Yours truly,

THE AMERICAN FIELD

GUN CLUB SCORE BOOK

Surpasses anything of its kind ever issued. It has, in addition to 150 score sheets, correct and complete copies of American Shooting Association Rules for Live Bird and Inanimate Target Shooting, also Hurlingham and Long Island Rules which will be found very convenient for ready reference. Further, it contains a proper form of Constitution and By-Laws (that may be used as a guide in organizing a club), also a set of Field and Club House Rules. Carbon paper for manifolding purposes is inclosed in each book. It is so bound that when in use the top cover may be thrown back and under the book, making a solid base on which to write.

Owing to the immense advantage we have in compiling and pushing the sale of this book we are able to offer it at only $1.00 per copy, but at this price our margin of profit is too small to admit of discounts on large lots or to dealers. Bear in mind it contains 150 score sheets, besides additional matter as detailed above. Size of book, 9x12 inches. Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

DEER SHOOTING IN MICHIGAN

BY TOM

"Well, old man, are you about ready to go to Trout Lake deer hunting? I have just received a letter from Jess, in which he states that deer are quite plenty in the woods there."

"I will be ready any time you say, Webb."

"Well, what's to prevent our starting next week?"

"All right, I will be ready then."

The above conversation took place one morning last October, between the writer and my friend Webb, a jolly, good-natured Irish-American, a good deer hunter, well posted in woodcraft and on all kinds of game, an excellent shot, and a good all-round companion in the fields or forest. And many a hunting trip have we taken together after different kinds of game, especially woodcocks, which I may write a bout at some future time, with the permission of the editor of the AMERICAN FIELD, the best sportsman's paper in this or any country.

The day being set on which we were to start for Trout Lake, we left our little city of 500 or more inhabitants early one fine morning in October last on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway for Brandon, at which place we expected to change cars for the city of Oshkosh, the latter place being as far as we could go on this line of road. Arriving at Oshkosh we purchased tickets over the Chicago and Northwestern Railway to our point of destination, Woodruff, that being the nearest point to Trout Lake by rail. From Woodruff to Trout Lake it is twelve miles, which we had to make by stage. Here we expected to meet Mr. J. C. Coon, the genial host of Camp Franklin. After changing cars many times and being kept waiting altogether too long for our pleasure, we at last arrived at Woodruff in the early morning of the following day, and were met at the depot by Mr. Brown, the proprietor of the stage route from Woodruff to Camp Franklin, who informed us that our host was then at Woodruff, that he had been hunting all the previous day for a valuable mare that had strayed away and had not yet arrived, but would be up soon. In a short time Mr. Coon made his appearance and corroborated all that Mr. Brown had told us about the mare, further stating that his two cows had also strayed away and he was sorry to inform us that he would have to find the stock before starting for home, and would be obliged to use the team intended to convey us to Trout Lake for that purpose; that we had better wait patiently until he returned with the stock, which he expected to do that day, and then he would take us to Trout Lake and Camp Franklin; or, if we thought best, Mr. Brown would take us. After considering the matter we concluded not to wait for Mr. Coon, and, being good walkers, we decided to tramp the distance and thus get a little accustomed to the tramps we expected to make after deer, thinking possibly we might get a shot at a deer on the way; so after breakfast we started.

The road leading from Woodruff to Camp Franklin is used mostly by the lumber companies as a "tote road" (so they call it in that country), over which the lumber companies haul their supplies for their camps in the woods. Of course the road is not as smooth and level as the boulevards in Chicago, and in the late Fall is somewhat cut up by the heavy wagons of the lumber companies, several of which we overtook on their way to Boulder Lake, a lumber camp being near there. Each wagon was drawn by four very large and powerful horses. We saw no deer on the way, although we saw some deer tracks made in the soft ground near a swamp, and in a used road. These tracks were the first deer tracks the writer had ever seen. They were made by a doe and fawn, so Mr. Webb informed me. They were quite fresh; had been made the night previous. The tracks of the fawn looked somewhat like those made by sheep, and had I been alone I should probably have called them sheep tracks. We saw several partridges and red squirrels. I shot several times at the latter, trying to shoot their heads off, but only succeeded in making them jump and run farther up the tree and bark in derision. They would also look down at me as much as to say: "You can't shoot a little bit!" And I guess they were about right, for not being a crack shot with the rifle I could not draw a bead fine enough to take off the head of a squirrel, or, in fact, to hit one. This road, like all those in that part of the state, led through the dense pine woods, which fortunately the forest fire of last Autumn had not reached, although it came rather near, for, from Antigo to near Woodruff, the country along the line of the railroad had been burned over. Part of the distance we traveled through dense woods of jack pine and hemlock; then the road would skirt a tamarack swamp; then through a rather open country, most of the timber from which had been cut; then again through forests of white pine and birch, reminding one of birch bark canoes and the noble red man; then again to a lake in the woods, upon which we would occasionally catch a glimpse of loons; but only for a short time, for as soon as we were seen they would dive and, disappearing for some time, would again appear a long distance away, making that cry so peculiar to them, and which, heard in the stillness of the forest, sounds uncanny. Our route took us near the lakes a good part of the time, the road a part of the way being near the water, then it would leave the lake and, entering the woods, pass through them, when other lakes would appear. These lakes are all soft water, and without exception the water is as clear as crystal. One lake that we visited on our hunts after deer is called Crystal Lake. It is, as near as I remember, northeast from Camp Franklin, and it is correctly named, for it is one of the prettiest lakes I ever saw, being almost circular in shape with a beach of clear, white sand its entire circumference, while the water is so clear and pure that objects lying on the bottom can be seen a long distance from the shore, After passing, as well as I can remember, two of these lakes, and I being a little weary, I asked Webb how much farther we had to go to reach Trout Lake. He wanted to know if I was tired, and remarked that I had better sit down and rest. His remarks were somewhat cutting, but he can say some funny things at times, and I often feel—well, like letting him have his way, for he enjoys a good joke as well as the rest of us, and this was a good one on me, for had I not come to hunt deer, and who ever heard of a deer hunter being tired after walking only five or six miles? Well, of course I told him I was not tired, never felt better in my life, could walk until night, and so on. He then laughingly informed me that we were about half way to Trout Lake. (I thought we must have already walked about ten miles.) After taking a short rest and a drink of pure water out of the lake we were then at, we continued our tramp, occasionally seeing tracks of deer in the wet sand on the margin of the lakes, and as we would again enter the woods we would keep a sharp lookout for deer; but we were not lucky enough to see any, as at that time of day they were lying down in some secluded place in the forest listening and watching. After a time we came to an opening in the woods which denoted water, or a swamp, and continuing on we came to the banks of what Webb pronounced to be Trout Lake and Camp Franklin. Soon we came to the large boat house, near which was a small steamer tied to the dock, and on the beach were quite a number of clinker-built rowboats and several birch bark and canvas-covered canoes. A short distance to the east of these stood the large and commodious log house called Camp Franklin, which is kept by that prince of good fellows, C. J. Coon.

Trout Lake is a beautiful sheet of water about three by six miles in extent. In the lake are a number of islands, upon which are the habitations of the guides who cater to the wants of the tourists and hunters who visit this and other lakes near by for sport or pleasure. These guides are capable and intelligent men, very kind and obliging. I made the acquaintance of several of them, among others a Mr. Miller who lives on an island quite close to Camp Franklin, who is ready at all times to guide those who go to Trout Lake for either fishing or hunting. Connected with Trout Lake by a narrow strait called the Narrows, is another body of water (a part of Trout Lake) perhaps three miles across. The scenery at the narrows and, in fact, all around Trout Lake is quite fine. Lake trout, mascalonge, pike, pickerel, bass and whitefish are to be found in this lake, and I was informed that the fishing in this lake and others adjoining, is fine. While at Camp Franklin I saw four mascalonge, caught out of White Sand Lake by two gentlemen from Chicago who were stopping at Camp Franklin. These fishes weighed from 16 to 22 pounds, and were splendid. I was told that mascalonge weighing upward of 40 pounds had been caught out of some of these lakes.

Camp Franklin is situated on the south side of Trout Lake, about six rods from the lake. It is a large and commodious log house (or, rather, what would be termed a "blockhouse" in the early days of Wisconsin) 30x90 feet, two stories high, and I am told it is one of the finest log houses in the state. The logs are hewed on both sides, giving the structure a very neat appearance. The office, or lounging room, in which fishermen and hunters can swap stories and smoke, is about the center of the building, and is perhaps thirty feet square. The west part of the house is divided into two rooms fitted up very nicely, with an eye to comfort, for the accommodation of guests. In one of these rooms is a large, old-fashioned brick fireplace, where, during the chilly evenings of the late Summer and Fall, the cheerful log fire may be enjoyed. The east part of the house is also divided into two rooms, one of which—the largest—is devoted to the use of the hungry guests of Landlord Coon. The smaller room is used by the family, both being used for dining rooms. On the southeast corner is an extension, or addition, of two stories, the lower part being used as a kitchen and cook room, the upper part as sleeping rooms for the help engaged about the house. It is in this part of the house that Mrs. Coon caters to the wishes of her guests, and here let me assure you one may find all the comforts of a home and some of the luxuries of life. But do not expect canvas-back duck, terrapin or quail on toast, for you may not get them here unless the order is given in advance; but if you can be satisfied with good wholesome food and plenty of it, well cooked, with the best and kindest attention by people who anticipate your every wish, who endeavor to make everything pleasant and agreeable for you, all these and more you will find at Camp Franklin. The second story of the house is divided into bedrooms for the guests. They are situated on each side of the long building. They are very nicely furnished with good beds, such as you get at home, while the furniture in these rooms is all modern and of good quality.

Upon arriving at Camp Franklin we were greeted by the family of the host, consisting of Mrs. Coon, mother of the host, a kind, mild-faced lady with silvered hair, pleasant and agreeable, and one of the kindest-hearted women I ever met; Mrs. Coon, wife of the host, a very pleasant and intelligent lady, who always remembered the wants of my partner and I when about to go out upon a hunt, supplying us with plenty of lunch to eat when out in the forest, and who would fill our hunting-coat pockets with red apples (how good those apples tasted away out there in the woods); William Coon, brother to the host, a young man of pleasant address, a first-class guide, a good man to manage a canoe, a very agreeable companion, and a young man to be relied upon on all occasions; Tom Coon, half-brother to the host, also a good guide and companion, a lover of the weed (he is now trying what virtue there is in "No-To-Bac"), very fond of the fair sex, but a bachelor, however. The family were about to sit down to dinner when we arrived, and we were invited to partake of the meal with them. We were very hungry after our tramp and did full justice to the excellent dinner. Great Scott! how Webb did eat

It had only been a short time since we ate such an excellent breakfast at Woodruff, but my! how the victuals did disappear.

[illegible] we adjourned to the office, and, lighting a [illegible] Webb talk over old times with the [illegible] Will Coon, they being old acquaintances who had not met for several years. I had been a patient listener for perhaps an hour when tired Nature gave way and I fell asleep and did not awake until dusk. Upon first awaking, as I lay in a semi-unconscious way, I thought I heard Webb ask about supper, but perhaps I had been dreaming, or it might have been Tom Coon who asked the question. After supper we planned to go, as soon as possible, on a deer hunt, and I think it was the very next day that we started; and on this day I was fortunate in shooting the first deer I ever saw in the woods.

Four of us started out in the morning, Webb, Will Coon, T. Miller (previously mentioned) and the writer. We traveled about four miles, part of the way through dense forests of pine, hemlock, spruce tamarack. We saw many deer tracks and signs of deer, but no deer. After a time we held a consultation as to what course to take next, and it was decided to change our course and make for a point where Miller thought we would surely see some deer. Will decided to leave us here, agreeing to meet us again at a point known to Miller and himself, and starting through the woods was soon out of sight. We continued on through the woods and thickets, looking very sharply for deer. We found plenty of sign, denoting that deer had been there quite recently. Soon we came to a small lake in the woods, on the banks of which we found a well-defined trail, or deer run, leading from this lake to another one only a short distance away. Miller and Webb suggested that I stay near this runway, and they would try and drive a deer to me. They started, and the result was that they were the means of my shooting my first deer. However, before leaving me, Webb gave me particular instructions as to what to do should a deer come my way. His instructions were: Should a deer come along and not see or wind me, I must try and stop him by bleating as near like a deer as I could. How to do that I did not know, never having heard one bleat; but I must try to stop him, or her, if possible, and, should I get a shot, not to forget to pump a shell into my rifle (I had a Marlin .32-55) ready for another shot, and, above all, never to approach too near a wounded buck, for they are very dangerous. I thought I could remember all these instructions so kindly given me, and after wishing me good luck they started, leaving me stationed between two large Norway pines and near the runway above mentioned. After they were out of sight I began to think over the instructions given, and what I would do if a deer, or perhaps two of them, came along. Would I have the buck fever and, becoming astonished at seeing such large game, let it pass without a shot? and what would I do if a bear came along? (several had been killed a few miles from where I then was). What if I shot at or only wounded a buck and he came at me? It would not do to climb a tree, for the bear could climb also. These thoughts all passed through my mind very rapidly, and I made up my mind to do the very best I could under the circumstances and trust to luck.

The silence of the woods was occasionally broken by a pair of swans that made this lake their stopping place. Occasionally they would fly over me, making that peculiar croaking noise for which they are noted. (Mentioning this to Tom afterward he said they were crows.) Occasionally the wind would stir the tops of the tall Norway pines, making a noise that resembled some animal running through the woods, and I would fancy that it must be a deer. Then I would hear a slight noise near me a slight rustling in the dry leaves and grass, and would expect every minute to see a deer come bounding along. When looking for the cause I would see a little red squirel running along the ground, and, catching sight of me, he would run up a tree and perch upon a limb out of harm's way, as he thought, and cunningly look down at me, seeming to say: "Johnny, you got your gun, but you can't shoot me; you are after larger game." Several of these animals would be near me at the same time, all evincing such curiosity and capering about so that it was really laughable to see them. I had been watching the squirrels for some time when, on looking in the direction of the runway, I saw what at first appeared to be two large greyhounds, but I soon discovered them to be two young fawns, and they came jumping along, one after the other, with heads down. They did not see me, but had evidently been disturbed and were trying to make a sneak. Not being accustomed to using a rifle on running game, I thought if I shot at them while on the run I should certainly miss. Thinking of what Webb told me about trying to stop a deer before shooting, I made a noise something like that made by sheep when frightened, and I think it was the means of making the first deer run faster, for it was [illegible] of sight, and for all I know to [illegible] ing yet. The other one, being [illegible] ind, stopped to investigate and to [illegible] imal it was that made that [illegible] happened to be behind a small bush, and I could only just outline his form through it. I threw the rifle to my shoulder, took hasty aim and as the gun cracked he dropped. On going to the place I found that I had shot a small buck, the ball passing through the body just below the backbone, killing him almost instantly. Had I held a trifle higher I would have missed him. Looking at him in his death agonies I felt sorry for what I had done, he looked so innocent; but this feeling was soon changed to one of pleasure at the thought of killing a deer. Will Coon came up very soon after, disemboweled the deer for me and, after carrying it to the lake and washing out the blood, we placed it in the shade and waited the return of Webb and Miller, who, after a time, made their appearance; and almost the first words Webb spoke were:

"Well, old man, what luck?"

I told him I had got a young buck. He then asked was it buck fever, and I had to show him the deer before he could believe me. Then he very generously admitted that he felt just as happy at my success as if he had shot the deer himself.

It was now rather late in the afternoon, and having quite a distance to go we started for Camp Franklin, where we arrived an hour or so after dark, tired and very hungry.

THE SPORTSMEN'S EXPOSITION

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The board of trustees of the Sportsmen's Association have received the following additions to the list of exhibitors: Overman Company, Smith & Wesson Revolver Co., Heublien Brothers, Barney & Barry Skate Company, Outing Publishing Company, Chemical Lubricating Oil Company.

This increase clearly shows the growing confidence and interest in the exposition, and swells the number of rented spaces to nearly eighty. The attention of the association is now being given to plans by which the sportsmen and the general public may be taken care of when the exposition opens and properly handled on the several days. Arrangements are now in progress to devote one day each to the several geographical sections in the vicinity of New York. The dates are not yet decided upon, but one day will be devoted to all the shooting, fishing and field clubs of the state of New Jersey. On this day the organizations will reign supreme, and it will be known as "New Jersey Day." One day will be set aside for Long Island, one day for New York State, one day for Westchester County and vicinity, and one day for clubs of all the states. On each of these days official badges of recognition will be issued to every club, and special courtesies will be tendered to them by the association.

Another special feature in the attendance will be a hotel-keepers' day, on May 13, when the convention of hotel-keepers of the United States will hold its meeting. Several thousand delegates will attend, and special arrangements will be made with the delegates to attend the Sportsmen's Exposition in a solid body. The event cannot fail to attract a large representation from every quarter. In the same lines with this liberal policy, the Sportsmen's Association has undertaken the herculean task of sending by mail 200,000 circular letters, giving information regarding the exposition. These circulars will be sent to every known sportsman throughout the United States, Canada and Europe, which will include ministers, lawyers, journalists, railroad officers and professional men generally, who are interested in field sports. This plan has been adopted as the most effective means by which the army of sportsmen, who will, if they are well informed of the character and objects of the exposition, be desirous of becoming associate members of the Sportsmen's Association, by which means they will be entitled to the advantages of special reduced traveling rates on railroad and steamship lines. In order for the general public to obtain the benefit of the one and one-third rate of the several roads, the companies require one to be a member of the Sportsmen's Association, and the association has, under its constitution, a membership of associate members for exposition purposes only, and for information regarding terms of membership and railroad rates, address Frederic S. Webster, secretary, 106 E. 23rd Street, New York City.

Although this exposition is the maiden effort of the association, the management has been unstinting in its appropriations and expenditures. The outlay necessary to promote and successfully carry out the exposition on a liberal and dignified basis is very large and represents a sum never before devoted to the sportsmen's interest. The association hopes, by holding these expositions, to accomplish the education of the sportsmen by gathering together from all climes the manufacturer, the dealer, the inventor, the hunter, the guide, the painter and the author, and examples of all the animal life which are worthy to be entitled game, and which are the justification of the existence of the sportsman, and hold conventions worthy of the cause we represent; and as we are seeking to serve the fraternity with a broad and libera policy, we ask the sportsmen and general public not to commit an error by believing this exposition is intended as a money speculation. The association is a legally incorporated body under the laws of the state of New York, and the idea of the association is the study and dissemination of the interest in field sports and the holding of expositions and exhibitions; the assignment of assembly rooms or headquarters where those interested in field sports may assemble, and, incidentally, the founding of a sportsmen's library in such headquarters, for the use of members and visitors. The vast scope and variety of the exhibits will make it absolutely impossible for one to see and fully appreciate more than a small portion in one visit, and those who are inclined to keep conversant with the modern march of inventions and improvements, in the appliances of the sportsman, must not fail to attend the exposition.

The magnitude of the undertaking is increasing each day. Offers for the loan and trophy department are coming in so rapidly that we shall be able to select from the many collections only the best typical examples to show the resources of this great country as a paradise for the sportsman if properly protected. Several very valuable collections have been offered for exhibition and already accepted. Selections of typical specimens of mounted large game have been made from the collections of Hon. Theodore Rooseveit, Austin Corbin, William Zeigler, Archibald Rogers, G. O. Shields, Dr. N. Rowe and many well-known sportsmen.

GAME PROTECTION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

WASHINGTON, D. C.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I was pleased to learn by the AMERICAN FIELD of March 9 that the sportsmen of this city are at last awakening to a realization of the fact that game in this vicinity is greatly in need of protection to prevent its extinction.

I am in thorough accord with the expressed belief that more game is used here "out of season, through the instrumentality of cold storage houses, than is used here during the open season," it being a recognized fact that game of any sort can be purchased of the dealers here at any season of the year, and several of our leading restaurants still list quails and other game on their regular bill of fare in open defiance of the law of the district.

The contemplated effort of the Capital City Gun Club to secure additional legislation, as mentioned, is a step in the right direction, and united effort upon the part of all interested would probably ultimately accomplish the desired result; but to those familiar with the delay attending congressional action in such matters it is apparent that some time must elapse before success can be attained, and in the interval the indiscriminate slaughter of game for the Washington markets will continue without regard to an open or close season; and it is in this connection that I desire to invite the attention of brother sportsmen to our present law upon this subject, which, if enforced, will afford considerable relief in this direction.

The act of Congress approved June 15, 1878 (Sup. R. S. U. S. 2nd. Ed. p. 182), provides in the first section "that no person shall kill or expose for sale, or have in either his or her possession, either dead or alive, any partridge, otherwise quail, between the first day of February and the first day of November, under a penalty of five dollars for each bird so killed or in possession." In subsequent sections of the act the same protection is extended to pheasants, woodcocks, prairie chickens, snipes, plovers, wild ducks, wild geese, brants, ortolans and reedbirds, with the sole exception that the season varies for the different birds. By section 8 the provisions of the act are extended to deer meat or venison between January 1 and August 15, upon the penalty of twenty cents per pound. The remainder of the act refers to trapping of wild birds, prohibition of certain guns, killing at night, etc.

The language of this act is so plain and unambiguous that the courts would have no discretion, but be compelled to adopt the meaning which it imports, and it would appear, therefore, that the repeated violation of its provisions is due rather to a failure to enforce the law than to the act itself, probably from the fact that there is no official especially charged with the duty of prosecuting those who do not observe its requirements.

My purpose in writing this is to suggest that such of our residents as may be interested take prompt action looking to the formation of an association for the preservation of game, as a preliminary to securing the passage of a bill similar to the one proposed by the gun club, as I believe that such an association would not only result in the preparation of a perfect bill, but would also prove an important factor in procuring its enactment into law; and, in addition, pending such legislation, would be of great benefit in the matter of the enforcement of the present law, the several individual prosecutions during the last few years, of which I have knowledge, having effected no lasting reform.

Should my suggestions be deemed worthy of consideration I would be pleased to hear from such as may care to interest themselves in the organization of an association upon the lines indicated.

This letter has proven much more lengthy than I anticipated, but I trust this will not prevent its publication in the AMERICAN FIELD, which I have selected as the best medium through which to reach Washington lovers of the gun and dog.

WHAT NEBRASKA SPORTSMEN ARE DOING

LINCOLN, NEB.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The sportsmen of Nebraska are again making an effort to have the game laws of their state s amended that the remnant of our once plentiful supply of game will have a slight chance for continued existence, and everyone possessing the slightest traces of a sportsman within him wishes success to those having the matter in charge. What the result will be is hard to foretell; one can only hope for the best.

Legislators individually are usually reasonable and sensible men, but taken collectively they are uncertain, coy, and hard to please. Many members of the legislature are true sportsmen, and had they none but themselves to please would favor the thorough protection of game in every possible way; but they have their constituents to represent and naturally wish to please every one of them, for they need their friendship and support, as likely enough they may wish to be returned to the legislature, and perhaps have higher aspirations still. Now, many of their constituents are not in favor of strict game laws, would likely be better pleased if they were entirely abolished. There is Farmer So-and so and his boys—influential men in their neighborhood—whose votes and good or ill will would affect them at the next election. This farmer friend and his boys like to hunt and fish and are not at all particular about close seasons or the means employed to secure their game. Maybe they trap prairie chickens and qualls and ship them to market. Now if our legislator with a congressional bee in his bonnet should take an active part in pushing game legislation, he would offend these men and that would never do, so he sits still, keeps his mouth shut and lets the bill either be defeated or so amended that it only makes matters worse.

The Nebraska legislature, this session, will be asked to sanction the appointment of a game warden, but whether it will do so or not is doubtful; a Senate that has just cut in half the appropriation for the relief of the hungry drouth sufferers is not likely to allow any such extravagance, unless there is boodle or political capital in it.

That there is crying need for an active and efficient warden in this state is but too apparent. Only the other day I was informed by a reliable party that a party of market-hunters living in or near Shelton, Neb., were still at work killing prairie chickens and shipping them out of the state; that one of them stated that they had just disposed of eighty dollars' worth. Their present headquarters is on the Dismal River, in the northern part of the state about the only section of the state in which the remnant of prairie chickens can now be found. This is probably only one of dozens of such parties engaged in the murderous work.

At Shelton there is also work for the fish commissioner. Some time ago the state furnished fish to stock a small pond or dam, and one public spirited citizen of that town went to considerable personal expense to carry out the work. Last Fall, however, the good people of that town took it into their heads to have some fish, and they proceeded to that pond and helped themselves, not in a legitimate way, however, for they used a seine and got every scale in the pond. There was some talk at the time of prosecuting the offenders, but these lawbreakers were business men of the town and so it fell through. And thus the work goes on, a continual pouring of water into a sieve, and the legislature has so far refused to sanction the appointment of a warden, who, if he were a good man for the position, would save the state annually ten times the amount of his salary.

KANKAKEE COUNTY GAME NOTES

MANTENO, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In answering the query as to how quails have wintered in this county, I can truthfully say that they have had a very hard time of it. They were scarce last Fall, there being only a few bevies in quite a large district through which I frequently passed. They were not much hunted the past Fall, and therefore the bevies were not scattered when the cold weather and storms of January came. During one of the blizzards of that month a neighbor's boy found twenty-six quails in one bunch that had perished, there being but three of the entire bevy alive; and I have no doubt that the larger part of all the quails in the prairie districts of this state have perished in like manner, for they are a tender bird, and the snow, when driven by a fierce wind, easily finds its way through their feathers and wets and chills them to death. A prairie chicken or a rabbit will sit and let the snow drift over them, and thus escape the severe cold, but a quail seems to try to keep on top of the snow and is therefore exposed to the full force of a storm. Sportsmen here have all been careful not to alarm or drive away the quails, hoping to again see them in reasonable numbers about the fields, but I fear the past Winter weather has put our supply of birds back to where it was five years ago.

There are plenty of prairie chickens for breeding purposes; enough to make a fair number of birds for next Fall's shooting. The flocks are now broken up, and on warm mornings they may be heard giving their mating call. With a good season for nesting and time for the chicks to get strong, prairie chickens will be fairly plenty next Fall.

Rabbits were very scarce last Fall and were hunted but little. They have wintered well, but are too few in the prairie districts to make a good crop for next Winter.

Wildfowl were very scarce here last Fall. Sportsmen who lived near the Kankakee River and were in position to take advantage of any flight that came along, made fair bags occasionally. By taking my gun with me when on long drives, I secured thirteen ducks during the Fall, but that number is more than an average for sportsmen living on the prairie. The Spring flight of ducks and geese has already begun. A few scattering ones have been killed, but the chances are poor for one to make anything like a fair bag, unless by chance he secures a favorable stand along the river.

There will probably be some snipe shooting on low ground during April. For the last two Springs snipe shooting has been very poor, with the exception of now and then a favored day.

PENNSYLVANIA'S NEW LAW FOR THE PROTECTION OF RUFFED GROUSE

Dr. A. L. Spanogle of Altoona, Pa., under date of March 12, writes us that the following bill for the protection of ruffed grouse has passed both branches of the Pennsylvania State Legislature and only needs the signature of the governor to become a law.

Dr. Spanogle says that quails would have also been included in the bill only from the fear that by so doing it might jeopardize the chances of getting the protection so much needed for ruffed grouse. The bill, which we publish herewith, was drafted and approved by the Luzerne County Sportsmen's Club, and received the indorsement and liberal support of most of the prominent sportsmen of the state. It is as follows:

AN ACT

FOR THE PROTECTION OF RUFFED GROUSE

SECTION 1.—Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same: That from and after the passage of this act and until the first day of January, A. D. one thousand nine hundred and five, it shall be unlawful, at any period or season of the year, to kill, entrap or pursue, with intent to kill or entrap, any ruffed grouse, commonly called pheasant, in any part of this commonwealth, for the purpose of selling the same.

SEC. 2.—That during the period mentioned in Section 1 of this act, it shall be unlawful for the proprietor, manager, clerk or agent of any market or any other person, firm or corporation, to sell or expose for sale any ruffed grouse or pheasant killed or entrapped within this commonwealth.

SEC. 3.—That during the period mentioned in Section 1 of this act, it shall be unlawful for the proprietor, manager, clerk or agent of any market or any other person, firm or corporation, to purchase any ruffed grouse or pheasant killed or entrapped within the borders of this state, for the purpose of again selling the same.

SEC. 4.—That during the period mentioned in Section 1 of this act, it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation, to ship or transport, from this state into any other state or country, any ruffed grouse or pheasant killed within the borders of the state.

SEC. 5.—That in any prosecutions under the provisions of the second and third sections of this act it shall be necessary only to prove the sale, exposition or purchase in this state, and it shall be presumed from such sale, exposition or purchase, that the ruffed grouse or pheasant so sold, exposed for sale or purchased, was killed or entrapped within this commonwealth, and the burden of proving otherwise shall be upon the defendant in such prosecution.

SEC. 6.—Any person or persons offending against any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding three hundred dollars, and undergo an imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, or either, at the discretion of the court.

THE SOUTH DAKOTA LEGISLATURE FAILS TO PASS A NEW GAME LAW

KIMBALL, S. D.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The bill providing for a game and fish commissioner, and which contained many other important features looking toward the better protection of the game and fish of South Dakota, got lost in the shuffle during the closing days of the legislature. Although it got through the Senate all right, it met its untimely fate at the hands of the "steering [illegible] in the House. The lower house of the [illegible] hot debate over the bill. The principal [illegible] bill was that part of it providing a [illegible] game warden. It was proposed by the [illegible] to place an annual tax of 50 cents on [illegible] a fund for the game warden, but this was clearly unconstitutional. Under the most favorable conditions it would be difficult to get any bill through the legislature of this state providing for a salaried game warden, and since the state lost $375,000 trough an absconding state treasurer, the representatives are not in the humor to appropriate any more money than necessary to carry on the business of the state already established.

In common with all thinly settled Western states in which game is fairly plentiful, South Dakota's sentiment for the protection of game is very weak. This is due more to the wretched apathy of the press than any other thing I know of. One can count on the fingers of one hand the newspapers that ever protest against the wanton destruction of game now going on. Not until our game is practically exterminated do I anticipate any radical legislation looking to its preservation. Sportsmen should not weary in well doing, however, and when the legislature meets two years from this time they should be up and at 'em again.

Where the state sportsmen's association of this state falls down is in not doing any effectual work until after the legislature is in session. There should be someone in every county to look after the representatives from that county in matters of this kind, so that when a bill comes up they will be posted on it and prepared to push it along. Had it not been for a little effort of this kind on the part of the writer, the bill before the last legislature would probably have been killed in the senate committee. The representatives from this county can also be depended upon to help push through any bill for the protection of our game.

TO MAKE A CHOKE-BORE GUN MAKE AN OPEN PATTERN

CARSON, IA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—A great many sportsmen, probably the majority, are financially unable to own more than one gun, and this as a rule is, as a matter of fact, a close shooter, for most sportsmen find frequent occasions where a close, hard shooting gun is desirable. But when one goes quail shooting, snipe shooting, or prairie chicken shooting, a gun that will make a moderately open pattern will assure a person more game than a gun that shoots very close, and often men are puzzled how best to load their shells so as to get an open pattern from a full choke gun and at the same time to have such pattern even and uniform. I have a method that I have used successfully and which others to whom I have told it have also found valuable, which I will give to the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD with the hope that it may be of benefit to some brother sportsman who owns but one gun, and that a close, hard shooter. It is as follows:

Take a good quality of note paper, wrap four or five folds tightly around a common lead pencil, secure same well with mucilage, remove tube from pencil, and when dry cut in proper lengths to just be pushed down in the center of the charge of shot, so the shot just covers or is even with the top of tube, put on top shot wad and crimp as usual.

The effect of this is seemingly to reverse the action of the choke on the charge of shot. One thing will be noticed in the pattern, and that is that the distribution of the charge is very even. The shot in the center of the tube fills the center of the pattern, not leaving an open space as in the case of many other spreaders.

A few minutes will suffice to make tubes enough for a hundred shells and they are easily loaded. I have used these loads in a Crown grade Greener made to shoot as close as Greener could choke a gun, and my word for it the pattern was all anyone could ask for. I hope my brother sportsmen will give this shot spreader a trial and report through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD how they like it.

NOTES

CAMEO, of Jerseyville, Ill., in a recent issue of the AMERICAN FIELD states that Mr. J. M. Page of his county has received twenty-two Mexican quails which he intends to keep in a coop until the cold weather is over and then liberate them, in hopes of stocking the farms in his vicinity. If Mr. Page will accept the friendly advice of one who has had some experience in acclimating quails, he will liberate his birds at once and let them take care of themselves rather than try to keep them confined until warm weather. A few years ago some of the sp[illegible] this city imported over a thousand quails from Te[illegible] intending to stock this county. The birds arri[illegible] first-class condition and were liberated in a big b[illegible] building where they had an abundance of food a[illegible] everything we thought they needed except liberty. The result of our experiment was that nine-tenths of the birds died in the building, and the remainder were so weakened by confinement that when they were liberated they did not [illegible] enough to do well, and bevies of them were [illegible] fence corners and other places where they [illegible] here. A few of the birds seem to have lived and bred, but the great majority of those brought here at that time succumbed to the change of climate and deprivation of their liberty. I am satisfied that if the birds had been liberated in fair cover as soon as received, and supplied with food, there would have been thousands of them here now. Our experience would seem to be conclusive proof that confinement is more deadly to quails than any blizzard. If the birds have fair cover they may live through extreme cold, but they will surely die if kept in confinement. Such at least is the belief of all who were interested in the most extensive effort I have ever known to be made in transferring quails from one part of the country to another. In connection with the subject, the experience we have had here this Winter with quails in the parks on the outskirts of the city is instructive. A few birds from the South were liberated in the parks last Fall, as soon as possible after they arrived, and although we have had the coldest Winter known here for thirty years, the quails are said to be as lively as could be wished. They were fed when the snow was deep and have become comparatively tame. If anyone has had success in keeping quails confined he has been more fortunate than the sportsmen of this city.

Rochester, N. Y. E. R.

In a recent issue of the AMERICAN FIELD I see that a bill has been introduced in the Illinois legislature to place a bounty on foxes, owls, hawks and crows. This is a move in the right direction, for I believe that crows and birds of prey destroy more game than the gun. It has long been a surprise to me that laws are made to keep people from killing game at certain seasons, while birds of prey are allowed to destroy their eggs, the young and even the old birds. The greatest damage that crows do is destroying the eggs of other birds. A bird even as large as a turkey has to cover her nest when she leaves it to protect it from the watchful eyes of the crow. Many persons wonder how the crow finds the turkey eggs when they are covered partially from view. That is easily explained. The crow sees the old bird sitting on the nest and marks the spot, and when the old bird leaves the nest it knows within a foot the place where the eggs are. Years ago I was returning from a fishing excursion in company with William H. Murphy. In order to shorten our journey we crossed the pasture of Mr. E. R. Bryant. When part way across the field we came upon two young lambs. They seemed not to see us as we approached, and on examining them closely we found that their eyes had been pecked out. As the raven does not exist here we came to the conclusion that crows had done the deed. Since that day I have never let a crow pass me in peace if I had anything to shoot with. Many persons think, because I have long advocated the bounty question on birds and animals of prey, that I do so for the dollars and cents I might make if such a law was passed, but such is not the case. I have never received any bounty money whatever from the state of Illinois and I never will though the bounty on crows should be one dollar each.

COLD weather, frost and ice still predominate in Wisconsin, although the sun is daily climbing higher and higher. One year ago our lakes and streams were open; to-day they are covered with nearly three feet of solid ice. The Winter, now so nearly over, has been an exceedingly hard one—hard enough for man and beast—with an unusual amount of sickness and intensely cold weather to contend with; but how has our scanty supply of game fared? But poorly, I feel assured. In all of my tramps the past Winter, and I have made many, a half dozen would cover the number of partridges I have found traces of. Rabbits too, in many localities, have been unusually scarce. The markets have been well supplied the entire Winter with great northern hares which have been shipped in here in large quantities. Howard F. Bosworth's crop of Chinese pheasants in the show window of C. H. Moses' new store is the subject of admiring comment. Milwaukee Bay is filled with a miscellaneous assortment of wildfowl, all anxiously awaiting a decision on the bills now pending in the state legislature relative to Spring shooting; and I doubt not there are ample grounds for their uneasiness, for the Badger State has grown weary in her honest endeavors to coöperate with adjoining states in the passage and observance of common sense humane laws. Wisconsin could furnish sufficient material to form a solid procession reaching from Milwaukee to Chicago whose banners would read: "Cease Spring shooting, you murderers, before 'tis eternally too late." For my fellow shooters in Illinois recruits would fall in line after [illegible] passed.

GREENHEAD.

MR. MARSHALL T. MCDONALD of St. Louis, Mo., an ardent game and fish protector, drafted and had introduced a bill in the Missouri legislature, entitled "An Act for the protection of fish, deer, quail and other game birds within the state of Missouri, providing penalties for the violation of its provisions, repealing certain laws, and for the creation of the office of game warden and deputy game wardens throughout the state of Missouri, and declaring an emergency." The sections of the bill provide that it shall be unlawful to fish except with hook and line, prohibits the use of seines, nets and explosives, designates the close seasons for all kinds of game, prohibits the buying, selling, handling or having in possession any Missouri game except after the tenth day of the open season and before the tenth day prior to the closing of the open season on any game animals or birds mentioned; that permission must first be obtained to hunt on another's land; that a license to hunt and fish, costing $1.50, must be obtained; that one chief warden and five deputy wardens be appointed by the governor, and that exportation of game birds and animals from the state is prohibited absolutely. Regarding the passage of this bill Mr. McDonald writes: "The bill was not introduced until late in the session and therefore has no chance of getting through; but another measure, embodying some of these same features, passed the lower house some weeks ago and bids fair to become a law."

THE sportsmen and others in Saratoga County, N. Y., to the number of over one hundred, who are in favor of better game and fish protection in that county, met recently and organized the Saratoga County Game and Fish Protective Association. In addition to the transaction of other business, a committee of eight, consisting of Mr. John E. Hodgman, Dr. J. A. Pearsall, J. F. Swanick, T. F. Hamilton, Will H. Manning, Emmett T. Farrington, and the president and secretary of the association, when such officers are chosen, was appointed as an executive committee and its duties defined as follows: "This committee shall have charge of all matters pertaining to the prosecution of violators of the game and fish laws; the procuring of young fish and game birds for stocking purposes, and all matters pertaining to the management of this association. Five members shall constitute a quorum and their action shall be binding upon the association This committee shall, within ten days, select some suitable person for the office of game warden. They shall report to this association, at a meeting to be held March 25, the name of the person selected for the office of game warden and the price per month agreed upon for his services." The organization is strongly favored in all parts of the county and it is expected that the membership will be doubled by the time the organization is fully perfected.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND, like many others who believe it right to shoot ducks at all seasons, has been on his annual duck shooting trip South, but unlike some Spring shooters he did not kill an unreasonable number of birds, whether because he did not have the opportunity, or because he is a man of judgment in such matters, we know not, but whatever the reason it is true, if reports be correct, that he did not go out to see how great a slaughter he could make, but for sport and recreation, which he obtained as well in killing twenty-five birds a day as if he had slaughtered a hundred or two. We maintain that it is foolish, shortsighted and wrong to shoot ducks in the Spring of the year when the birds are migrating northward to nest and recuperate their numbers; yet the man who kills a reasonable number and is satisfied shows better judgment than the one does who goes out and shoots as long as there is a bird within shooting distance or as long as his ammunition holds out. The latter is unreasonable for he is doing his utmost to annihilate the duck supply of the land, and if he be a young man and lives the average number of years allotted to man, and his example is followed by others, he will live to see the day when if he can kill twenty-five ducks a day he will consider it a wonderfully good bag.

I FEAR that quail shooting will not be very good in this section next Fall, for the farmers report having found many entire bevies frozen to death. The reports so far received lead me to believe that one-half or more of the birds left over from last Fall's shooting have been killed by the extreme cold weather. I have lived in Eastern Kentucky for nine years and during that time I never experienced such cold weather as we had during January and the first half of February. Rabbits and song birds have also suffered from the severe weather but to what degree it is hard to say. Quails that were not frozen to death were mainly those that used around the barns, feed-lots and outbuildings, where they found shelter and food. The hawks also made good use of the days when the birds had to remain huddled together to keep from freezing, and a good many were destroyed in this way. I look upon the hawk as more destructive to quails than sportsmen, for they hunt every day, rain or shine, hot or cold. Long live the AMERICAN FIELD. I am always impatient for Saturday to come so I can get my copy of that great sportsman's paper and digest the many good things that it is certain to contain.

Williamsburg, Ky. NICK DANIEL.

THE officers of the steamer Nutmeg State, plying between Bridgeport, Conn., and New York City, had a fine dinner of wild ducks on the first of this month. The Wednesday previous, when the steamer left Bridgeport at midnight, Capt. Wilcox noticed a flock of ducks hovering around the boat. When off Penfield Reef ice was found floating in the sound in large quantities, and the searchlight was turned on. A short time afterward Capt. Wilcox heard a great flapping of wings, and by the rays of the powerful light saw a large flock of ducks circle again and again around the boat. Suddenly they turned and darted straight toward the light. They struck the thick glass of the searchlight and the iron box surrounding it, the pilot house and the smokestack. The passengers were awakened and many went on deck, and when the excitement was over it was found that fully a score of the birds had been killed.

A coop of a dozen prairie chickens recently passed through San Francisco, Cal., on its way to Honolulu, whither the birds were being shipped with a view to stocking the island with them. When seen in San Francisco the birds appeared healthy and strong and looked as if they were really pleased to think they were going to a new country to become, in a measure, a part and parcel of it. Should they reach their destination in good condition and the nature of the island is suited to them, it will not be many years until their numbers, even from this small covey, will run up into the hundreds, for they are great breeders and the hens attend strictly to business every season.

A TELEGRAM from Duluth, Minn., under date of March 16, announces the killing at McGregor, that state, by the Cristill brothers, of Mr. and Mrs. Jenetta. Some time ago Mrs. Jenetta called upon Chief Armstrong of Duluth and informed him that a great many people about McGregor were violating the game law of Minnesota by killing deer out of season, and among others she gave the names of the Cristill brothers. Chief Armstrong communicated with Game Commissioner Andrus, giving him the information received from Mrs. Jenetta, but does not know what action was taken by the commissioner. Whether the killing of Mr. and Mrs. Jenetta was in retaliation for the information given to Chief Armstrong is not known, although it looks that way.

IT is said that Miss Sarah Tatum, of Trimble, N. J., a bright young woman 22 years of age, owns a comfortable home which she has paid for out of money she has received from the sale of muskrat skins. Her mother and a hired man run the farm and Miss Tatum spends most of her time shooting muskrats. Miss Tatum is said to have a fairly good education, having at one time taught school, but being passionately fond of hunting, she prefers to make her living in this way, rather than by teaching school. She does most of her shooting with a small caliber rifle.

I WAS out quail shooting on February 26 for the last time until next Fall, and from the number of bevies of birds that I found I think plenty are left over for a good supply next season. I hear of quite a good many deer being seen and there seems to be a pretty good supply of wild turkeys. The latter I shall give some attention as soon as they begin to gobble.

Siloam Springs, Ark. GEO. ADAMS.

THIS has been a very hard Winter on quails, there having been a great deal of snow with a thick crust frozen over it. The reports so far received have been very discouraging, except from a few farmers who are feeding the remnants of the bevies instead of taking a pot shot; so we may have a few birds left for breeding next Spring.

St. Thomas, Ont. W. J. KIEFFER.

THE new game and fish department bill, with increased salaries for the commissioners, having passed both branches of the Maine legislature, the legislative committee having the matter in charge will now recommend the appropriation of $30,000 by the state to be used in building up the game and fish interests of the state. It is thought that the expenditure of the above sum will be a good investment for the state.

WORD has been received from Henry, Ill., that thousands of ducks have arrived. The ice has all gone and shooting is excellent.

NEW PATENTS

The following patents in the sporting goods line have just been issued and are reported especially for the AMERICAN FIELD by Joseph H. Hunter, Attorney at Law and Solicitor of Patents, Washington, D.

Pneumatic tire for bicycles, Robert S. Anderson, Toronto, Can.
Sight for firearms, John A. Kennedy, Choteau, Mont.

Transparent top wad for cartridges, Joseph N. Lower, Denver, Colo.

Fishing reel, Granville E. Medley, Hopkinsville, Ky.

Automatic bicycle pump, William R. Moore, Cleveland, O.

Ejecting mechanism for breakdown guns, Martin Bye, Worcester, Mass.

Jointed oar, Frederick Harbers, Peoria, Ill.

Marine velocipede, John Kleiu, Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE WILIEST AND STOUTEST HEN-THIEF IN NORTHERN NEW HAMPSHIRE

BY HUGH RICKER

Being bolstered up on a sick bed, through over indulgence in coon and fox hunting this last season, gives me ample time to start the hen-thief from his lair or to shake the festive coon from the northern pine (in imagination). I have had some old-time hunts this last week, lying on my back, and one of them I will relate here. It is of a red fox that fooled the fox-hunters many times, myself included, in the north mountainous region of New Hampshire.

While at my lower camp at Wells, Me., last September, I received a letter from my honored friend C. R. Thorn, saying he and his party would be ready to take their annual trip by October 1 and requesting me to be at my upper camp at the time specified, to beard the lion in his den. I made up my mind to drive over the road (distance 107 miles), so fixed up a wagon of the army fashion, told my cook to get my traps together, and started with seven dogs for fox, coon, hare, grouse, woodcock and duck. When I left my camp by the sea my outfit consisted of horse, wagon, seven field dogs, one canvas boat, a shelter tent, my old reliable cook, and a man to assist me on my trip.

I had been on this trip several times by rail, and last year by canoe, but this year I wanted to see the country in general. I was well paid, for I found a country in some places teeming with small game and ponds swarming with ducks. I reached my upper camp in due season, rested a day or two, and greeted my company.

Now to my hunt. When I had got within four miles of camp an old farmer greeted me on the road and told me that the biggest fox that ever ran was eating up all his hens, that "Prescott's dog chased him most every day but could not hold him after an hour or so's run," and that he would wager if I had as good hounds as usual they could get him. I told him that I had to meet my company at that time, but that if he would not disturb the fox we would come down and give it a turn. Foxes were plentiful near camp, and we had fine sport and grand luck, getting five pelts the first week, and other game in proportion.

I mentioned the old hen-thief to my friend Thorn, and a day was set. When the day came it proved an ideal one for hounds to keep a fox on the move. It had been agreed that we should start by daylight and that we should take my old hound Jerry (12 years old). We found the old farmer milking; he came to the barn door and pointed to a potato patch, saying that he saw the fox there last night at dusk. We took care of our teams, as there were six of us in the party, and then I put them on what I thought good runways. I put the old hound into a piece of wood bordering the field, but he worked the ground all over and did not give tongue; finally he worked across the road down into a meadow and gave tongue. We waited for him to sound again, but could not get a trace of him for a long time. Eaton, one of the party, left his stand and came up to me, saying that he thought I had made a mistake by not bringing more hounds. I told him that the old hound was good for six or eight hours' work and that he would find the fox before he quit. As long as he gave tongue in the meadow he was working the trail on high land; at that moment Eaton harked and said he could hear Jerry a mile away driving sharply. I worked over to the hound and found him driving a fox in a circle. I got sight of the fox and saw it was a Jumbo, and one-half of its brush was white. I went back and got the "boys" to close in on the fox, telling them where I got sight of the fox. When we got to where the hound was running Mr. Fox made a break for new grounds and I made up my mind then that the old dog had struck a veteran. I had seen the fox and had witnessed its trick; it had made up its mind that it had something besides a twelve-years-old hound to contend with. For two hours that fox kept playing round a pond, and now and then some one of the party seemed sure of its pelt. Finally I asked C. R— to close in on the dog with me, as Jerry had been running three hours without a check. We were walking along a timber road, when we heard old Jerry coming to us, driving sharply. I stepped behind a tree, to allow C. R— a shot. Bang! bang! went both barrels. A clean miss, and the fox went by me, too. I was looking for a dead fox, so lost a good shot. Bang, bang—bang, bang, in the distance; but the fox kept right on, crossed the road, and down through the farmer's yard. Hens flew in all directions and the old farmer came running down the pasture with arms extended and calling at the top of his voice that the fox was after his hens. Hound and fox then went out of hearing. At last we heard the hound coming head-on. Bang! went a gun. Did you get him? Yes. Eaton was the lucky man. We all closed in to shake, but would not, as it was a small puppy of a fox instead of a large, old fox with a brush half white.

It appeared that the old hen-thief fooled old Jerry, who had struck the fresh track of another fox and driven it to its death in short order. Its pelt was taken off, the team hitched up, and we went back to camp with the oath of a funeral on the old hen-thief's pelt.

Next morning, at daylight, found us at the farmer's barn with Dollars, the best foxhound that I ever hunted (I got him from J. M. Shaffer, Wooster, O.). Dollars was not long finding a trail, and in a short time he had a fox well under way and was making as handsome a drive as I ever witnessed. Up over ledges, down through the valley. Up onto Ossipee Mountain he crossed over out of hearing for half an hour; then he gave warning that the fox was making for the wood road, where C. R— got a shot the day before. We were lined out to greet him, and on came Dollars, swift as the wind. I thought of the letters that Dr. Kennedy had written me of his regret at not being able to meet me on this trip. There were hound and fox in clear open sailing; no picture in this world will ever take its place. For a mile the crafty eye of the New England fox-hunter could mark every leap of Dollars and his fox, as the latter headed straight for someone's gun. But, no, he turned quickly to the left and broke for the low land. All at once Dollars shut up and was at fault. We waited for him to swing onto the trail, but waited in vain. We closed in on him and found him working hard to cement the broken trail. He stopped at the pond, and eager eyes scanned its shores for some signs. My boon companion came up to me, looked me in the face, and whined for me to keep him before the trail got too cold. After two hours of unsuccessful work we returned to our teams, more determined than ever that we would have that pelt, if we had to stay in camp all Winter.

Wall Street and politics were not discussed at the campfire that night. It was the opinion of six different men who had seen many a fox-drive with the writer during the last eight years that that day's was the grandest of them all, and we would see one more to-morrow. Such was the verdict at bedtime.

Next morning found us at the farmer's barn, and in less than ten minutes Dollars had a fox going at a killing clip. Each one acted on his own counsel that day, as the other two runs were fresh in their minds. The fox took a tremendous circle out of hearing; now and then he would swing into hearing, and then work off again. I worked toward the hound, for fear the fox would shake him. The other party was in a foreign land as far as I knew, for I had not seen one soul for two hours when I got to where Dollars had crossed with the fox five minutes before. He seemed to be increasing his speed as I got upon a ledge and had the pleasure of seeing the fox two hundred yards off. Yes, it was the same old veteran, with brush half white and looking as large as a Scotch collie. They crossed over the mountain out of hearing and were gone all of an hour. Meanwhile we all got together and made up our minds to form a circle in the vicinity of where he gave us a shot the day before. No sooner had I got settled than we heard Dollars warning us of the old wood road. I made up my mind to get near the pond and wait, so I got onto a knoll where I thought if he did not get grassed he would be likely to cross, when bang! sounded in the distance. Not a check from Dollars though. But I heard him swing sharply to the right and in a bee-line for me. I would not have sold my chance for the wood-lot I was in; but I would have made money if I had, for I swear Dollars got bluffed again and I happened to be on the wrong side of the pond. It had been agreed that if Dollars got bothered we should all close in on him as soon as possible. We were not long in doing so, but look where we might we could not find a den or inclined tree.

Now there was an island about three hundred yards from the shore of the pond and perhaps fifty by one hundred feet in size. The thought struck me that that fox took to the water. Willing hands took hold, and we soon made a rude raft. All placed confidence in my belief and watched with eager eyes while I poled out to the island, C. R— holding Dollars in case I was right. And I was, for there was the old fox, crouched down and looking at me, the same as I have seen them on a wall when a puppy was trying to ferret them out. I did not touch the island, but poled back and got Dollars on board the best I could; and first I would give a shove and then grab Dollars to keep him from jumping off. Finally my raft grazed the island, and Dollars made a leap and got his eye on the fox making for water. [illegible] fox in the water before it got half way, [illegible] fox got the first hold, and if I had not [illegible] and pole it would have compelled Doll[illegible] grave. I forced the fox under water [illegible] drowned it. Thus ended one of the grandest hunts for one of the best chicken thieves that ever graced a farm in northern New Hampshire.

I am disappointed at not reading more items from sportsmen in the East, as it would please others as well as myself to read the rambles of those that surround us. I have made it my living and pleasure for forty years to breed and handle field dogs to hunt all kinds of game that breed in my section and I catch all kinds of game fish. I am no pot-hunter, but simply act as guide to a regular class of customers. I am willing to send notes of my rambles to a journal devoted to our interest, and I hope to see others do the same. I have hunted from the snipe to the moose, but for pleasure and excitement give me small game. It would be no sport for me on the western prairie to poke a gun at a prairie chicken, but when a man follows a tangled brook and fights mosquitoes from sun to sun in order to fill his creel with speckled beauties or bag the swift grouse in a thick covert he is entitled to the name of sportsman.

THE AMERICAN FOXHOUND

WORCESTER, MASS.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The foxhound men seem to be coming all in a bunch; the standard is a good trail for them, and they are getting there. Now, I am not a fighting man. I am after foxhounds for field use, simple and pure, that can get after a fox here in New England and catch him or pump the wind out of him so that he will have to go to earth, if he can get there, inside of two hours. I think more of such foxhounds are to be had under the new standard adopted than under the standard more after the type of my American foxhound Ned; and in justice to myself and Ned, I wish to say that he is a perfect type of the American foxhound of days gone by; he has won a first and a second on the show bench and is a tireless worker and an all-day hound that is plenty fast enough to drive a fox to gun. And for the benefit of friend Hagan I wish to say that I did not buy Ned from Mr. Fellows or Mr. Wade (I don't know that they ever saw him), and that I have his breeding, which is of good American stock. At Olympia, Ky., I did not have his breeding with me, and while I did object to have his breeding in the running class placed "unknown" it was the only thing to do. I think Mr. Hagan sat at the table, assisting the Secretary in making the entries, and heard me make the above statement and saw me pay for entering Ned in the stud book, which requires a pedigree.

Mr. Hagan said in his article in the AMERICAN FIELD of March 9 that he had seen Ned in the flesh. He has. But he does not draw just as fair a picture of him as the hound deserves. Mr. Hagan says that he had a hound there that hunted Ned to a standstill. I think that every man that had a hound in that day's hunt will say that Ned was all right until about noon, after which time there was no hunting done by hounds unless their handlers went right ahead with them. Mr. Hagan ought to know (as the others did who saw my mount) that it was out of the question for me to do that, so Ned spent most of the afternoon where I could go. Mr. Hagan's hounds and the other hounds spent their time where their handlers could go. Mr. Hagan is a young man, a dashing rider, just the right stuff for a fox-hunter, a dandy at it, and I like him; and those that know me will not be at all surprised to know that he hunted me to a standstill, especially with that cross-bar that I had for a mount that day. So, as I have said, in the afternoon the hounds went with their handlers, as they always will do after their morning hunt on a dry, hot day such as that one was. So if Mr. Hagan's hound was left in for another hunt and Ned was left out Mr. Hagan is entitled to the credit; for no hound did anything by himself there that day that would entitle him to a place over any other hound, barring his handler.

In conclusion, Ned will outwork any foxhound in our pack in trying to start a fox, and as hard as any hound that I ever saw, but he cannot follow a fox as hard or press it as closely as many of the Kentucky foxhounds. And, now, gentlemen, you may take what standard you like, and I will take "nose, speed and endurance" for mine.

A. B. F. KINNEY.

ROCKLAND, MASS.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I should judge that the writers of the articles on the American foxhound about all take it for granted that the perfect red-fox foxhound for their section of the country was equally suitable for all sections, and that speed was of the utmost importance in a foxhound for any part of the country. I think this idea a highly erroneous one.

Most men are ready to admit that killing of the fox makes the dog, whether it be bird dog, beagle or fox hound. It follows then that to have good foxhounds they must occasionally come up with a fox they have been driving. This they cannot do in this section without the aid of their master's breech-loader. I claim then that the hound that will attain the highest perfection as a red-fox hound in New England is the one that will give the best chances to stop his game for him. I also think he is a moderate running one.

I should naturally think that a strain of foxhounds bred for years for fox-killing qualities is just what is needed for an open country where it is possible to catch a fox, and where riding to hounds is in vogue, but I do not think such hounds the equal for our hunting of hounds raised here. Most of the hunting here is done with one or two hounds, so they will not run the fox too hard and thus make it go off instead of circling or playing, as a fox will generally do when started where he was bred and when driven by a moderate hound or two. It may sound like a queer statement to many that a moderate running hound is generally closer to his fox than a sharp running one, but this is the case nevertheless in this part of the country. The moderate running hound gets better scent because he is closer to his fox and because the fox is running slower; he therefore drives more smoothly and gives tongue better, as our fastest barking and best voiced hounds are generally moderate running ones. Of course the main pleasure for a fox-hunter here is listening to the music of his hound, as it plays or circles its fox; and the delight in shooting is generally because of the good it will do his hound, and not because of the dollar it will bring.

JAMES MAHONEY.

MR. CARLTON GRAY, of Spirit Lake, Minn., is the owner of a nice little pack of imported hounds which have been giving him and his friends good sport this Winter. Last year he imported three couple of puppies from a Surrey pack, and he gives an interesting account of their first run, when, with two old hounds, they settled the hash of a burly coyote after a hot chase: "The first time we took them out was in December. There was a dead horse in the ravine about a mile from my place, and the coyotes were around there thick every night. We turned out one morning a little after daylight. The puppies had been kept short for a couple of days, and they were as keen as the old-timers. The last two are first-rate animals. The bitch, especially, is one of the best I ever saw, true as steel and game all through. The trail was struck full a quarter of a mile from the ravine. Old Nell gave a couple of yelps and went away with a breast-high scent; Pete at her side, and the puppies nosing the ground, coming along behind. It was as pretty a sight as you ever saw. The course was due east, and the sun was just rising above the line of prairie away off in the distance, as the pack went away. It shed a bright golden glow across the country, burnishing the patches of snow here and there, and throwing a yellow halo about the pack. Over the first roll in the ground our game hove in sight. He was a fine dog wolf, and the pace he set as the pack went yelping after him was simply terrific. There was not a fence in sight nor any sort of obstacle for seven or eight miles. In ten minutes both the wolf and hounds were out of sight in the distance, except for an occasional glimpse obtained as they went over a knoll. They killed him after a run of five and a half miles. We came up with them in a little over half an hour. Old Nell was tearing at the carcass and Pete was helping her. The puppies were spread out on the ground in a complete state of exhaustion. They were all in at the death, though, I should think, and I'm proud of them. We had three or four good runs during the season, but I think this one showed the stuff those Surrey puppies are made of."

FRIDAY, February 22, some of the Batavia Fox-Hunters' Club were out with eleven and a half couple of hounds from the kennels of Messrs. Lew Buerkle, Thomas Glancy, H. Tatman and R. W. C. Gregg and soon had the pack on a fresh trail. Before long the quarry was roused on the Gomier Farm and after a good run of nearly two hours was captured alive. In addition to those already mentioned Messrs. Frank Ballinger, Rufus Walker and H. Kain took part in the chase. Next morning the fox was turned down in a field north of Batavia and given twenty minutes' law, when a number of young hounds were put on the trail and performed very creditably, though Reyhard saved his brush. Some half dozen horsemen saw a good deal of the run, but a thorough knowledge of the country is necessary, as the hilly country and very high fences almost preclude the possibility of riding straight to hounds in this part of Ohio.

MR. H. S. PACKARD, of Fall River, Mass., has purchased from Mr. R. H. Pooler a foxhound named Caperton II, bred and entered near Paris, Ky., and sired by a noted stud dog of Madison County, Ky., Old Caperton; dam a sister of Cl[illegible] one of the gamest hounds that ever [illegible] by Scully. Mr. Packard says: [illegible] Pacer, a dog by Ball from Trinket, [illegible] They are fast, stayers, everyday [illegible] adapted to this locality; and, al[illegible]rry a trail twenty-four hours old at a three-minute gait, are hustlers nevertheless. In my dealings with Mr. Pooler I have found him to be an honorable man and one whose word can be relied on. I cannot say this of all the parties that I have obtained foxhounds from. I believe the buyer should have some protection as well as the seller."

THE Meadowbrook drag-hounds were to have opened their Spring season on March 12 with a run across the Hempstead Plains, but the condition of the ground caused a postponement.

THE date of the famous Peterborough hound show has been fixed for July 10. The Prince of Wales has consented to be president for the year.

FOXHOUNDS are offered for sale this week by Mr. N. Money, Oakland, N. J.

Fish and Fishing

THE steelhead fishing is over for this season, and anglers on the Pacific coast are anxiously awaiting the opening of the trout season on April 1. But, declares the San Francisco Chronicle, of March 9, "report says that not a few alleged sportsmen have been seen on various streams deliberately catching trout out of season and in violation of the law. It is said that not less than a score of anglers were on Sonoma Creek last Sunday, and similar complaints are at hand from other streams. It behooves the fish commission to organize and maintain from now until the opening of the season as effective a patrol as is possible with the means and men at their command. Men should be sent to the few streams most convenient of access from San Francisco and where illegal fishing is most likely to be practiced. Anglers are expecting to have great sport this season in the northern part of Sonoma County and about Ukiah in Mendocino County. This entire country will be opened up to fishermen this season by a convenient train service. With local fishermen the streams along the line of the Donahue Railroad promise this year to be among the most popular in the state."

THE well-known fishing rod and tackle manufacturers, Chas. Plath & Son, of New York, have issued their annual illustrated catalog. Everything in the tackle line is elaborately displayed, and a copy of it enables the possessor to easily solve the problem what and of whom to buy. They have reels in profusion, Vom Hofe's, Milam's automatic and all other makes. In addition to their large stock of rods of their own make, they have a full line of Bristol steel fishing rods, and as they are direct importers they can offer special inducements in enameled silk lines of best quality, silkworm gut and English fish hooks. Another specialty with them is the manufacture of snelled hooks, leaders, minnow gangs and artificial flies. Their catalog, as their advertisement announces, will be sent for 10 cents in stamps, which can be deducted from amount of first order.

ON Thursday March 14, a bill known as S. F. 571 was introduced in the Senate of Minnesota, by Senator Spencer, which provides that anyone who owns not less than a mile frontage on a lake containing a surface area of not less than three square miles and inhabited by whitefish may obtain exclusive control of the lake upon certain conditions: He must secure permission of the fish commissioners and for fifteen years deposit annually a million whitefish fry or two million fertilized eggs for every square mile of surface in the lake and pay five cents per hundred pounds for the fishes caught out of it. If this bill should become a law probably it would enhance greatly the value of property embracing lake frontage upon many of the numerous beautiful lakes in that state, and would tend to encourage the propagation of the delicious whitefish.

THE legislature of Missouri has made an appropriation of $15,000 for the use of the state fish commission for the ensuing two years, and the News, of St. Joseph, urges upon the attention of the state fish commissioners the fact that the people of that city donated a plat of ground for a state hatchery there upon the understanding that the institution would be maintained in proper shape, that it has been nearly ruined from neglect, that the superintendent receives constantly applications for fish fry which he is unable to fill, all because little money has been spent there the past two years. Now an appropriation is available it is urged that the St. Joseph hatchery be properly utilized before money is put into new hatcheries at other places. It would seem that good business policy is behind the suggestions of the St. Joseph journal.

IT is claimed that the bill known as the Buckstaff bill, and now before the Wisconsin legislature, for the better protection of fishes in Lake Winnebago and adjacent waters, undoubtedly will pass and become a law. Upon the authority of Hon. Silas Bullard it is said the fishermen of Oshkosh have given up their fight against the bill and are seeking other locations for their fishing industry. It is strange that nearly all measures proposed for increasing and perpetuating the supply of food fishes usually meet such determined opposition from the men whose business interests one would think would be served by maintaining the supply of fishes. We hope the Buckstaff bill, as well as all other measures in other states which will protect and increase fishes, will pass and be strictly enforced.

IT is gratifying to know that the legislature of the state of Maine, even at this late day, has attempted to check the certain extermination within its saltwater jurisdiction of that delicious crustacean, the lobster, by the passage in the House of "a bill which makes it illegal to catch, kill or in any way destroy, either for market, sale or canning purposes, at any season of the year, lobsters whose length according to the customary trade measure is less than ten and one-half inches." Of course the canners opposed this just measure, as they care little whether the coming generations have any lobsters. But we trust the bill may become a statute and that it will be strictly enforced.

FOR several years past the New York State Fish Commission has liberated batches of lake trout fry in Lake George, and the beneficial effects of that policy have been manifested in the increased catches and consequent delight of anglers. This Spring some 25,000 fingerling lake trout will be planted by the commission. The season for trolling there for lake trout will open soon after the ice disappears, should the weather prove propitious, and the anglers are looking forward to fine sport then, as their success during the Spring fishing for several years past—since the restocking—was indicative of good catches this year.

OUR state fish commissioner has liberated some 2,000 rainbow trout in the Illinois River about five miles from this place. A certain man here extended to me an invitation to go fishing with him, as he had bought a new trammel-net. I asked what was the size of the mesh and he answered it was one inch. Then I warned him that he would get into trouble if he caught any of the trout fry, and said that I preferred to use a rod and line for my fishing. It is a wonder that any fishes are left here, for the Indians use poison and the whites use giant powder and nets.

Siloam Springs, Ark. GEO. ADAMS.

ON March 12 a number of sportsmen of Wausau, Wis., held a meeting to adopt measures for the early formation of a fish protective association in Marathon County. Mr. W. B. Moss acted as chairman and Mr. L. A. Pradt as secretary of the meeting. Messrs. Frank Kelly and Fred Burt were appointed a committee to draft articles of organization to be considered at an adjourned meeting in the near future. On March 6 a large number of brook trout fry were received at Wausau, and a committee of sportsmen of that place distributed them in streams as follows: 60,000 in Plover; 15,000 in Little Rib and tributaries; 20,000 in Little Trappe and 15,000 in Little Eau Pleine.

IN its last week's report of the proceedings in the present legislature of Maine, the Republican Journal of Belfast says: "The committee on seashore fisheries has cleaned up its docket and is prepared to make its final report. The committee voted ought to pass, a general law paying a bounty of one dollar and fifty cents per head on seals; same, leave to build a weir between Baker Islands; leave to withdraw, to extend the seining line limit out two miles in Casco Bay; same, to repeal the seining laws in Blue Hill Bay; same, that lobster traps shall not be located less than 900 feet of fish weir."

THE Michigan fish commission car has been on a trip through the northern part of the state planting brook trout fry. On March 14 the car left Grand Rapids for Muskegon and liberated 30,000 trout fry in waters between those two points. From the latter place the car went to Pentwater. When Superintendent H. H. Marks, who was in charge of the car, left the hatchery at Paris he had some 218,000 brook trout in the cans in the car, which he intended planting at various points during the trip. In the nine months of each year that the car is on the road over 5,000,000 trout fry are distributed.

ESTIMATES of the destruction of fishes along the Texas coast have been made by competent parties, since the great freeze during February, which name the total amount as not less than 35,000 tons. "In the shallow bays south of the mouth of the Brazos," says the San Antonio Express, "the shore has been lined with their carcasses for a month. It is thought that most of the redfish spawn and young are killed. This is a great blow to the fishing industry, which is rapidly growing to great proportions on the Texas coast."

In Wisconsin Mr. Curry G. Bell, of Bayfield, has been appointed a state fish commissioner to succeed Mr. Richard Valentine, of Janesville. The state fish car recently liberated trout fry in the waters of Rock, Green, Lafayette, Iowa and Grant counties, 225,000 being placed along the line of the Mineral Point Division of the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway.

On March 12 the fish car of the Michigan State Fish Commission passed over the Air Line Division of the Michigan Central Railroad and left at Three Rivers 18,000 brook trout fry and 27,000 lake trout fry for Portage and Rocky Rivers and Pleasant Lake. Some 30,000 lake trout will be placed in Kaiser and Corey lakes, near Fabius.

The Harrowgate Fishing Club of Philadelphia, Pa., is said to have purchased grounds at Grassy Sound Station, N. J., upon which the club proposes to construct at once a new club house for the use of its members. The club expects to have possession of its new quarters by June 1.

On March 18, at Indianapolis, Ind., it was discovered that through the carelessness of the State Senate engrossing clerks, the governor has signed a bill intended to protect fishes which was not passed by the two houses of the legislature.

The United States Fish Commission will transport 2,000,000 whitefish eggs to the waters of Utah, taking them from the government hatchery at Put-In-Bay.

THE REPTILES OF MICHIGAN—NO. 9

BY MORRIS GIBBS

Ribbon-snake; water garter-snake; swift streaked-snake —Eutainia saurita (Linn.).—This genus embraces a great many species of streaked or garter snakes in America, and the varietal changes which are now recognized are enough to frighten an amateur observer. It is more than probable that there will be a marked change within the next few years in the matter of recognizing so-called races.

There are, I believe, three varieties in Michigan of the species under consideration, but we will dispense with two of them and describe the commoner and better known form, E. saurita saurita. The water garter-snake has a tail of about one-third its total length, which alone distinguishes it from all the other garter-snakes in the great lake region, as all the others have tails about one-fourth the entire length. This species, known also as the swift garter-snake from its quick motions, is of slim build and graceful in its movements. In color, the ground is light chocolate to deep brown, with the stripes uniform yellow.

This snake, which is one of our commonest species in certain localities, has always been known to me as the water streaked-snake, as its habits distinguish it fully from all others of the genus in this section. It grows to a length of upward of three feet, and from its trim, slender build appears much longer.

The swift garter-snake usually comes forth from its Winter's sleep in early April, in latitude 42 degrees, but is not seen in abundance until after May 10. It sheds its skin about the middle of May, and soon after may be seen in great numbers sunning itself in its new bright dress about the edges of ponds and marshy bordered lakes. One pond, with a great many lily pads and many varieties of grasses and weeds along its borders, is in my mind, where in early Summer any number of individuals of this species, together with those of the common water-snake, Natrix sipedon, may be found. The swift garter-snake much resembles the other streaked snakes in its movements on land, excepting that it is much more active, but in the water it shows to the greatest advantage. It swims with ease and great rapidity, and keeps its entire body on the surface of the water, showing that it is used to the water, as all terrestrial species when swimming keep the head alone on the surface. Still, I do not think it fair to call this an aquatic species. It prefers the edges of marshy holes and ponds, and always attempts escape toward the water, and is in this respect unlike other members of the genus in this state; but it does not dash below the surface and hide in the debris at the bottom of the water like the true water-snake. Notwithstanding this species prefers water it still wanders away from streams and lakes, but I have never yet found it on high and sandy tracts well removed from water.

I have seen it catch and swallow little frogs, which it does very quickly. On one occasion I saved a small leopard frog, which was being swallowed before my eyes by one of these snakes. The streaked-snakes always swallow their toads, frogs or mice hinder quarters first, and the snout of the animal is seen at the last as the unfortunate is engulfed. All serpents swallow prey in this way, I believe. It this instance the frog had nearly disappeared down its captor's throat when his snakeship was seized and made to disgorge, and the frog hopped away lacerated by the fine, sharp teeth, yet not seriously injured by the experience.

At another time a good sized water garter-snake was seen with his head in a nestful of fledgling red-winged blackbirds, inspecting his prey. I stood at ten feet distance and watched proceedings. The old birds, ever active to defend their nest by loud cries, continued to hover over the spot and complain of my presence. I do not think they saw the snake, which unmindful of man and birds took a half-feathered young one from its nest, and slowly swallowed it; then reaching up again into the nest—which was built in the grass about a foot above the water—it seized a second one-third grown red-wing and swallowed it too. The whole operation took about twenty minutes, after which the snake went back to the edge of the lake. I went on my way wondering, and the old red-wings returned to the nest and were as contented with the two remaining young as if there had been a dozen.

This species is ovoviviparous, as with all the representatives of the genus with which I have met or can learn of. The period of gestation is evidently nine or ten months, as the mating season occurs in September or early October, while the young are not brought forth until the following June or July But this is not entirely from my own observations. I have never met a female with a brood of young, although much time has been spent with this object in view. Several females which I dissected contained from eleven to twenty-one egg-cases, each holding live and active snakes which were seen wriggling about within the semi-transparent shells, and evidently about ready to hatch. This strange form of development is the more surprising to the observer when we consider that other snakes, of habits similar in many respects, rear their young by an entirely different method, namely, by laying regulation eggs which are hatched by outside heat. It has even been asserted that two species of serpents in the same genus are known to possess these widely different methods of reproduction. But this is probably an error, and time and observation undoubtedly will show that all species of a genus are given to the same forms of life change, and that the ovoviviparous condition is an advanced one and the outcome of the process of evolution which is gradually evolving lower to higher stages in the scale of animal life. To me no other variation in the varied processes of reproduction is of equal interest with this, and in point of study there is even a greater lesson to be learned than from the remarkable form of development in the embryos of the marsupials. We may draw a comparison in the differentiation of development between the mammals and reptiles, taking the surprising difference in fetal life as exhibited in the opposum and the higher mammals in comparison with the still wider variation in development between nearly allied representatives of cold-blooded animals. Among mammals the difference in form, habits and conditions is marked between man and the opossum, yet the variation in reproduction with nearly allied snakes is greater by far than in the comparison of these widely removed mammals.

Much could be said upon this subject, but before we begin theorizing it is better to investigate the peculiar condition known in many of our common snakes. If observers throughout the country would endeavor to learn regarding this strange condition of [illegible] harmless water-adders and streaked [illegible] soon be fully informed, and also in [illegible] erally considered mythical hab[illegible] swallowing her young.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—NO. 9

(Illustrated)

BY A. K. DELANEY

Sitka

Norfolk Sound or Sitka Bay is quite a large estuary indenting the west side of Baranof Island toward its northerly extremity, and is thickly studded with islands. The site of Fort St. Michael, or old Sitka, founded in 1799, is on the northerly side of the estuary and can be seen from the steamers following the inland passage, and is now marked by two or three tumbled-down log buildings far advanced into decay. The old site is far inferior to the present one, as to both natural attractions and advantages. It is circumscribed in area, being but a small pocket or cul de sac between the mountains, and the anchorage ground is far less sheltered. It is not so handy of access from the open sea, as it is farther inland on a side arm of the sound, while the later settlement is dead abreast of the broad expanse of the bay.

Baranof saw the superiority of the present site at the time the first settlement was begun, but out of deference to the wishes of a Sitka chief who was the aboriginal lord of the soil he adopted the first site, paying the chief for the privilege of establishing a post, in accordance with the invariable policy of the Russian-American Company in dealing with the natives. Upon hearing of the destruction of his first post by the Indian massacre of 1802, the governor at once determined to regain his foothold on the vast archipelago now known as Southeastern Alaska, and in so doing decided to establish his principal post on the ground where the present town of Sitka stands.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—THE HARBOR OF SITKA

In pursuance of this decision he left Kodiak in April, 1804, with four small vessels and about one hundred and forty Russians, and nearly eight hundred Aleuts with three hundred bidarkas. At Yakutat he was joined by a large number of natives and two fair-sized vessels which had been constructed there the previous Winter. On August 25 his unique and numerous fleet left Yakutat and the next day entered Cross Sound, reaching Sitka Bay by way of the inland waters of Icy, Chatham and Peril straits the last days of September. This route avoided the open sea from Cross Sound to Norfolk Sound, and also carried his hunters into the heart of the excellent fur grounds of the archipelago, which, according to the accounts of Vancouver, who visited this region in the year 1794, teemed with sea otters.

In the meantime the Neva, a Russian vessel of 370 tons burthen and carrying fifty-four men—officers and sailors —in command of Captain Lisianski of the imperial navy, who was then on a voyage around the world, reached Kodiak. The captain had heard at the Sandwich Islands of the destruction of Fort St. Michael, and finding despatches of the governor awaiting him at Kodiak he speedily set sail for Norfolk Sound, arriving there several days in advance of Baranof and his motley fleet. The Sitka chief, anticipating the return of the Russians and probable hostilities thereafter, had erected a somewhat formidable fort of heavy logs, situated not far from the beach. This defensive structure was in the shape of an irregular polygon, having its longest side facing the sea, and was surrounded by a double breastwork of logs over which a heavy covering of brush and treetops had been thrown, making a fortilage not easily stormed and capable of resisting missiles no larger than grapeshot.

On October 1 four of the larger vessels were drawn up in line of battle opposite the fort, the Neva having been towed into the inner harbor by a flotilla of one hundred canoes and bidarkas. Several parleys had already taken place and the ultimatum of the Russians, [illegible] be surrendered to them, had been communica[illegible] natives and refused. An attempt to carry [illegible] storm, in which the Russians lost ten killed and [illegible] six wounded—the latter including the gover[illegible] pulsed and the next day the Neva opened its guns [illegible]

[illegible]. After a short bombardment the white flag was [illegible] from the shore and a deputation came off to the [illegible] for peace. Three days were given the na[illegible] after which the Russians entered to [illegible] and [illegible] fled, having slaughtered every [illegible] so doing lest their cries might reveal [illegible] of the fugitives. The fort was burned to the ground, and the next day Baranof began the work of building Sitka, which has now become an American possession.

The location of the Indian fort is involved in some doubt, one opinion being that it was on the butte where Baranof subsequently erected his headquarters, while another and, I think, the better, is that the structure was near the mouth of the stream called the Indian River, about three-quarters of a mile from Sitka. Following the invariable custom of the natives along this coast as to locating their habitations, the village of the Sitka tribe was originally at the mouth of this stream, and, near by, low ridges can be traced along the ground which form a figure resembling very closely the outlines of the fort as described by Captain Lisianski. This officer also estimates that the structure must have contained not less than eight hundred warriors, a number which it would be next to impossible to place in so small an area as the top of the Castle butte after allowing room necessary for the erection of the structure as described.

After the subjection of the natives it was not long before New Archangel began to assume quite a formidable appearance. On the forest side the settlement was protected by a high palisade, along the more prominent points of which redoubts of heavy timber were erected and in these carronades were mounted. Along the water front floating batteries were constructed, and on the commanding height of the castle and surrounding that building heavy breastworks were thrown up, within which six-pounders were mounted. As a matter of precaution Baranof compelled the Indians to abandon the village at the mouth of the Indian River and move to the beach just outside the palisade, where the native village now stands, directly under the guns of the fort. No labor was spared in putting up these structures and everything was done to render them solid and substantial. Many of these buildings survive, and in some cases show a remarkable state of preservation. Timbers used in their construction not uncommonly measure thirty to forty inches across the face and are yet perfectly sound. In all the structures a groove or gutter is cut on the upper side of each log or timber, three to four inches wide and the same in depth, into which a tongue or tenon of the log above is fitted, thus mortising the building together, and at the corners and the intersections of the partitions the timbers are bound together by heavy iron pins driven from one log through the other.

Although Captain Lisianski in his account of his voyage round the world gives a decidedly gloomy picture of the place, the spot is now by far the most attractive one north of Victoria. The town is located on a bench or shelf of comparatively level land, long ago denuded of its timber and containing several hundred acres, which stretches from the bases of the mountains to the beach and has the general form of a right-angle triangle, with two of its sides laved by the waters of the bay and the right angle pointing toward the sea. The town is located within this angle, at the apex of which is the butte on which the old castle stands. From this point one of the finest views to be found anywhere is presented. During the Summer months the bay often reposes in perfect calm for days at a time, its sheen broken only by the islands and their shadows, with here and there the curling ripples of the tide-currents. In the long afternoons of the Summer solstice bay and islands are bathed in the mellow western sunlight as the king of day slowly swings his ruddy disk far around to the northwest and at last slants down behind the mountains, leaving the crags and peaks of the range sharply silhouetted against the golden sky. Then follow hours of long, lingering twilight, when the crimson, orange and gold fade into silvery white which scarcely turns to violet and blue, along the northwest, before the silvery banner of light is again flung out across the northeastern sky heralding the approach of another day. And thus, for several days, the evening and the morning go and come together.

It is, however, when the gales are on and the storm king is unchained that the scene from this point reaches the sublime. To the eastward, behind the castle, the quaint old town of log houses—with weatherbeaten and moss-cov[illegible]ering, reckless of sunshine or of [illegible] of them with startling promi[illegible]ital dome and steeple of the Rus[illegible]ring spire surmounted by the [illegible]reek Church. Behind all and [illegible] Mounts Verstovia and Rezano', gloomy and shaggy-breasted, with their growth of dark evergreens. The white settlement lies along the southwest side of the triangle and extends back to the new and modern structures of the Presbyterian Mission, which stand at the foot of Verstovia and seem to be hovering under its ragged plumage; while stretched along the beach which forms the northwest side of the triangle stand the crude dwellings of the Indian village, sheltered from the open ocean by one of the larger of the many islands that are scattered around the harbor. The channel lying between this island and the Indian village resembles a broad deep river, and is the one by which the steamers usually come and go, being essentially the terminal arm on the route of the famous inland passage.

Along the somber sides of the mountains and in beauteous contrast with their dark green covering veils of silvery mist, floating up from the valley, are caught by the impetuous wind and whirled into myriad fantastic forms, while in the opening between the two mountains and several miles back from the sea rise the bald, gray cliffs of the Gorge, ponderous heaps of solid rock forming in places sheer precipices thousands of feet high, between whose walls the Indian River plunges over its rocky bed in its onward rush to the sea. From behind Verstovia craggy range extends to the southwest until it is broken off by the ocean. Down the jagged wall of one of the most conspicuous precipices of this range falls a single silver thread, marking the leap of a tiny cascade; and on such of the slopes of the chain as face the south and west, thus securing the nourishing influences of both the sunshine and the warm breath of the Japan current, are spread carpets of green and yellow moss seemingly of the softest and most delicate texure. But the northerly and easterly slants, deprived of these influences, are covered with fields of snow, whose white is rendered more intense by constrast with the black crags which tower above and by the gleaming blue of the glaciers and icefields below which form a sort of escarpment to the ramparts of snow. On one of the northeastern slopes reposes, distinctly marked, with outlines almost as perfect as if drawn by rule or square, an immense cross of snow which is buried every Winter under the heavy snowfall only to be restored to view again with each returning Summer. The ice formations are, also, during the greater portion of the year, covered with the blankets of snow; but in the Summer months these coverings are each off, exposing to view immense ice packs along which great seamed crevasses are visible, indicating that the erosions of each succeeding Summer are slowly but surely eating the ice away. To the westward of the castle and below the cliff on which it stands is the harbor, shut in from the sea by a cordon of rock-bound islands. A southwesterly gale, sweeping across the vast expanse of the Pacific and gathering velocity as it moves on, breaks with terrific fury on this rugged shore. But above the whistling and the shrieking of the wind rises the sullen, thundering roar of the surf, mounting with mighty leaps high into the air in great sheets and columns of spray as old ocean in his massive breathings breaks his waters on the rock-ribbed islands of the bay. Away out to the sea, beyond the line of the surf and rising three thousand feet above the sea's level, grim and lonely, its crest blackened with scoria and wrinkled with dead streams of lava—the indelible marks of volcanic action—stands Mount Edgecomb, like a battle-scarred sentinel guarding the entrance of the bay. Beyond Edgecomb the mighty waste of Pacific's waters, lashed to fury by the gale, stretches away and away to the horizon's edge. Such is Sitka, seen from Baranof's old aerie, in sunshine and in storm.

Leading back from the town along the beach, past the buildings of the Presbyterian Mission, to the Indian River, is a finely graveled road about three quarters of a mile long which in 1887 was the only wagon road in the country. The park of primeval forest back of this road and traversed by the river is still one of Nature's fastnesses and filled with wild and rustic beauty.

Across the entrance of Norfolk Sound from Edgecomb, and on the opposite headland, is one of the most curious of the wonderful places with which this coast abounds. This is the location of an old Russian settlement known as the Redoubt, founded not long after Sitka was established. The place is marked by a very conspicuous mountain which presents to the sea a front of smooth, black, syenite rock, and whose crest is serrated with a monstrous cleft leaving two black, sawteeth peaks pointing skyward. Directly at the foot of this mountain is a circular bay, covering probably a hundred acres and completely landlocked excepting a gateway less than fifty feet wide which gives entrance from the open sea and one side of which is formed by the mountain's high, precipitous wall. Into this little bay empties a salmon stream which is the outlet of a lake located less than half a mile from the beach, and some twenty miles long by half a mile wide, and held within rocky banks so precipitous that a rowboat cannot effect a landing in the entire circuit of the lake. The Russian settlement was along the stream, and is still marked by a few old buildings recently reinforced by the irrepressible salmon cannery. From the Redoubt a rugged trail of three miles' length crosses the headland to another bay where there is a number of very remarkable springs which possess medicinal qualities to a marked degree and range in temperature from icy cold to boiling hot.

On an arm of the inner harbor, about four miles from Sitka, is another relic of Russian days in the ruins of an old sawmill and dam situated on a mountain stream that empties into the harbor. The pond formed by this stream surpasses all the places I have ever seen for mountain trout fishing, and is a veritable paradise for the gamin, as the speckled beauties will snap at anything from a bit of red rag to a piece of salt pork.

Capital fishing can be had, also, almost anywhere on the bay. Endless numbers of sea trout and tomcods can be taken with pole and line, and gamy black sea bass never fail to furnish sport for such as care to try the trolling line and spoon. During the early Spring months halibut are taken from the wharf with a long, heavy line and a bait of herring. In April, 1888, I landed one of these gentlemen, after a tussle of nearly an hour, who turned the scale at 208 pounds. Fearing to break my record I immediately suspended halibut fishing, but only to learn that one has been taken since which weighed 232 pounds.

At this season of the year the bay is alive with herring running in acres to the school. These are taken by the natives two in a canoe, one to handle the craft and one to do the fishing. This is done with a long-bladed paddle on one edge of which a row of brads is fixed, and the paddle is thrust into the water with a long sweeping stroke and carried brad-edge first through the school, thus impaling the fish on the brads, often half a dozen at a time, and as the blade is swung around aft the fishes are dropped over the edge of the canoe.

Along the coast of Admiralty Island, near Kilisnoo, however, are the great haunts of the herring. Were I to relate everyday occurences connected with the herring fishery at this place, where scow-loads are caught daily for the oil and guano factory, I fear my veracity might be suspected.

Deer shooting can be had almost anywhere on the larger islands. The benches along the sides of Edgecomb offer a capital stalking ground, and on Admiralty Island deer are especially plentiful. Those who hanker for "bar" meat can also find plenty of amusement, as black and brown bears are quite common. Never having lost any of the ursine species, and learning from the hair-breadth escapes I have heard the old-timers recite that Bruin hereaway is not inclined to be overly civil and obliging to strangers, I have never gone in search of him.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—INDIAN RIVER, NEAR SITKA

NOTES

THE ladies comprising the Library Committee of the Cotton States and International Exposition, to be held at Atlanta, Ga., next September, are endeavoring to obtain a representative collection of books written by women, to be placed on exhibition in the library of the Woman's Building. The committee expects to make a collection from all parts of Europe and America, but as the West has thus far not become so well known in this respect as the East, especial efforts will be made to secure the brightest literary productions of western women. A thorough canvass of the Pacific States and of those lying between the Alleghenies and the Rocky Mountains will be made, and it is thought such efforts will result in much of promise aud interest. The board of directors of the Federation of Women's Clubs has accepted an invitation extended by the Cotton States and International Exposition, and resolved to set a "Federation Day" to occur sometime during November.

THE DENVER SHOW

(By Our Special Reporter.)

The sixth annual dog show of the Western Kennel Company was held in the Coliseum Hall, March 12, 13, 14 and 15 and was the best show, in quality of exhibits, that Denver has ever had. From a financial point the club will come out a little short, but composed as this club is no one will ever hear a squeal; for the members, in case of a shortage, dig down in their pockets and see to it that no man leaves the city until all demands have been met. It is the boast of this club that, although never has one of their shows paid, they do not owe one dollar and never will as long as the present members are in power. During the time of this show the Denver people, so your reporter is informed, have experienced the coldest weather, except in one instance, of the present Winter, which was instrumental in keeping the patrons at home. The show was patronized by the society folk of Denver, but it should have been still further patronized, for this club really deserves the patronage of Denver's citizens for its persistent efforts to make their dog show a success.

The club is composed of some of Denver's best business men, and in looking after the interests of the show they have to neglect their private business, which is a loss to them individually, and they should really feel disheartened when, after all their hard work, it is not appreciated. I would suggest that they employ some competent man to relieve their secretary of some of his work, and it is hard work, too. The officers did all in their power to make the visit of the dog men very pleasant. The superintendent, Mr. C. H. Withington, was at his post early and late and did all in his power to keep things in good shape; he worked under some disadvantages, as he needed someone experienced to aid him in his onerous duties. The officers of the club put in all the time they could possibly spare from business at the show. The wheelhorses were Dr. J. M. Norman, Messrs. Lute Wilcox, E. T. Weiant and F. W. Rand, assisted by other members of the club.

Mr. John Davidson judged all classes, starting in at 11 a. m. the first day, and being all through judging, except the few specials, by five o'clock in the afternoon. As usual, there was some "kicking," and there always will be.

The hall is poorly lighted, and some of the large dogs were benched so they could hardly be seen during daytime.

One thing your reporter finds fault with, and that is that wirehaired and smooth fox terriers were shown in one class; especially when the club had an entry of twenty-eight, a large number for this section of the country. The club is excusable for not making more classes, as it had only one entry in that breed last year, but when it found it had such a large entry it should have divided the classes.

One feature of the show which was very annoying to the management was the filing of a protest—the first the club ever had—against the award to the greyhound bitch Pearl of Pekin, on the ground of her ears being tampered with. The protest was heard before the majority of the bench show committee, Mr. B. F. Lewis, who filed the protest, representing Mr. George Thomas, and Mr. L. F. Bartels representing his brother, Mr. T. W. Bartels, owner of the bitch, the veterinarian, Dr. Soloman Bock, being present. On examination of the bitch's ears by the veterinarian he reported that they had been tampered with, and the committee decided to sustain the protest. All of the members of the committee are personal friends of Mr. Bartels, and they were compelled to throw aside all friendship and prejudices to arrive at a decision against him.

The committee seemed to feel somewhat sore at being compelled to decide such a matter, but they came up like men and acted like men in the matter.

One very singular thing appears in the catalog, two different entries in the collie bitch class using the same name and the same breeding, and only a difference in dates of whelping of February to May.

A drunken man on the last day of the show attempted to steal the bull terrier dog Bellerby King; he got nearly to the door with the dog, when he dropped the chain and stood still, and the superintendent took possession of the dog and the man disappeared.

One matter that should be taken up by those showing dogs and the show committees is transportation charges in taking dogs to shows. At almost the last moment the express companies dropped onto the railroad companies and compelled them to refuse to carry dogs to Chicago and Denver. One exhibitor was compelled through the greediness of the United States Express Company to leave thirty dogs at home, compelling him to lose quite a large amount in entry fees; and another exhibitor took all his dogs home. Now it seems to me that the express companies are killing the goose that lays the golden eggs for them. If kennels cannot exhibit their dogs they cannot sell their puppies, compelling them to go out of the business, thereby causing the railroad companies to lose the patronage of the owner and handler in going to shows. But that is nothing to be compared to what the express companies themselves would lose. Every bitch that is shipped to be bred has to pay double first-class rates both ways; every dog sold and every puppy sold has to pay double first-class rates. And there are thousands shipped every year. One owner of a kennel told your reporter that he had shipped something like a dozen puppies in the past two months to parties that had purchased them, and that every puppy averaged fifteen dollars charges, and there are probably hundreds of breeders and dealers that will each average as many more. Now if the express companies continue their greediness they will hurt themselves, and hurt hard. It is time some protection was thrown around the kennel interests of this country. Every Uncle Tom's Cabin company in the country, every field sportsman going shooting or to field trials, and all theatrical combinations can carry as many dogs as they desire in the baggage car and nothing is said, and I for one fail to see any material difference between the above and dog shows wherein the railroad companies will allow the express companies to bulldoze them by issuing such an absurd order; especially when other railroads will carry the dogs to get the passengers. Ben Lewis had to pay $88. Wake up, dog men, wake up, and see what you can accomplish.

At this show coursing men were well represented, among those present being Messrs. J. G. Massey, Rawlings, Wyo.; S. W. Vidler, Colorado Springs, Colo.; R L. Lee, Sheridan, Wyo.; A. L. Weston, Golden, Colo.; T. W. and L. F. Bartels, Denver, also last but not least Dr. J. M. Norman of Denver. Among the exhibitors were J. P. Lucas, Topeka, Kan.; B. F. Lewis, Philadelphia; W. E. Warner, Tom Blake, and others.

MASTIFFS.—There were no entries in the challenge class. In the open dog class Prince Cola, well known, was placed first; he is good in skull, body and bone, and he easily won. Nitzer, second, is a very good dog of not the proper type, being too long in muzzle and not large enough in skull. Mars, reserve, is a fair dog, a little large in ear, too long in muzzle and rather light in bone. In the open bitch class Minnie Beaufort, a long way the best in the class, was placed first. Nitzer, second, is a fair one, too small in skull and ears, the latter being poorly carried.

ST. BERNARDS.—No entries in the challenge class. In the open dog class Saladin was given first, placed the same as he was at the two last shows of the club; he is well marked, is light in skull, good bone and shadings. Judge Tinker, second, is heavy in bone, is well marked, shown in nice coat, but lacks shadings and is too straight behind. Lord Alton, reserve, is good in skull, ears too heavy, nicely marked, a fair mover, and seems a trifle weak behind; he was not shown in the best of coat. Don Regent is a large dog, good in bone, color and markings; he has good shadings and is nicely marked, is a trifle long in muzzle, and was shown in very poor coat. In better condition he would have been placed higher. Mountain Chief, also V.H.C., is good in skull, fair in bone, could have better shadings; a good dog and deserved the place. Prince Saladino is light in skull, not well marked, rather light in bone, and rather small. Major, commended, is light in eye, fair in skull, has no shadings and is undersized. In the corresponding bitch class Mascot Rica, first, is good in skull, markings and bone, heavy in ear, light in color and a good mover; was rightly placed. Second was awarded to Flora Lomond, an eleven-months-old puppy; she is of rather light color, otherwise a good one, nicely marked, good in bone, a trifle light in skull, which as yet is undeveloped, has good shadings, a trifle long in muzzle, which should improve with age. She ought to develop into a good one. Queenie W, reserve, is light in coat and skull, too long in muzzle, good in bone, and is nearly white. In the puppy class Flora Lomond won hands down. Burr, second, is a large puppy, nicely marked, fair in skull, a trifle long in muzzle and is a good mover. Sir Plato is poor in head, light in skull, good in coat, which is rough, moves badly behind; he is a young one and should improve with age. Lady Alton III, given the three letters, is of good color, has no markings, is good in bone, too open in feet; she moves badly owing to a recent injury in jumping a fence. In the smoothcoats no entries were made in the challenge class. In the open dog class Argyle Alpha was placed first; he is a good dog, a trifle light in skull, good in color, fairly well marked, but lacks shadings. He was rightly placed. Saxton II, second, is a brindled dog, markings good, very throaty, and not shown in good condition. There was only one entry in the bitch class, Mascot Ame, who was placed first; she is good in color, fairly well marked, heavy in ear, has fair bone, rather light in skull and throaty. There were no entries in the puppy class.

GREAT DANES.—There were eight entries, one absent. No entries in the challenge class. In the dog class King William was placed first, good in head, fair in bone, good in loin, a trifle [illegible] and is good on his pins. Kansas Boy, nice blue, fair in head and bone, and [illegible] hindquarters. In the bitch class [illegible] she is good in bone and loin, and [illegible] short in head. Madge, second, is a [illegible] in body, neck, legs and feet, and has a good head; your reporter preferred her for first place. Irene W, reserve, is fair in size, a trifle short in neck and has a fairly good head. Lady Nord, V.H.C., is short in neck, good in loin and body, rather poor in head, and is quite snipey in muzzle.

NEWFOUNDLANDS.—There were only two entries, and the judge rightly withheld the prizes.

BLOODHOUNDS.—In the open classes there were four entries, one being absent from each class. In the dog class, Buccaneer, well known, was given the blue ribbon. In the corresponding bitch class, Lady Marjorie, in the same boat, was given the blue.

BORZOIS.—In this breed five entries, three dogs and two bitches, faced the judge. In the dog class, Trojan first, and Czar, second, are well known. Matke, the reserve, is a good dog, stands well on his feet, is fair in head, but shown rather thin in flesh; he is an exceedingly fine dispositioned dog. In the bitch class Olga, well known, was placed first, second going to Bystra, a very gamy looking bitch, shown in very short coat.

DEERHOUNDS.—Douglas, first, is an old-timer and well known. Bevis, second, a good young dog but much smaller than the first prize winner, has good coat, bone and feet and looks the workman. Reserve went to Barry Machree, a fairly good dog shown in poor coat. In the bitch class, Lassie Jean, a rather good one, was placed first; second going to her daughter, Lass o' Lowrie, who one of these days will beat her dam.

GREYHOUNDS.—In the challenge class Bestwood Daisy, alone and well known, was given the blue ribbon. In the open dog class there was much rivalry between the recent importation, Southern Rhymes, and the locally well-known Boomerang, the latter having to give way to his new competitor; and very rightly, as Boomerang is what your reporter would call a big, fine coarse dog, short and heavy in neck, heavy in head, and does not stand well on his front legs. He seems to have been injured in front, which makes him stand awkwardly, but he looks like a workman. On the other hand Southern Rhymes is an exceedingly handsome dog, good in neck, feet, shoulders and quarters, and your reporter thinks him the best greyhound in the show. Montana, reserve, is good in bone, loin and legs, and looks a workman. Donald, V.H.C., is good in bone, legs, feet and loin. Resolute, H.C., is a nice red fawn, good in bone, loin and feet. In the bitch class, Pearl of Pekin was awarded first. She is a big little bitch, good in bone, clean cut in neck, well arched back, a little wide in front, ears prick at times and not any too well carried. She was afterward protested as mentioned in the introductory. Boscobel, second, is a beautiful white and black puppy; head a trifle coarse, nice, well carried ears, good in loin and legs. She well deserved the place. Wild Lilly and Southern Gay Girl, well known, were given the reserve and V.H.C. In the puppy class Boscobe. won, second going to Blitz, a litter brother; he is a handsome, large puppy, but does not possess the quality of his sister.

FOXHOUNDS.—Only one entry in the dog class, Buckshot, who was awarded the blue. He is a rather nice dog, a trifle short in neck and rather small. In the bitch class Bowsprit was placed first and Glenwood Belle second; both are well known.

POINTERS.—The challenge class was divided into classes for dogs and bitches. In the dog class first was awarded to the well-known Moulton Banner, shown in elegant condition, the reserve going to Ridgeview Tenny. In the bitch class, Josie Bracket, first, and Miss Rumor, second, are well known. The open classes were divided into light and heavy weights. In the heavyweight dog class Hempstead Prince, first, and Ridgeview Regent, second, are well known. The reserve card was given to Croxteth Sport, a large seal brown dog, not a world-beater. In the corresponding bitch class the entries were absent. In the lightweight class for dogs Ridgeview Comet and Ridgeview Chancellor were placed first and second; they are well known. In lightweight bitches Margaret Kent and Lady Reveller, alone, were placed first and second.

ENGLISH SETTERS.—In these classes, Mr. Davidson, as usual, followed the Laverack type. In the challenge class Cactus, alone, and well known, was given the blue. In the open dog class The Earl, the New York winner, in elegant shape, was placed first, second going to Count Beaufort, also well known. The reserve card was given to Cincinnatus' Pride. Pop Gladstone, V.H.C., is rather heavy headed, good in loin, heavy in coat and of the heavy type. Gamester was highly commended. In the bitch class, Maid Marian and Clairview Belle, both well known, were placed first and second respectively. Nit, reserve, is a rather nice bitch, too fleshy and not shown in the best of condition. Miss Shattuc was very highly commended.

IRISH SETTERS.—In the challenge class Bessie Finmore, first, and Blarney Jr, second, are well known. In the open dog class the well-known Bob Jr was placed first; second being given to Donawa, a very good dog, rather small, good in color, bone, feet and coat, fair in head and good eyes. Lord Elcho Jr was absent. In the bitch class there were two absentees, viz., Shamrock Jessie and Floss. Lady May Swiveler, first, Nona, second, and Toronto Biddy, reserve, are all well known. In the puppy class Toronto Biddy was given first, the other entries being absent.

GORDON SETTERS.—In the challenge class first was given to Princess Louise and second to Leo B, both well known. In the open dog class Dwight Don, first, and Lakeview, second, are well known. Midwout Alec, reserve, was not on his bench. In the bitch class Maid of Waverly, first, and Santa Marie, second, are well known. Topsy II was given the reserve. In the puppy class [illegible] view, second in the open class, won.

CHESAPEAKES.—This breed was neglected, there being no entries.

IRISH WATER SPANIELS.—There were seven entries, [illegible] being absent. First was given to Rags, a [illegible] soft in coat, undersized, light in top-[illegible] feathering good, too light in eye. [illegible] well known, was second. Fly, re-[illegible], lacks topknot and has too much hair [illegible] coated dog of the lot. Kitty [illegible] given V.H C. Nearly all the entries in t[illegible] good in color.

CLUMBER SPANIELS.—Major G, alone, had a walkover; he was noticed last week.

FIELD SPANIELS.—In the dog class Endcliffe Ebony, well known, was given first, second going to Konn, rather poor in head and too high on legs. Louis, the reserve, is of the cocker type, too heavy to be shown in his proper class. In the bitch class Dorothy was absent, leaving the field to Kate, an overgrown cocker, who was awarded the blue.

COCKER SPANIELS.—In the challenge class Pickpania, alone, won. In the open dog class Governor, the Chicago winner, was placed first. He is a corky little dog, his only real fault being his rather plain head; he was an easy winner. Red Justice, second, is not looking his best, but eserved his place. Raven Duke, reserve, is too large and should have been transferred to the field class. Piper Heidsick, V.H.C., is another overgrown cocker. In the bitch class Miss Mae was given first. She is a very nice little cocker puppy, too much of a toy; she should develop into a good one. Nellie S, second, is well known. In the puppy class, Miss Mae, already mentioned, was placed first; and Roderick, a very poor one, was given second.

COLLIES.—There were two entries in the challenge class. Maney Trefoil was not for competition, leaving Loule Long a walkover. She is good in head, ears well carried, rather on the small size; a rather smart little bitch. In the open dog class Rob Thompson was awarded first. He is heavily coated, which is rather soft, fair in bone, and carries his ears poorly. Your reporter thought he should have been placed lower. Heatheroi, second, is fair in size, good in coat and bone, has nice small ears and is very fair in head. The judge would have made no great mistake if he had placed this dog first. Ornie, reserve, is a nice sable, a little soft in coat, has nice, small and well carried ears, and has pretty fair bone. Chrisholm, V.H.C., is a handsome dog, good in head, good, well carried ears, and light in bone; and if he were not so small he would have been placed higher; Lancaster, also V.H.C., was not on his bench when I was looking over the dogs. King Charlie, H.C., is too long in body, ears large and poorly carried, has good coat and bone, but lacks character. Sir Bruce and Bruce were each commended. In the bitch class Blondine, nothing but a puppy, was placed first. She has a good coat, is good in bone and frills, has nice, small, well-carried ears, and is good in character. She won the Collie Club's three specials. Roseanna, second, is good in coat, ears not well carried, has good bone and expressiou. Beezie, reserve, is a good one, of good size, good in coat and bone, fair in head. Sooty, V.H.C., has good ears, well carried, fair in size, good bone and coat. Chanoline, also V.H.C., is a corky little bitch, very much after the style of and a sister of the winner, only of a different color. I thought she should have been placed second. Prairie Maid, another V.H.C., is a fairly good bitch, ears well carried, and good in coat. Dolly Varden was given H.C., and Jeane L the commended card. In the puppy class Blondine was again placed; second going to her litter brother, Heatheroi, second in the open dog class. Lancaster, described in the open dog class, was given the reserve card and Chanoline was V.H.C., as was also Fordhook Rex, a very large puppy, in fact the largest collie in the show. He lacks character and got more than he deserved. King Charlie, described above, was given the H. C. card.

POODLES.—There were two poodles entered, but both were absent.

BULLDOGS.—There were no entries in the challenge class. In the open dog class there were two entries, one absent and the other not a bulldog, and the judge rightly made no award. In the bitch class Lucy Glitters, a very good bitch with a dudley nose, was alone and was given the blue ribbon.

BULL TERRIERS —In the challenge class Attraction, alone and well known, was given the blue ribbon. In the open dog class, Bellerby King was given first. He was described fully in the Chicago show report. Dennis, second, is good in body, too thick in head, and lacks quality. Spot was given H.C., and Grand Duke, C. In the bitch class Countess Dufferin, described last week, was placed first, second going to the well-known Burston Kit.

DACHSHUNDE.—There were three entries, but all were absent.

BEAGLES.—There were four entries in the challenge class, one being absent. June M was placed first and Doctor P was given the reserve. Both are well known. In the open dog class Hawkeye, described last week, was placed first, and Pump, well known, was given second. In the bitch class there were six entries, and all having gone through the circuit they are well known. Kittie Clover was given first, Fancy M second, Jennie Lynn, reserve, and Bessie Brown, Bell of Westchester and Ada, V.H.C This was a good class.

FOX TERRIERS.—In the open dog class all the leading dogs are so well known that comments are unnecessary. Raby Truefit was given first, second going to Warren Tip Top, reserve to Compton Vindex, and V.H.C. to Warren Salesman and Mister Great Snap; all well-known winners. H.C. was given to Tip, who was not on his bench, and Billy, a very ordinary dog. Warren Tory and Hillside Royal were absent. In the bitch class all are too well known to need comments at this time. Richmond Victory was first, Cowthorpe Gem second, Richmond Pearl, reserve, and Warren Faithful and Roth Rennie V.H.C. Nellie, V.H.C, is a fair terrier. fairly good in coat, light in bone and snipey. Muggins, V.H.C., is good in loin, ears [illegible] trifle large and beautifully carried, [illegible] nd was shown too fleshy; she is [illegible] ud Queen were H.C. and C. In [illegible] second went to Raby Truefit and [illegible] wn. Snickersnee, reserve, is [illegible] ried nicely; fair in coat and is [illegible] V.H.C., is too small, very large in ear and soft in coat. Taffy, H.C., is very leggy and a poor one. Mike, C., was very lucky to get the card.

IRISH TERRIERS.—There were six in the two classes, but only one, the well-known Galtees, first, faced the judge.

SCOTTISH TERRIERS.—Only two entries, both well known. The Colored Preacher was given first in the dog class and Ellen Shea first in the bitch class.

SKYE TERRIERS.—There were three entries. Endcliffe Maggie, first, and Elphinstone, second, are well known. Florence May, the reserve, a nice little bitch not in the best of coat, was in too fast company for her.

YORKSHIRE TERRIERS —Three entries, one being absent. First went to Minnie York and second to Prince Harry; both are well known.

BLACK AND TAN TERRIERS.—Two entries were made in this class, Queen III first and Chicago Spider second; both are well known.

TOY TERRIERS.—Other than Yorkshire—Only one entry, Nellie, a small black and tan; she was given first.

PUGS.—In the challenge class Drummer was alone and was given the blue. In the open dog class Medler, a very ordinary dog, was given first, second going to Joy Bacon, shown too fleshy; he is too large, is fair in ear, good in skull and muzzle, and is fair in wrinkle. Dixy, the reserve, is plain in skull, small ears not well carried, too long in muzzle and too large. Sparkle, V.H.C., is not a good one; he has nice, small, well carried ears, is small in skull and too high on his pins. Lake Shore Knight was absent. In the bitch class there were three absentees. Hooker, well known, was given first; second going to Lady Lee, fair in skull, weak in muzzle, nice, small ears, good in body and light in bone. Roxie, the reserve, is a neat little bitch, rather weak in skull and muzzle and has a fair curl.

TOY SPANIELS.—Only two entries in this class. The well-known Calumet St. Cyr being absent left Beauty alone, and she was awarded the prize. She is only an ordinary King Charles, weak in muzzle, quite leggy, and has one white foot.

ITALIAN GREYHOUNDS.—Only two entries, one being absent, leaving Midget, not a crack, for a walkover.

MISCELLANEOUS.—Two entries; first going to Frank, a fair Welsh terrier, and second to Lake Shore Skip, a very fair Dalmatian bitch.

DOG FIGHTS ON PAPER

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—As a constant reader of the AMERICAN FIELD, and an enthusiast on all matters pertaining to the rod, gun and dog, I desire to enter my protest against dog fights on paper, referring particularly to the recent "fight to a finish" (?) between Messrs. Damon, Avent, Adams and others. If my article will be the means of inducing these contestants "to see ourselves as others see us" and of creating a more congenial feeling between them, with a more general feeling of goodfellowship among all sportsmen and without giving offense to anyone, my object will be accomplished.

The participants in this set-to seem to forget that the name of candid, fair-minded, genuine sportsmen who read the AMERICAN FIELD is "legion." Surrounded by a mist of rivalry, prejudice and malice, they do not realize that at least ninety per cent. of the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD are disgusted with their sarcastic, bitter and almost libelous articles.

After "sparring" for some time, Damon "leads" by "throwing mud" at the "Louisville crowd and their yearly challenges." Avent "counters" and attempts to return the compliment by reference to the salt pork episode. Adams, in his attempt to "force the fight," makes a foul by intimating (but not demonstrating) that Damon is a "monkey" if he does not cover Adams' wager of $1,000. The self-appointed referees rush in and take so important a part in the fray that to me they seem about as badly disfigured as the principals in the mêlée.

How absurd that Damon should imagine that his fling at the "Louisville crowd" would make friends for Strideaway; or that Avent should imagine that his "put up or shut up" and "stuffed with pork" rambling is argument; or that Adams should imagine that his braggadocio and large wagers are any evidence or proof of his dog's qualities; or that the publication of such articles is a legitimate or beneficial advertisement for either of them or their dogs!

While it is a conceded fact that Americans like to be humbugged, it is also a fact that they are every day getting more and more particular as to how the job shall be performed. To-day a horse race must be a horse race not a hippodrome; a field trial must be a field trial, not a fake; awards must be made, and (in justice to our field trial and dog show judges of to-day) in my opinion are made, according to the relative merits of the contestants and not according to the size of the owners' pocketbooks or the whims or prejudices of judges.

Strideaway, in my opinion, is one of the best, if not the best, field pointer in America to-day, and Mr. Damon has good reason for being proud of so good a pointer. Let him brag of his dog in a gentlemanly, sportsmanlike way all he likes, for this is one of the prerogatives of the ownership of a good dog and is legitimate advertising, but he should not fling mud at the "Louisville crowd."

Mr. Avent has a good one in Topsy's Rod, and many others that may yet prove even better. Many like to see him win; a man of his judgment and energy deserves success. He never will be hung for bragging about Topsy's Rod if he brags as a genuine sportsman should. Rod may be a better setter than Strideaway is a pointer, but his insinuations that Rod was stuffed with pork do not demonstrate this fact. If he has evidence sufficient to convict of such an offense, he has a remedy, both civil and criminal, and in justice to himself and all sportsmen should seek it through the courts. If he has no such evidence, the accusation is unsportsmanlike and a thousand times worse than the alleged offense.

These personal differences may entertain the participants, but the public are not interested in them, except to see that they are settled justly and amicably.

Public field trials, not private matches; capable judges and just awards, not bogus challenges; courteous, sportsmanlike deportment on the part of handlers and owners, not trickery; facts and records, not dog fights on paper, are what count with the great majority of the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD. Give us more "Plover" articles, Mr. Editor, and less dog fights, and you will entertain us better, instruct us more, and promote field trials, dog shows and dog matters generally. I would not be so ungenerous or unjust as to censure you for the publication of the articles referred to, for I fully appreciate your position. In your efforts to be fair with all you publish articles whose sentiment and language I believe to be as offensive to you as it is to your many readers.

I was glad to notice in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 2 that the U. S. Field Trial Club, at its meeting of January 23, voted to hold a field trial on prairie chickens in the Northwest in September next, and I hope the club will reconsider its action in abandoning the trials, as decided at its meeting March 4, and still hold the trials as at first proposed. Many of our best handlers come to the Northwest annually, to train and condition their dogs on our broad and unfenced prairies, and I have wondered that their advantages for field trials have not been appreciated and tested before. I would suggest, however, that the week following the Manitoba trials be substituted for the week preceding, for the reason that harvesting would be more advanced and there would be less annoyaace from farmers. I would be one out of many to help make this trial a success, and I believe it will be demonstrated that, once it is awakened, there is more dog enthusiasm to the square acre, bigger acres and more of them in the Northwest than in any part of the Union.

CONDITION VS. QUALITY

PITTSBURG, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—There is a growing tendency on the part of judges of setters and pointers to place too much importance upon so-called "show form," secondary consideration being given to quality, type and conformation, and unless this is checked the value of a show record will be nothing. It is time, therefore, that a halt be called to this sort of judging; otherwise it would be better to keep our dogs at home and breed without reference to show records, which are fast becoming valueless.

The object of dog shows is to determine which dogs are the truest in type and conformation to their respective breeds, so that breeders can select intelligently dogs from which may reasonably be expected an improvement in the breed by judicious mating. But under existing conditions the dog that is brought into the ring looking sleek and well groomed, and high in flesh will, in most instances, under some of our best professional judges be placed over an animal vastly superior in essential qualities that happens to be shown ungroomed and thin or in other words not in "show form" and the sleek dog goes on record as the better of the two, thus misleading breeders and making the chances of producing typical dogs extremely small. The well informed breeder who is able to attend the largest dog shows sees such glaring fallacious judging of this kind so often that he soon learns to put little faith in a show record; but the large majority of breeders, who are unable to make the observations for themselves, have to depend solely upon the records to know (?) which are the best individuals. Is it any wonder under these circumstances that so few good animals are produced and that so many breeders give up in despair and disgust after years of careful breeding? Something should be done, and quickly, too, to put a stop to such judging, which is fast reducing our dog shows to nominal "fat stock" shows.

The writer has attended nearly every large dog show in America for several years past, and has made in the neighborhood of two hundred entries in the Irish setter classes during that period. He has seen instances where his own dog was placed over a very much superior animal because his happened to be in better condition; and has frequently had his best dogs beaten, by reason of not being in "show form," by dogs that were lacking in every essential but which happened to be brought in for inspection with a shining coat and ribs well covered. Does such judging tend to fulfill the objects of dog shows? It strikes the writer very forcibly that a judge who understands a dog should be able to form a more correct opinion when the dog is thin, as its construction can then be more plainly seen. A dog thin or fat preserves its type and quality, and it is the veriest nonsense for a judge to give "condition" as a reason for an award. It may be all right (the writer is not informed) to judge non-sporting dogs, sheep, cattle and pigs from this standard, but it certainly does the sporting dog a serious injury that cannot be undone.

What shall we have but records to go by years hence? There is a constant acquisition to the ranks of intelligent breeders, and, when one is studying out the blood lines, one of the most important considerations is the the record of the ancestors; but if these records be made on account of condition, every calculation is upset and the result is discouragement and finaly disgust. That is the reason so few Americans stick to the fancy for any length of time.

Let judges stop this sort of thing and give the best dog, from the point of breed characteristics and conformation for utility, the first place, regardless of condition. Of course a well conditioned dog is more pleasing to the eye, but what does that count in its progeny? The majority of our judges are competent and well informed in their business, but unfortunately some of them judge the merits of their handlers and owners as conditioners rather than the real merit and quality of the dog.

WHICH IS BEST?

LOUISVILLE, KY.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I am very sorry and surprised that but one answer has been received through your valuable paper to my proposition made February 9, in which I offered to run Lad of Rush in a trial of ten dogs, said trial to take place at West Point, Miss., between March 1 and 15 (nothing barred). The only answer was from Mr. J. M. Avent, which I noticed in the AMERICAN FIELD of March 9, in which he says: "Some of my dogs are now sick with distemper, and have been since December. All seem to be off, but still I will start two, and perhaps three, in such a stake; but if I cannot start a dog, I will give two hundred dollars toward the purse anyway. This should be the best stake of the season." But he does not name his dog or dogs, while I name mine. I have only one to run in such a stake and named him. Certainly no one could or would expect me to agree for them to say they would run one, two or more dogs, without naming them. I certainly have shown my confidence in Lad of Rush by offering to run him against Strideaway for $1,000 a side, and offering to give $250 to get the race on. That could not be done. I then proposed a trial of ten dogs, the owner of each dog to put up $100 entrance fee; the winner to get $700, the second to get $200, and the third to get $100. That could not be gotten up.

What is the matter, Mr. Editor? This proposition was made just after the trials were finished in Mississippi, when most of the dogs I expected to be entered were in the pink of condition. I thought and believed this would have been one of the best, if not the best, trials ever gotten up in this or any other country, but alas! we are doomed to be disappointed.

Lad of Rush and Mr. Blankenbaker left Mississippi on March 15 for home, and I shall send Lad to Mr. Ben Lewis to be shown at Pittsburg and Boston.

J. L. ADAMS.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Rip Rap calls a truce to this "Which is Best?" and free advertising business. Judging from the amount of correspondence of the past few weeks, one would really think Strideaway and Lad of Rush were the best pointers in America.

The old dog wishes to say he has run consecutively, in every stake open to him since 1889, and has probably met and defeated more high-class setters than either of the above mentioned dogs ever saw, and is the only American-bred pointer that has earned the title of champion in the field (not on the show bench), and in consideration of the fact that he will be seven years old in May he has decided (with the consent of his old master) to retire from the turf.

Rip Rap noticed in the last issue of the AMERICAN FIELD Mr. Adams' reference to his proposed long heat trial, which appeared in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 8, and wishes to say probably he (Mr. Adams) would have heard from a few if the proposition had come out in good time before the late Mississippi field trials, instead of after the contestants had returned home. How could he reasonably expect them to immediately turn round and go back, when there are so many youngsters to be worked for the coming Derbys?

Retiring, crowned with the laurels won and worn from all who dared to meet him while on the turf, having never blinked a point, or a trial open to him, the veteran leaves with confidence the task of defending the championship, so honestly won, to his numerons and capable descendants.

RIP RAP.

UNDUE ALLOWANCE FOR STYLE

MANCHESTER, TENN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I have read with much interest the article from Mr. Bryson on wide ranging dogs, as well as those from many others on the same subject, and believing friendly discussions along this line will always result in good I want to speak of another extreme which in my judgment has been carried to a more harmful extent. I speak of "style," and I desire to say no one appreciates style any more than I do, but when it comes to sacrificing bird-sense and bird-finding qualities for style, as has been done in some instances the past season, I, for one, am, and forever will be, opposed to it.

Under the rules I believe ten per cent. is allowed for style, and ninety per cent. for other qualities. But it seems this has been reversed, and ninety per cent. has been allowed for style, and nothing for [illegible] qualities. I call to mind a heat during [illegible] tween two dogs with range and speed ab[illegible] had much more style; yet the other [illegible] birds, never allowing his stylish com[illegible] point, and yet "Style" was placed ove[illegible]

I was very much amused at a lett[illegible] very prominent member of a field t[illegible] ago, in which he said: "I want our club to give the dog that finds the game the greatest credit, even if he points standing on his head." He meant to emphasize the fact that, with speed and range equal, the dog that shows most bird-sense and finds and points most game should be placed over the other one, though the latter had the style of old Gladstone, and in my judgment unless this is done great harm to field trials will be the result.

In this connection I wish to fully indorse the trials as suggested by Messrs. Adams and Avent, and the Manchester Kennel Company will gladly enter two dogs in this stake. I would, however, suggest one change, and that is that the second series should last not less than one hour. I hope all the cracks of this country, both pointers and setters, will be entered in these trials, as it will be a test in the strictest sense of the word.

A. M. YOUNG.

DACHSHUNDE MATTERS

TUCKAHOE, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Not desiring to criticise the judging of dachshunde at the Mascoutah Kennel Club's show, I nevertheless cannot overlook a rather novel and far reaching view and decision in the open dog class, where Puck won. He is a beautiful black and tan, of a type I have long desired to see, not a borzoi headed dog, as most English dachshunde are, nor the workmanlike, but decidedly common terrier head of the German dachshunde, but just the happy medium which should be attained, besides being of a beautiful size, none of them leviathans of twenty-one and more pounds which, if the German standard is adopted (and no other should) ought to be thrown out, notwithstanding their usual good form. But this is not what I started out to say: Puck, typical dachshund that he is, was at Chicago, as in New York, an absolute cripple, and I doubt if he will ever get over it. He walks almost on his knees, and giving such an animal, no matter how good otherwise, premier honors is, to my mind, a dangerous proceeding, especially if we follow out the judge's reasoning, which he expressed to me when I ventured to dissent from his view, in the following words: "He is so good that I would have given him first if he (Puck) had no legs!" Good advice to the owner, who ought to heed this and chop them off, then nobody would know how they were originally. In my humble opinion a judge has not only the right, but is even by the bench show rules compelled to throw out a crippled animal, and this dog certainly is a cripple.

Then, there were two rough-coated dachshunde entered which were not permitted by the judge to compete with the smooths, as he said there were no classes for them. Rough-coats are fully acknowledged, just as wirehaired fox terriers are, and as they were certainly as good specimens as the rest, and the classes did not read for smooth dachshunde only, but simply dachshunde. I really think it a bit high-handed to refuse them recognition, for I think this is on the same line as where wires compete with smooth fox terriers, when no separate classes are made. I do not mean to disparage the judge, as it was simply an error, but yet these things may do infinite harm.

If there is a dachshunde club formed in Chicago let the members see to such matters and also fight the now absolutely overlooked limit of weight, as a dachshund of twenty-one pounds and over is just as fit to go under ground as a fox terrier, with whose average weight he usually tallies in the heavy division; but the largest number is and should be below sixteen pounds.

Tuckahoe, N. Y. G. MUSS-ARNOLT.

THE CONTINENTAL FIELD TRIAL CLUB

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I am pleased to announce that in response to my circular letter of February 18, a meeting was held in Chicago on March 6, at which meeting the Continental Field Trial Club was organized, with seventy-five charter members, composed of the gentlemen sportsmen of America, at once creating the largest club of its character ever organized in this country. The officers elected for one year are as follows: President, Dr. N. Rowe, Chicago, Ill.; first vice-president, George J. Gould, New York; second vice-president, Capt. E. S. Gay, Atlanta, Ga.; third vice-president, C. G. Stoddard, Dayton, O.; secretary-treasurer, P. T. Madison, Indianapolis, Ind.

The club decided to hold two field trials this year; the first to be on chickens the first week in September, at some point in the northwest, and the second on quails in November, the place and time to be determined by the club's officers. Purses of sufficient size were arranged to guarantee a satisfactory number of entries.

The constitution, by-laws and rules are models of perfection, and are vastly different from any yet formulated by other clubs. They are now in the printer's hands and will be ready for mailing in a few days. It was decided to have no membership fee, but make the annual dues payable in advance, and owing to the large number of responses to the invitation to become charter members the annual dues were placed at only ten dollars. In order that there might be no delay in placing the club in a position to do business at once, the Secretary was instructed to request the members to remit their dues immediately. It was also deemed advisable to double the membership as soon as possible. I therefore take this opportunity of publicly inviting the gentlemen sportsmen of America to become members and thereby assist us in making the Continental the grandest field trial club ever organized in the world.

NOTES

IT is a pleasure to note the support given annually to the local dog show by the Los Angeles Herald. In its issue of March 11 appeared the following short and pleasing editorial: "Many new fanciers are joining the Southern California Kennel Club, making it one of the strongest in the state. Los Angeles has always been a good show town, and her dog men have never been afraid of failure in their attempts to advance the kennel interests of their section. The result is that for six consecutive years this energetic club has held its shows. It is true that not all of these shows have been financial successes, but whether or not, as faithfully as have returned the flowers of Spring, just so faithfully has been held the annual dog show, stimulating the interest in our canine friends, bringing new fanciers into the fold and building up a healthy sentiment in the minds of the general public. This year is to be no exception to its predecessors and from the amount of new and enthusiastic blood that has been added to the club, to reinforce the old, experienced and no less vigorous, that has steered the club through open seas in the past, the coming show of this season will be a red letter one in the history of dogdom in Southern California. The election of Dr. R. J. Withers—for many years the head of the Chicago Veterinary College, and an experienced fancier—to the most important position of secretary, augurs much toward its success, and is of itself a guarantee of careful and intelligent management and most courteous treatment. It is safe to say that there is not a man on the Pacific Coast that has had the experience in kennel matters, or can bring to his aid such a fund of knowledge in show circles as can Dr. Withers." The closing sentence will receive the hearty indorsement of scores of fanciers on both sides of the Rocky Mountains.

I HAVE been a constant reader of the AMERICAN FIELD for the past two or more years, and must say that I am very sorry that I have not been a reader for double the time; I must say, also, that it is the only one of my papers that I look all the advertisements over. On reading an article in a late issue concerning Mr. Shirley Stewart's stolen dog it brought to my memory an instance that happened recently to my neighbor and which I send herewith. It will give an idea of the way we treat "dog thieves" here: "Holyoke sportsmen will remember that about a year ago Frank O'Connell's foxhound went a-missing, where, no one knew. Every effort was put forth at the time to recover the dog, but without avail. Monday night a party went to Chicopee Falls, presumably for the purpose of purchasing a dog but in reality to find out if there was any truth in a rumor that had reached them regarding the location of the missing canine. Previous to visiting the house where the dog was supposed to be they called at the police station and got the assistance of a police officer, who accompanied them on their journey. When they reached the place the man who had the dog started in to say that no amount of money could induce him to part with the animal, but the dickering was of short duration for Mr. O'Connell had recognized the dog as the one he had lost, and made a claim for the return of the animal. The ultimate result of a somewhat heated debate was that the Chicopee man gave up the dog and a $20 bill, and was pleased to get off so easily. The opinion was expressed by him that dishonest trading in dogs was very poor business."

Holyoke, Mass. CHAS. HAMEL JR.

WE have sold our imported pointer Sandford Druid (29162) to the Westminster Kennel Club, Babylon, L. I., and he will be fitted and entered next Fall in all the field trials of the coming season. Sandford Druid was bred by the well-known English pointer breeder and judge Mr. E. C. Norrish, and was born April, 1891. Before he was twelve months of age he ran fourth in the English Kennel Club's Pointer Derby, a performance very highly spoken of in Land and Water, on the strength of which I journeyed down [illegible] shire to see him; and being very [illegible] appearance, his easy way of [illegible] speed and range, I bought [illegible] August brought him with Glen- [illegible] hased for Mr. Huber of San Francisco, to this country. We entered him in the All-Age Stake of the Central Field Trial Club, run at Lexington, N. C., where, when at an age when he should have been competing with Derby entries (he was under eighteen months), he ran third to the celebrated Lad of Rush and Wild Damon, a very creditable performance and his first experience on game in this country. That he is a grand looking pointer will be seen from the fact that he has won under all our pointer judges. His record is second Washington (in poor condition, Major Taylor, judge); first Rhode Island State Fair (Jno. Davidson, judge); first Detroit (Jno. Davidson, judge); first and special best pointer in show, Philadelphia (Chas. Heath, judge); second challenge class and first field trial class, New York (Chas. Heath, judge). The price paid for Sandford Druid is one thousand dollars.

Hempstead, L. I. JAS. MORTIMER, Manager.

SINCE the issue of our premium list we have made a challenge class (dogs and bitches) for Boston terriers to be known as class 144A. We have also provided a kennel prize of $15 for best exhibit of four Scottish terriers entered and owned by one exhibitor. The conditions under which our club cups were offered have been changed, and they will be offered for "best American-bred dog or bitch" in the twenty breeds stipulated in our premium list. These cups will be suitably engraved. Additional specials have been offered as follows: The Bloodhound Club offers its club trophy for the best bloodhound (dog or bitch) in the show. A gentleman fancier offers $50 for the largest exhibit of mastiffs entered and owned by one exhibitor. The American Spaniel Club offers the Saybrook Trophy, donated by Mr. Rowland P. Keasbey, for the best American-bred field spaniel; to be won five times before becoming the property of any one member, and only open for competition to members of the Spaniel club; donor not to compete. The Fox Terrier Club offers its Grand Challenge Cup (value $300) for the best fox terrier in the show; the Home-bred Stakes of 1895; $10 for the best American-bred smooth fox terrier in the puppy classes; and $10 for the best American-bred wirehaired fox terrier in the puppy classes. The Hill Hurst Kennels offer an etching of Champion Cribbage for the best American-bred wirehaired fox terrier dog in the open class; donors not to compete. And Mr. William Gibbons, of England, offers a set of the Fox Terrier Chronicle from Volumes IV to X, for the best American-bred wirehaired fox terrier bitch in the open class.

D. E. LOVELAND,
Secy. New England Kennel Club.

INCLOSED please find copy of a letter which I have sent to all the breeders and fanciers of bull terriers whose addresses I have. The object is self explanatory. There are a great many other lovers of the bull terrier whom I would like to reach by mail, but not having their addresses I take this means of informing them that such a project is contemplated, and that a meeting of those interested will be held in Pittsburg during the Duquesne Kennel Club's show.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Feb. 25, 1895.

Dear Sir:—I desire to respectfully call your attention to the feasibility of an organization among the breeders, owners, and fanciers of the bull terrier, as a protection against the reckless, indiscriminate and unfair methods now practiced in judging and regulating the different classes of such dogs, and for the promotion and uniformity of, and a general participation by breeders in the selection of competent and unbiased judges; and to obtain for such owners the right to require from such judges, when reasonably requested, a courteous statement of their reasons for the award in special cases, particularly where competition is close. If such a course meets your approval, will you kindly suggest your views to the writer, to the end that such an organization may be perfected, and if necessary, incorporated, as will accomplish this result.

I have given the subject considerable attention, and am satisfied that something must be done to protect legitimate breeders from the abuses indicated. I will gladly lend my assistance in any way necessary in the premises; and if thought best, will call a meeting and submit suggestions for a constitution and proper by-laws for your consideration.

If some such action is not taken, it is evident the gamey, intelligent, graceful and lovable bull terrier will soon be but a memory.

I solicit your coöperation, and shall be pleased to hear from you at an early day.

Very truly yours,
W. J. HIGGINSON.

THE Winnipeg Poultry, Dog and Pet Stock Association's second annual exhibition opened at Winnipeg, Man., March 5 and continued through the week. Last year dogs were not reckoned as a factor, but this year the association concluded that dogs would not only be a factor in the success of the exhibition, but a leading feature, and incorporated "dog" in its title. The dogs' quarters were crowded every day with visitors. Field dogs predominated in the show, and two new breeds, in Winnipeg, were shown, viz.: Chesepeake Bay dogs and Airedale terriers. The classes for St. Bernards, Great Danes, mastiffs, Newfoundlands and spaniels had several entries in each. In the English setter class the entries of W. C. Lee and C. W. Graham won first and second respectively; T. Billington and Frank Carver in the Gordon setter class, F. Green and A. E. Green in pointer class; J. Howden's pointer puppy won first in that class and W. J. O'Conner's puppy second, and in the setter puppy class the entries of Joseph Turner and J. R. Gallaugher won. There is not any reason why this show should not be a great success next year, and to make it so we would suggest to the association that a premium list be issued and a classified catalog with names of exhibitors and their entries.

A FEW days ago when in New Bethlehem, Pa., I improved a few spare moments by calling at the kennels of E. E. Truitt, where I had the pleasure of seeing some nice beagles, one of which was a handsome dog, a late purchase he made from the Glenrose Kennels, by name Charlie Wildwood (36122). He is an own brother to Clarion of Glenrose and a superb little beagle, with the most typical head I have ever had the privilege of looking at. He will make many of them in his class hustle if given a chance on the bench, and when crossed on Mr. Truitt's stock, some of which contains the blood of the three absolute field trial winners, Frank Forest, Tony Weller and Lee II, I predict a great combination of show and field qualities. Among the bitches I noticed Fannie Racer (21617), Spry by Tony Weller out of a Frank Forest bitch, Nina K, by Lee II—Spry, etc. It is a wonder to me that Mr. Truitt has not been represented at the beagle field trials, as he is a great enthusiast afield and says he has no use for a beagle unless it has the best of field requisites. Having spent all my spare time talking and looking at the little hounds I felt myself well paid for the visit, and I was sorry my time was so short as Mr. Trutt is a dog fancier and loves to entertain anyone who loves a dog.

Sharpsburg, Pa. L. O. SEIDEL.

MISS ALICE M. WHITLOCK contributed a clever little article on dog shows and their development to Kate Field's Washington of March 9. She declares that "the woman who thought beagle hounds an interesting type of terrier, or mistook cocker spaniels for a striking variety of poodle, has entirely disappeared; while the man who knew all that was to be known of canine excellence by virtue of having owned a shepherd dog when he was a boy no longer presumes to present his judgment as final." It is also interesting to know that at last "owners of hopelessly inferior animals have learned that their personal affection has no place in a scale of points, and that the judge who denies a blue ribbon to a household pet is not necessarily actuated by a base partisanship, founded upon a substantial bribe. The effort to bias official opinion by the lavish use of silver collars and pink bows has also been abandoned, nor do doting private owners any longer consider it necessary to detail some member of the family to watch all day by the bench on which their particular pet is shown—a not uncommon sight a few years ago." Evidently the time will soon be ripe for the organization of the much talked of ladies' kennel association.

THE dog show to be given by the Columbus Fanciers' Club at Columbus, O., on March 27, 28 and 29, bids fair to be a success, over one hundred dogs already having been entered. This is chiefly a local show and is given for the benefit of the Columbus Humane Society. There would have been a regular A. K. C. show only that no building could be secured this year that would bench over one hundred and fifty dogs. We are informed that the club has a nice balance in the bank and will endeavor next year to give a regular show. The judges at the show next week will be: Mr. D. H. Moore, of Athens, O., for English setters; Mr. H. A. Bridge of Columbus, for pointers, Irish and Gordon setters, collies, beagles and basset hounds; Mr. Al. G. Eberhart of Cincinnati, for Great Danes, bloodhounds, Newfoundlands, Italian greyhounds, Skye terriers, Scottish terriers and poodles; Mr. John Cummings of Columbus, for cocker and field spaniels and toy spaniels; Mr. S.A. Kenefick Columbus, for all other breeds. Mr. H. A. Bridge will superintend, and Mr. C. E. Leist, V. S., will be the veterinarian of the show.

THE following specials (open to members only) are offered by the Spaniel Club: At the Pittsburg show—The Whitehead Trophy, for the best cocker spaniel stud dog shown with two of his get; the get only to be judged; to be won four times. The Bell Cup, for the best brace of cockers any other color than black; to be won four times. $5 for the best brace of Irish water spaniels; $5 for the best brace of field spaniels; $5 for the best brace of cocker spaniels. At the Boston show—The St. Lawrence Trophy, offered by Mr. C. T. Sackett, for the best brace of cocker dogs or bitches, any color; to be won five times. The Bell paintings, for the best brace of cockers under one year old, any color, dogs or bitches; to be won four times. The Saybrook Trophy, for the best American-bred field spaniel; to be won five times. $5 for the best brace of clumber spaniels; $5 for the best brace of field spaniels; $5 for the best brace of black cocker spaniels; $5 for the best brace of other colored cocker spaniels.

MR. JAMES MORTIMER, in commenting on the Chicago dog show, says that "Graven Image had evidently frightened off Duchess of Parma, for the latter did not put in an appearance." This statement is incorrect. Duchess was not frightened off, but was sold before the show was held to a gentleman who was to take her immediately to Mississippi, and therefore she could not appear. The facts were made known to the judge of her class, to Mr. Robinson of the Woodlawn Park Kennels, and to other exhibitors before the judging commenced. The very many admirers of Duchess will be glad to hear that she was purchased by a gentleman of wealth and position, who is to keep her constantly with him as his companion, and therefore she is likely to lead a life of ease and comfort. I have a beautiful puppy out of Duchess, and she promises to hold her own with the best of them some day.

Chicago. EDWIN MARSHALL.

THE replevin suit in connection with the Irish setter that was seized by Constable Dorney at the Chicago show was tried on Wednesday of last week in Chicago before Justice of the Peace D. L. Lyon, who very quickly arrived at a decision. Mr. Alfred Elliott, who appeared on behalf of the Chesterford Park Kennels, said they had bought the dog from a man named Thomas Duke, an employe of the U. S. Express Company, who had been notified to be present but was not. Mr. John McArthur, the plaintiff, gave the dog's breeding and declared he had owned it since it was a few months old, having got it from Dr. T. H. Hope, its breeder, who was present and identified the dog as Mr. McArthur's property. The dog's behavior satisfied Justice Lyon that Mr. McArthur was its owner, and his finding was: "General property in the plaintiff, and judgment against the defendants for one cent damages and costs."

MR. A. C. SHALLENBERGER has sold Duke Wadsworth, the excellent young puppy that won in the class for St. Bernard dog puppies at the recent Mascoutah Kennel Club's show, to Messrs. Meisheimer of Milwaukee. Duke Wadsworth, who is by Champion Melrose out of Lady Findern, is only seven and a half months old, and in addition to winning at Chicago from seven much older competitors in his class he won the St. Bernard Club's special for best American-bred dog puppy, rough or smooth. He should do his share of winning for his new owners.

MR. G. O. SMITH of Wheeling, W. Va., has sold to W. L. Gardener of Norwalk, O., president of the Linndale Game Protective Association, the imported pointer dog, Ightfield Domino. "He buys him for his wonderful field quality and experience on game," writes Mr. Smith, "as I think there is no dog lives that has had a greater experience on all the different kinds of game birds than Domino, he having first been broken in England on pheasants and then in this country on quails, grouse, woodcocks and snipes. With Mr. Gardener's Monk of Zion he has a brace of dogs that any sportsman should feel very proud of."

IRISH water spaniel fanciers will be pleased to learn that that veteran Irish water spaniel breeder, John D. Olcott, of Milwaukee, Wis, has returned to the fancy and intends to be again in the front ranks with his dogs, as the following quotation from a letter to us will indicate: "I am going to bring the Irish water spaniel up again to the old standpoint. I have a few of the old stock left." We publish in this issue a portrait of his Bridget O'Donoghue (Dennis O'Donoghue—Mallard Duck), winner of first in open bitch bitch class, Mascoutah Kennel Club's show, 1895.

HAVING wound up all matters in connection with his superintendency of the Chicago show, Mr. Geo. Hill left on Thursday of last week for his home in Madeira, O. His work had extended over a period of ten weeks, commencing January 5, and he says that is about all he can stand, at one time, of the wicked western metropolis. He has already received an offer to undertake the superintendency of a show at St. Louis twelve months hence, but it is not improbable he will once more be found in charge of the Chicago show.

THE Sunflower Poultry, Kennel and House Pet Association opened an exhibition of fancy poultry and dogs in Kansas City, Mo., on Thursday of last week. Exhibitors of dogs were: Mastiffs, E. J. Wall and C. W. Richards. St. Bernards, M. Link and T. D. Bancroft. Great Danes, E. W. Towner and A. K. Wolfe. Newfoundlands, J. A. Eden and Charles Henderson. English setters, T. J. Talbot. Irish water spaniels, R. C. Foster, John O'Connor and Mrs. May Richardson. Bull terriers, A. Alexander and T. Boling.

MEMBERS of the Philadelphia Kennel Club met at the Aldine on the evening of March 12, and discussed the question of throwing open to all comers their field trials; the opinion of the majority was to stand by the original intention to confine entries to members of the club and of the Eastern Field Trial Club. The field trial committee was instructed to secure well stocked grounds in the vicinity of Thomasville, N. C.

THE Eldora Kennels had the misfortune on Sunday, March 15, to lose by death one of their most valuable St. Bernard bitches, Queen Margaret II (31291). She was imported from England, and was bred by Mr. J. Hansen, in October, 1891, being a direct descendant from Champion Hesper. Having only had her about six months they have no puppies from her. As orders for puppies from her first litter had been already booked, the bitch's death is hard luck indeed.

THE Duquesne Kennel Club has increased the kennel prize for Irish terriers at the Pittsburg show from $5 to $10; and has also divided the challenge class, making an additional class, 113A, for challenge bitches, with a first prize of $10. Last week we called attention to the curious foxhound classification in the premium list, and Mr. John Moorhead Jr. now writes us that the word "shaggy" was a mistake.

THE Toronto Kennel Club has had some difficulty in obtaining a suitable building for the annual Spring show, but a local fancier writes that one has been secured at the corner of Yonge and King streets. From the same source we learn that Mr. L. A. Klein, of Black Lake, Que., has gone to England with intention of bringing back a team of dachshunde and Blenheim spaniels.

LAST Sunday morning a retriever and a Mexican hairless, owned by Dr. W. Blackburne, a New York physician, died from strychnine poisoning. The Doctor thinks poisoned meat must have been thrown into his yard, but says he is at a loss to determine the guilty party, as he has never had a complaint from any of his neighbors.

MR. L. P. HIGGINS' promising young Gordon setter Lake View, that won in the dog puppy class at Chicago, has developed an attack of distemper since his return from the Denver show, where, by the way, he won in the puppy class and was second to his kennel mate, Dwight Don, in the open class for dogs.

MEMBERS of the Eastern Field Trials Club are reminded of the special meeting of the club to be held at Mr. F. R. Hitchcock's office, 67 Wall Street, New York, on Tuesday next, March 26, at 1:30 p. m. As the meeting is very important, every member should make an effort to be present.

WE are very sorry to hear from Mr. A. M. Young that his residence at Manchester, Tenn., was completely destroyed by fire on the night of March 11. Mr. Young asks his correspondents who have not received prompt replies to be so kind as to write again.

MR. W. S. ARR, of Syracuse, N. Y., advertises in this issue for an English setter lost or stolen from his yard; he describes the dog and offers a reward.

THE WATERLOO CUP

At last, after three postponements, it was found possible to run off this great annual event. On Wednesday of last week a beginning was made, and a great crowd gathered at Altcar. A very heavy fog prevailed early in the morning, and at the appointed hour (10 a. m.) coursing seemed doubtful. Fortunately the fog cleared off and the weather was fine when a start was made at noon. According to custom, the card for the Cup was run through twice on the first day, with the result that the following sixteen dogs were left in: Hawkcombe Head (Townend—Handy Queen II), Falconer (Herschel—Fine Sport), Coca (Herschell—Coca Water), Ivan the Great (Greater Scot—Rota), Fair Floralie (Herschel—Fair Future), Concord II (Royal King—Lorraine), Fife and Fiddle (Fitz Fife—Fairest Fifine), Fortuna Favente (Herschel—Fair Future), Kilrosa (Halsted—Misty), Thoughtless Beauty (Herschel—Thetis), Fabulous Fortune (Herschel—Fair Future), Pennegant (Jim o'the Hill—Glenesk), Melior Moor (Monkside—Miss Birkett), Green Onion (Greentick—Flora Scotica), Gallant (Young Fullerton—Sally Milburn) and Hypnum (Maidstone—Flora Scotica).

On Thursday, in addition to making considerable progress with the running for the Plate and Purse, the third and fourth rounds of the Cup were run off. In the third round Falconer beat Hawkcombe Head; Ivan the Great beat Coca; Fair Floralie beat Concord II; Fortuna Favente beat Fife and Fiddle; Thoughtless Beauty beat Kilrosa; Fabulous Fortune beat Pennegant; Melior Moor beat Green Onion; and Gallant beat Hypnum. Thus, of the eight left in five were by Herschel, and three of these were out of that good bitch Fair Future and from the kennel of the Messrs. Fawcett.

In the fourth round the Herschels again prevailed. For Falconer beat Ivan the Great; Fortuna [illegible] beat Fair Floralie; Thoughtless Beauty beat Fabulous Fortune; and Gallant beat Melior Moor.

Friday morning brought matters to an end [illegible] Favente beat Falconer (last year's runner-up), and Thoughtless Beauty disposed of Gallant. Then T[illegible]

[illegible]s Beauty beat Fortuna Favente, and now must be a[illegible]d to the long list of illustrious winners of the [illegible]. She is a second season red bitch by [illegible]. This was bred by Messrs. H.& W.Thompson, [illegible] by the well-ran courser Mr. Leonard Pilkington, [illegible] nomination of Mr. R. B. Carruthers, of [illegible] Dumfries, N. B., who is the honorary [illegible] National Coursing Club. The victory [illegible]. Mr. Pilkington ran an Irish-bred dog named Pursuer (East End—Ballymoney Lass) in his own nomination, and it was beaten in the first round. Such is luck.

Fortuna Favente, the runner-up, is a red dog puppy and one of the already famous Herschel—Fair Future litter whelped in May, 1893; he was, of course, bred by Messrs. G. F. and C. J. F. Fawcett, is still owned by them, and ran in the nomination of the good old sportsman that courses under the name of Capt. Ellis, and who in 1882 nominated the winner of the Cup (Mr. T. Hall's bitch Snowflight), in 1881 nominated the winner of the Plate (Mr. N. Dunn's Dodger). and in 1874 also nominated the winner of the Plate (Mr. E. Gibson's Gallant Foe).

Mr. R. B. Carruthers has been singularly fortunate at past Waterloo meetings. As far back as 1869 his bitch Cataclysm ran up for the Plate; in 1873 he ran up for the Purse with his famous Contango, the sire of Misterton; in 1877 his bitch puppy Change, by Contango out of Hannah, won the Purse for him; in 1879 his Commerce (also by Contango) ran up to Misterton for the Cup; in 1880 he won the Cup with the Earl of Haddington's Honeywood; in 1883 he won the Purse with Mr. A. B. Vines' Markham; in 1884 he nominated Mr. R. F. Gladstone's Greentick, when that great dog ran up to the lucky Mineral Water; and in 1886 he again won the Cup, with Mr. C. Hibbert's famous bitch, Miss Glendyne. So that the present occasion is the third time Mr. Carruthers has nominated the winner of the Waterloo Cup.

DIXIE COURSING CLUB'S MEMBERS' CUP

(Special Report.)

The Dixie Coursing Club ran off its club cup meeting at Kane Island, Texas, on March 6. This event had been postponed from February 22 on account of the heretofore unknown quantity of snow, which left the hares in anything but racing trim. The change of dates had interfered with the arrangements of members in other parts of the state, hence the entries were few.

The result of the draw placed Lady Eligh and Gray in slips. The Lady's previous performances made her the favorite. A hot pace was set the hare, the Lady scoring a turn to Gray, who was unable to keep her advantage and shortly succumbed to the Lady, who led a long chase before gaining a turn, letting Gray in. The hare was a good one, leading the dogs a merry race for a long distance, Lady quitting at this point with Gray in the lead, who, shortly driving to cover, became unsighted. When the dogs were recovered Lady Eligh was found to be suffering from an illness, which accounted for her poor showing in the latter part of the course.

Rob Roy and Jack were next. Another flyer was sighted, Jack scoring a wrench and maintaining the lead for half a mile without gaining an advantage. The hare outpaced them from start to finish, and at last evidently tiring of the sport galloped away, leaving the dogs looking rather foolish.

Mornington and Dick Swiveler became unsighted and ran at random until by lucky chance they sighted together, with Dick in the lead. Mornington came racing past, scored a few rapid turns and killed unassisted.

Gray and Jack. This brace, as before, was fated to meet the king of long ears. It was another steady drive to covert, with Jack leading splendidly but never getting within speaking distance and gaining the decision only from speed.

Mornington ran a bye. He soon reached the hare, and with very little assistance from his companion killed in brilliant style.

Mornington and Jack were in the final, and it was an easy thing to pick the winner. Mornington, leading to puss, turned and held his lead, driving the hare into a narrow gully, where he shortly killed, beating poor Jack pointless.

SUMMARY

KANE ISLAND, TEX., March 6. THE MEMBERS' CHALLENGE CUP (value $100), for greyhounds of all ages owned by members of the club; $1 entrance; cup to remain in possession of the owner of the winner for one year.

M. F. Smith's be b Gray, pedigree unknown,	beat	John Highland's be b Lady Eligh, pedigree unknown.
M. F. Smith's be d Jack, pedigree unknown,	beat	G. B. Cooper's f d Rob Roy, pedigree unknown.
D M. McDonald's bk w d Mornington, by imp Lord Neversettle — imp. White Lips,	beat	R. H. Hart's bk w d Dick Swiveler, pedigree unknown.

II

Jack beat Gray. | Mornington, a bye.

FINAL COURSE

Mornington beat Jack, and won.

The cup is something to be proud of, and it is certain, after the poor showing the native greyhounds made, that the members will be looking for the higher bred strains, and will have something in the field that will do credit to the club. Already have there been additions made, among them Glenlyon of this season's fame, and the winner next year will certainly have to gallop.

J. H. NASON, Secretary.

[If both Jack and Gray belong to Mr. M. F. Smith they should have been guarded in the second round, giving Jack the bye instead of Mornington.—ED.]

SUSPENDING REGISTRATION RULES

ABERDEEN, S. D.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I note your comments on our coming meeting in your issue of March 9, and in regard to this m[illegible] please allow me space in your paper [illegible] Rule 8 of the running rules it [illegible] all rules pertaining to registra[illegible] the non-suspension of Rule 5 was [illegible] Nominators will please understand [illegible] such rules stand suspended. It was not our intention to do anything to impair the usefulness of the stud book or detrimental to coursing interests. We simply wanted to give every man who thinks he has something that can run a chance to enter same for our prizes, and not having a clear idea of the requirements for registration we thought it necessary, in order to allow all comers to enter, to suspend the rules above cited. We have ordered registration blanks, and shall, on the night of the draw, make an effort to have every nominator furnish the necessary data and pay the price of registration, to be sent to the keeper of the stud book.

This business is new to us and we have many things in connection with it yet to learn; but we are "catching on" by degrees, and by the time we hold our next meeting we trust we will have acquired a sufficient knowledge to enable us to "do things up brown," like those better acquainted with the sport and the rules governing it.

Please say in regard to our judge, that Mr. Stephenson is an Englishman, of considerable experience in England, having judged over there, and whose "father before him" judged for over twenty years. He has never judged in this country, but we hope to find in him a John Grace for this side of the slope and the coming judge of the American Waterloo Cup next October, if a judge has not already been selected for that event. Mr. Angell has slipped before, and we understand that his work has been very satisfactory.

J. H. DAVIS,
Secy. Aberdeen Coursing Club.

[As we pointed out last week, the Aberdeen Coursing Club need not hesitate to enforce Rules 5 and 8, since greyhounds of no breeding can be registered as "pedigree unknown."—ED.]

JUDGING

DENVER, COLO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I know that coursing men throughout the West will rejoice to learn that Dr. Rowe has at last consented to allow Mr. Basil Hayman to judge the meetings of the Altcar and other clubs next Fall

From correspondence with Dr. Rowe I learn that his great journal has suffered by reason of the fact that exhibitors and performers have unreasonably become offended at decisions of attaches of the AMERICAN FIELD in judging sporting events, and they have sought to "get even" by withholding their support from the paper.

I hope, indeed I believe, that no true coursing man in America will so far forget his duty to the greatest advocate and friend of coursing in our country as to follow the course indicated above. I am glad to believe they are above such conduct.

With Mr. Hayman in the saddle, no man who is acquainted with or has even heard of him will doubt for one moment his ability, fearlessness as a rider, and honesty and impartiality as a judge; and should he give a decision contrary to the desire of some, they will not be so unsportsmanlike as to carry their spite so far as to attempt to injure the paper he represents. It has taken much coaxing to obtain this consent and I feel that the clubs will appreciate the kindness shown by Dr. Rowe in complying with their requests.

The members of the Altcar Club are now congratulating themselves that the coming meeting will be the most successful in its history.

J. M. NORMAN,
Prest. Altcar Coursing Club.

NOTES

THE American Waterloo Cup is now full, but I think it would be a good idea for those who sent entries after the stake filled to leave them with me until after the second deposit is due, as there is a possibility of some of the nominators falling out, in which case I could give those nominations to parties whose applications I hold, "first come first served." I will hold all moneys sent me for nominations until May 5, and if there are not enough nominations for all the applicants I will then return the money to those who applied too late to secure them.

F. B. COYNE,
Huron, S. D. Secy. American Coursing Club.

THE coursing association that was formed at St. Louis about a year ago has split up, and a new organization named the Original Coursing Club has been formed. The club's first stake was announced for last Saturday, and eight entries were made, viz., Comet, Aileen, Lady Maud, Lone Widow. Chartist, Eleanor, Loughrea Lad and St. Louis Girl. Particulars of the running are not to hand, but as the judging and slipping were to be intrusted to Messrs. D. J. O'Callaghan and John Egan it may safely be assumed that everything passed off satisfactorily.

DR G. I. ROYCE, who has been wintering in Tennessee, is making his way back to his home in Minnesota by easy stages. He reports an unusually cold Winter for Tennessee, and says he might almost as well have stayed up north as far as his health was concerned. Time lays its hand lightly on the Doctor, who is as keen as ever for a bit of coursing; and though he has no greyhounds at present, he enjoys a chat about those he used to run and those he bred that have passed into other hands and run creditably.

IN our California cotemporary, Field Sports, we read that Mr. T. J. Cronin and Mr. W. D. Murphy have each taken a nomination for the American Waterloo Cup. Mr. Cronin has a strong kennel to chose from; at Merced last Autumn he ran Skyball, Jack Dempsey, Best Trump and Dotty Dimple, and the last two each won three courses.

MR. H. MCCRACKEN has lost by distemper Monday Morning and Lady Midnight, two of his saplings by Skyrocket out of Lady H Glendyne. Sunday Night also had a bad attack, but recovered; probably his name saved him.

A BRIEF account of a small meeting held near Emporia, Kan., last Friday comes to hand just as we go to press; owing to lack of space publication is deferred until next week.

GREYHOUNDS are offered for sale this week by the Jackson Kennels, Jackson, Mich.

RIFLES FOR BIG GAME

PINKHAMTON, COLO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The many articles that have appeared in the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD during the last six or twelve months under the above caption have interested me very much, yet I do not agree altogether with all that has been written, for the man behind the rifle has about as much to do with the killing as does the rifle he uses. I have known men who were good shots at the target with a rifle, who could not hit a deer, elk or antelope in the woods or on the mountain-side with any kind of a gun, while on the other hand I have known men who were excellent game shots, seldom missing if they had half a chance, who made the most wretched work when placed at a target. When I hunted big game in the Rocky Mountains I found that some days I could kill nearly everything I shot at, and on other days, try ever so hard, I could not kill when I thought the shots were comparatively easy ones.

My preference of all the rifles I ever used for shooting big game is the Ballard, but they are not made any more; neither can they be found in any gun store. I have a .40-85 Ballard that I think the best gun for killing large game at long range I ever used. I use the Marlin .40-370 patched bullet and only last season, with this gun and load, I killed a large buck the first shot, at over 400 yards distant. With the same gun I have missed deer at not over 100 yards distant, but the fault was in me, not in the gun. When I have a shot at ordinarily close range I am apt to shoot too quick and therefore miss, while on game at a great distance I take my time and when the gun cracks I usually down my game.

Next to the Ballard rifle mentioned my next choice would be the Marlin .38-55, model of '93 In this gun I would use the grooved bullet 38-255. With one of these guns, last Fall, on Elk River, I killed two as fine bucks as I ever saw, and in my time I have seen a great many. I killed them both as they were running. One I fired four shots at, three of which took effect. He was running in a circle about 100 yards distant and every one of the three bullets went clear through him, the first two, however, not striking in a vital spot. The second one I shot about 75 yards away and broke his neck the first shot, and he was also running. I have the head of this buck mounted and it is one of the finest I ever saw.

I desire to say in connection with this, that the articles published in the AMERICAN FIELD on December 16, 23 and 30, 1893, were not written by me. A friend of mine got me to relate some of my hunting experiences to him, which he took down in shorthand, and then wrote the articles, and he made some errors in regard to dates, etc., and also in regard to the Ballard repeating rifle, which caused Mr. Bruce of Detroit, Michigan, to criticise me severely. I hope the above will satisfy Mr. Bruce.

There is another item I wish to mention while I am writing that should be of interest to lovers of greyhounds. I have a dog, a cross between the greyhound and staghound, that has caught five coyotes this Winter. He kills them very quickly; so quickly they never get to bite him. He is also a good dog to tree lynx. He will kill a lynx as quickly, or quicker than he kills a coyote. He is not a very fast runner, but he often catches a jack-rabbit. He weighs 90 pounds.

J. S. KING.

NOTES

WE learn that Mr. A. S. Krotz, of Springfield, O., electrician of the Springfield Street Railway, has invented a gun that is operated wholly by electricity. It is simply a brass tube, open at both ends, around which is wrapped insulated wire in a series of helices from one end to the other. An electric current passed into the helices from one end of the tube and out at the other end will cause iron balls or projectiles brought near to the entrance of the tube to become temporary magnets, arranged with positive and negative poles, on lines parallel with the length of tube and with soft iron wires running lengthwise on the tube and on the outside of the helices. The balls are attracted by the lines of force ahead of them, giving them an ever increasing impetus as they pass along the tube. The special advantages claimed for the gun are that it may be made very light weight in proportion to its capacity for throwing balls; that it can't possibly explode; that it is economical in expense of operation, and that the limit of the number of balls it will throw within a given time is the number that can be put into its breech. The stronger the current the greater, of course, the power of the gun. For field service, in time of war, it is claimed it will far surpass anything now in use. The inventor estimates that from seven hundred to one thousand shots per minute can be fired.

THE .25-20 Marlin cartridge, which is a recent addition to the repeating rifle cartridges, is now being brought out by the U. M. C. Co. loaded with smokeless powders. The result is that the velocity has been increased about 125 feet per second. The bullet will, of course, hold up better at longer range, for a cartridge loaded with nitro powder will shoot about six inches higher at 100 yards than a cartridge loaded with black powder. At 200 yards nitro powder cartridges will shoot about twelve inches higher than those loaded with black powder. The accuracy of this cartridge loaded with smokeless powder is said to be wonderful. At 100 yards ten shots have been grouped in a circle two inches in diameter; and at 200 yards ten shots have been grouped in a four-inch circle.

THE Cincinnati Rifle Association has issued another challenge to the Central Sharpshooters' Association of St.

Louis for a telegraphic rifle match. The proposition is for eight men to a side and the match to take place March 24 under the same conditions as the last match was shot. The last shoot between these two teams was on February 10, when the Centrals defeated the Cincinnatis.

THE Manitoba Rifle Association held its twenty-third annual meeting at Winnipeg, Man., on the evening of March 12. The treasurer's report showed the association to be in a good condition financially, having a balance of $222.69 in bank to its credit. The meeting was well attended and much routine business was transacted.

IN the return match between the Greenville and Newark, N. J., rifle clubs, shot on March 14, in Newark, the Greenville team was again victorious, this time by 22 points. Another series of three matches has been arranged between the two clubs for $50 a side, to take place within the next two or three weeks.

STEELE—LONG

LAFAYETTE, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The rifle match between Mr. J. E. Long and Mr. Wm Steele. shot in this city on March 16 was so close all the way through that it was decidedly interesting, and the fact that the men tied at the finish was not a surprise to those who saw the match shot. At the fiuish of the second score Mr. Steele led by four points but in the third score Mr. Long evened matters up by beating his opponent four points. From this point to the finish the scores were exactly the same and the tie will be decided in the near future. The contest was shot on the German ring target, distance 75 feet. Both men are crack shots with the rifle and the decision of the tie is looked forward to with much interest. The scores are appended:

CHET.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.—Messrs. Simmons & Dearinger, owners of the shooting gallery at No. 11 Broadway, this city, recently held a prize shooting contest that lasted six weeks. Ten dollars cash was the prize for each week, divided into three moneys, 50, 30 and 20 per cent., and a solid gold medal valued at $20 was the prize awarded to the champion at the end of the contest.

The shooting was on the Creedmore target modified, 40 feet off hand, the bullseye being 9-16 of an inch in diameter, six shots to each score, possible 30. In order to count a bullseye one-half the ball had to be in the black. As the scores will show some very good shooting was done, yet no one succeeded in making a possible. Mr. C. W. McQuonon proved the champion and won the handsome medal, his score being 289 out of a possible 300. The scores made were as follows:

SAN ANTONIO AND AUSTIN TRAP SHOOTERS NOT AFRAID OF 80 PER CENT. MEN

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The trap columns of your most valuable paper, on February 16, contained an article from Wellhorn, this state, the most salient feature of which was the impression created that the "wheel" doctor has been neglecting his business in that town. I was just about to ask in what part of Texas Wellhorn is located, as a thorough examination of the map in my office reveals nothing; but instead of doing that I will tell a story that I heard some years ago, and which seems rather appropriate in this connection. It was at the time when the Texas Pacific Railroad had been completed to Weatherford, which town then consisted of a good-sized prairie dog village, a liberal supply of whisky and a norther. Enthusiasm ran high, however, and a man by the name of Johnson was elected mayor, who immediately telegraphed the mayor of New York City congratulating him that his city was connected by bands of steel with Weatherford, the future metropolis of the Southwest, etc. The next morning the following reply was received: "Where in thunder is Weatherford, and who in the dickens is Johnson?"

It is hoped that someone will take the precaution to fasten the town of Wellborn to the ground with a carriage bolt, and thus secure it a guarantee of permanency until (in the event of some future tournament) a committee of shooters can get over there and bring the place back with them (we are satiated with medals and long for rural property), otherwise some visionary crank who has dreams of an American Monto Carlo will, one of these nights, scoop the town up on a coal shovel and plant it out in Galveston Bay, where, with the addition of a few more shooting towns like Burton, for instance, an island of sufficient size to justify clam boats in stopping might be established. Such a transposition should be very gratifying to the people of Wellborn, especially to the array of wonderful shooting talent, as evidenced (?) by the scores which were made at the tournament held there. The island could be named Wellhorn, thus perpetuating the aristocratic lineage of the inhabitants from which the town probably got its name, and a dangerous rival of Monaco would at once blossom forth.

Your correspondent, Rex (good name for king of the island), states that there are very few sportsmen in Texas who can hit a haystack flying, and that as soon as a man can average 75 to 80 per cent. he is looked upon as an expert and ruled out of all tournaments. As to the first proposition of the above assertion, I cheerfully give way to the gentleman's superior knowledge of such sport, gained no doubt by years of constant practice. Here, however, it is not considered good taste to shoot at flying haystacks, nor to pot them either; our tastes are too recherche for that; but perhaps we are missing a lot of fun.

As to the statement, however, that the shooters of this place and Austin turn handsprings in a frantic endeavor to make vacuums of themselves whenever a 75 or 80 per cent. shooter appears in their midst, I feel called upon to make a few remarks. There may be such men in Texas, but we have never seen them, and there were none such at the Wellborn gathering who could ever do so—not in a thousand years—consequently the inference that the knowledge of the presence of any of those who shot there would have deterred any shooter from either San Antonio or Austin from [illegible] needs a diagram in order to fully explain its meaning] man down at Cuero, named Holzapfel—he of the [illegible] tache of variegated colors, and robins-egg bl[illegible] issues challenges to Northern experts, but who [illegible] of them in about four different languages, wh[illegible] a thing but come home with all kinds of mone[illegible] Wellhorn. People do not challenge the afores[illegible] he of the hickory shirt on Sunday and none a[illegible] no, they let him alone. And there are the M[illegible] Of course they were afraid to go to Wellborn, t[illegible] have done anything but liked the place extremely well; nice shooters those Millers; know pretty well what they are doing when the Greeners go "hang!" An 80 per cent man would have liked the company of those three shooters "I don't think."

It is amusing to know how these country shoots are got up. Some misguided promoter gets to figuring that all he has to do to accumulate seven and eight dollar bills is to sell so many targets (not haystacks) at so much per target, and live birds at 25 cents each, and the shoot is advertised as though it were the Memphis annual shoot with the usual "one hundred shooters will be present" attachment. "Dr. Carver and Jack Brewer will be present," and "coursing for jack-rabbits" added as a spinner. Such a shoot was advertised to take place at Corpus last Fall. We were solemnly assured that one hundred shooters would be there. As a matter of fact there was not one shooter there, although it is only fair to state that the Corpus people had nothing to do with the proposed shoot. These Texas country tournaments are not what they are cracked up to be by about eighty degrees. We do not care to chase ye festive jack-rabbit through fields of three and one-half cent cotton, and then spend the next three weeks burrowing in our legs with a corkscrew to extract the red bugs that have located there. The milk and honey racket also has been worked to its full capacity, and like the cotton crop of last year is a dead issue. We find horseflies in the former, and a Kalamazoo trademark on the can which contained the latter. We can at any time get the very latest designs in both articles right here in town whenever we crave them. We do not like to sleep three in a bed on cornshucks, or live on food guaranteed to stand an acid test. Long experience has dulled our appetites for such amusements, and just because we do not drop everything and rush off to these gatherings where some of our shooters who are business men would lose three times the total of all the moneys shot for were they to win it all, the disgruntled individual giving the shoot, instead of telling his troubles to the Sunday Sun, shrivels us with sarcastic innuendoes at our lack of nerve.

Now, we are going to have the next annual slate shoot right here in San Antonio, and we want as many of these 80 per cent. beaters as can possibly come, to be present. We have no doubt they will like the place. It might as well be remembered, however, that at the Hempstead shoot in 1892, in one match at 15 live birds, the first seventy-five birds were scored dead. This with some eighteen or twenty men shooting: nice place that for an 80 per cent. shooter. Also, that the target medal was won by two men using 20 gauge guns, with scores of 48 out of 50. Wonder what two men of the 80 per cent class would have done there? The writer remembers of killing fourteen out of fifteen live birds in one race and getting back just 20 per cent. of his entrance money. Encouraging this for a 75 per cent shooter. Also, at Austin, where Gus Critzer killed 10 straight live birds and found half the "gang" in the same hole, an 80 per cent. man would get money (third money) in a 10-bird race, that is certain; in anything above that he would be shut out.

Let Rex come here in May. He will get all the shooting a reasonable man can expect, and the men who are "afraid to shoot with 80 per cent. men" will be right on hand.

A LETTER TO ILLINOIS GUN CLUBS

The following letter has been sent to the secretaries of all gun clubs in Illinois, calling attention to the forthcoming convention and tournament of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association. We are pleased to note that one session will be devoted to the discussion of game protective matters, and one to trap shooting matters:

CHICAGO.

The twenty-first annual convention and tournament of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association will be held in Chicago from June 3 to 8, and it is the wish of the officers of the association to make this a most memorable affair in two particulars: First, that of the discussion of game protection and, secondly, to receive a large list of entries to the shooting contests of the tournament. In view of the very lengthy reports of the officers on the subject of game legislation, the directors have deemed it wise to make the convention a two days' affair and devote the entire session of Monday evening, June 3, to the reports of officers and the discussion of game protection, and on Tuesday evening, June 4, to the election of officers and other business that may come before the convention.

I respectfully call the attention of all gun clubs to Articles IV and V of our constitution, as herewith appended, and invite clubs not now members of this association, who desire to participate in the convention and tournament, to comply with the provisions of the same at an early date, and to the members now on the roll to remit their dues and assessments with full list of officers and members by May 1, 1895. The sections of the constitution referred to are:

ARTICLE IV.—Any sportsmen's association or club in the state, organized for the protection of game birds or fish, or for the enforcement of laws against the killing of either of them, may become a member of this association, upon written application being made, accompanied by a copy of its constitution and a list of its officers, upon a majority vote of the board of directors being had to admit such association or club.

ARTICLE V.—SECTION 1.—The annual dues from each subordinate association or club shall be five dollars, payable in advance; and each association or club shall be liable for an assessment not to exceed ten dollars in any one year, said assessment only to be made upon vote of the association, at a regular or special meeting.

SEC. 2.—Any association or club being in arrears for dues or assessments shall not be entitled to a vote at the annual convention; nor shall any person be entitled to contest for prizes offered by this association, as a member of such association or club.

H. B. MEYERS, Secy-Treas.,
148 Monroe Street.

NOTES

IN the AMERICAN FIELD of March 2 appeared a communication over the signature of T. H. Cohrou, which requires an answer from this quarter of the globe. Mr. Cohron scatters his charge from Pleasant Hill, Mo., over two states, besides donating the stray pellets to the rest of the universe. It is true that we have here a colored man who occasionally does a hit of shooting over the traps, as well as in the field; but that our people ever claimed that Lemuel Clay was the champion of his race at anything other than eating pie or getting on the outside of a luscious watermelon, is a grave mistake on the part of Mr. Cohron. Lem devotes much of his time to baseball, with an occasional incursion in the region of football, and has never made a practice of shooting for money, even with his mouth. Besides, Lem has quit shooting; has not fired at twenty live birds out of the traps in more than a year, nor broken more than a score of mud saucers in the same length of time. He is merely an everyday shot when in practice, and when out of it—well, he can do more missing in a minute than most men of his race can make hits in a week. For a couple of years past Mr. Cohron has been harping on this one melancholy string of "the colored championship," and during that period he has repeatedly broached the subject to "our champion," even going so far in his generosity as to propose a match for ten dollars, to take place a hundred or more miles from here, expenses to be shared equally between the two. Time and time again a match barely sufficient to pay the winner for time and necessary expenses of such a shoot, whether for the "colored championship" or for glory alone, has been offered Mr. Cohron, but as often has the attempt proved a failure. Now, to see whether Mr. Cohron would rather shoot his gun than his mouth, I make him this proposition: Mr. Clay will shoot him a match at 50 or 100 picked live birds, from ground traps, 30 yards rise, American Shooting Association revised rules to govern (time and place to be mutually agreed upon), for $100, loser to pay for the birds. A forfeit of $25 has this day been placed in the State Bank of Frankfort for said match and if Mr. Cohron will cover this forfeit I will then talk business with him. If not, the matter drops right here so far as Mr. Clay is concerned.

Frankfort, Kan. For LEMUEL CLAY.

THE program for the ninth annual tournament of the [illegible] Trap Shooters' Association of Missouri and Kansas [illegible] ceived, and a perusal of it shows that the management [illegible] nothing that would aid in making it a pleasant oc[illegible] who may attend. The tournament is to be held at We[illegible] under the auspices of the Business Men's Gun Club of [illegible] May 8, 9 and 10, and Mr. McIlhaney, the secretary, writes [illegible]

the indications at this time are favorable to a most successful tournament. The tournament will be open only to amateurs, professionals and paid agents of dealers and manufacturers [illegible]. No pooling or dropping for place is to be tolerated [illegible] enforcing this rule the management requests that [illegible] during the tournament, before entering any event, [illegible] to abstain from pooling or dropping for [illegible] handicap will be adopted, a shooter's score [illegible] place him in the next event, or, those [illegible] second moneys in one event will shoot [illegible] traps, unknown angles, while those [illegible] first or second moneys will shoot at known traps, known angles. The rise for 10 and 12 gauge guns will be the same, but those using 10-gauge guns will shoot from reversed traps, that is, a man standing at No. 1 trap will get his first target from No. 5 trap, his second from No. 4 trap, etc. American Shooting Association rules will govern except that the referee may use his discretion in giving a shooter another bird in case, for any good reason, his gun fails to fire. Mr. John Parker of Detroit, Mich., has been secured to manage the tournament. Special rates have been secured at the hotels in Weir City for all visiting shooters, while the K. C. Ft. S. & M. R. R. and the Frisco Line and its branches will give round trip reduced rates, tickets being good from May 7 to 11. The tournament will be held at Sportsmen's Park, which is only a few blocks distant from the business portion of Weir City.

At the Grand American Handicap tournament the electric live bird traps invented by Mr. Ben O. Bush of Kalamazo, Mich., will be used for the first time; and right here it may be conservatively stated that the importance of this departure from the old-time system cannot be overestimated. This latest contrivance, which is certainly a radical departure from old-time methods, will insure equity to every shooter. By its use the puller is even unaware of the trap that will be pulled, thus doing away with any suspicion of collusion between the man at the pull and his favorites in the ranks of the shooters. Mr. Bush will be at Willard Park to personally superintend the handling of his great invention, which, if proven a success, will do much for live bird shooting. Personally Mr. Bush has the greatest confidence as to the ultimate success of his method. I am in receipt of a letter from him in which he says: "Was testing the traps and they work perfectly, opening instantly at the touch of the button and the bird starts so quick that there is never more than a second's time between the word 'pull' and the starting of the bird, although they take their natural flight, the traps being strictly ground traps. I do not use scare ropes, as there is no need for them." Arrangements have been made with Messrs. W. G. Clark and Thomas House of Altoona, Pa., whereby they will have a set of their new Conestoga live bird traps in use at Willard Park. The Conestoga trap is operated on an entirely new principle, is very fast and gives the best of satisfaction. The two sets of traps will be constantly in use, but at no time shall they interfere with each other. The best of birds will be trapped at 25 cents each. This rate is decidedly low considering the season. Every detail pertaining to proper arraugements and comfortable treatment for all who will participate has been attended to, and this being the case it cannot be considered an exaggerative statement when it is said that the tournament will be stamped with the verdict of unanimous approval.

ELMER E. SHANER,
Pittsburg, Pa. Manager Interstate Association.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Arkansas State Sportsmen's Association it was decided to hold the fifth annual meeting and tournament in Little Rock instead of Hot Springs, and to change the dates from April 8, 9 and 10 to May 13, 14 and 15. There have been a few cases of smallpox in this city, which was greatly exaggerated all over the country, and a number of towns and cities have quarantined against us, and while the committee had no doubt about the quarantine being raised long before the time for the shoot, and all danger (if there ever was any) passed, still it was decided to change the place of the Association's meeting for this year to Little Rock. The Little Rock Gun Club has generously taken charge of the shoot, and as it never does anything by halves, the committee has agreed to change the dates from the second Monday in April to the second Monday in May in order to give the boys more time, which will mean a most successful tournament. I have already received about fifty letters and postal cards from sportsmen throughout the country asking for programs, and to all of these I will say that as soon as the programs are ready they will receive one. Mr. Paul R. Litzke, of Little Rock, has been elected assistant secretary of the association by the executive committee, and will take pleasure in answering all letters of inquiry. Anyone desiring programs can procure same by addressing Mr. Litzke, at Little Rock.

Hot Springs, Ark. J. J. SUMPTER, Secy.

The shooting at Monte Carlo from February 28 to March 5 was of minor importance compared with the events that were shot the opening week, and the attendance of shooters has been small to what it was at the beginning. Four events were shot between the dates mentioned, the number of entries ranging from twenty-six to thirty-four. Count Trauttmansdorff, M. Journu, Mr. Roberts and Mr. Blake were among the regular attendants and all did pretty good work. Mr. Illoey did not participate in any of these events and our informant failed to state whether he was present, but we presume not for he is not of the kind that stand around and look on when he is where there is any trap shooting that he can take part in. The weather at Monte Carlo during the period mentioned was for the most part unfavorable to trap shooting, which also had a depressing effect upon the attendance. In the Prix de Pomone handicap, shot on March 5, M. Journu killed 12 birds straight and won first money, £35, all alone M. Etienne being second with 11 kills and winning £23. Third money, £11, went to Mr. Halford on 9 kills. The birds in all these events are reported to have been good and when the weather was pleasant big scores were few.

The Battle Creek Rod and Gun Club held its annual meeting on Tuesday, March 12, at S. A. Howes' gun store, and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, S. A. Howes; vice-president, N. E. Hubbard; secretary and treasurer, W. H. Willard. The club will hold its opening shoot on Monday, April 1, and on April 18 and 19, the annual Michigan state tournament—to which everyone is invited—will be held on the Club's grounds. The program for this tournament will be varied and interesting to both experts and amateurs, and will contain novelties not before introduced in a program. During the tournament the team race for the state team championship trophy, which the Battle Creek Gun Club's team has won twice—once from Lansing, and once from Grand Rapids—will be shot, as will also the individual race for the expert, semi-expert and amateur championship of Michigan. Valuable prizes will be given for best average each day.

Battle Creek, Mich. W. H. WILLARD, Secy.

The program for the Boston Shooting Association's tournament to be held at Wellington, Mass., April 9, 10 and 11, schedules twelve events for the first two days and eight events for the third day, all at inanimate targets, the entrance ranging from $1.20 to $6. The more important events announced are the tenth event on each of the first two days, 50 targets per man, entrance $6, and the team race on the third day, five men to each team, 50 single targets per man—25 regular and 25 unknown angles, entrance $30 per team. The shooting will be from two sets of traps, rapid firing system, four moneys in all events, the association deducting from the entrance in each instance two cents for each target. Dinner will be served each day at the club house, and if time permits after shooting the program down, extra events will be arranged to suit those who wish to shoot.

Mr. A. H. Piety, who has long been the champion target shot of the West Side Gun Club of this city, has removed to San Antonio, Tex., to reside permaneutly. Ill health made a change to a milder climate imperative, and in selecting San Antonio he was influenced not only by the reputation of that city as a health resort, but also by many letters from well-known sportsmen, all containing rosy accounts of fine hunting and fishing in that section. There is no man in Kansas better known or more generally respected as a gentleman sportsman and expert target shot than A. H. Piety, or "Grandpa," as he was dubbed by his shooting friends, and San Antonio is to be congratulated on having added to its list of sportsmen a good business man, a genial, whole-souled gentleman, and a hard man to "rob" in a sweepstake at Blue Rocks.

Topeka, Kan. A. J. HAWKER.

Those enterprising dealers in sportsmen's supplies, Messrs. Von Lengerke & [illegible] Chicago, have made another advance step, [illegible] distributing agency for E. C. powder, [illegible] their own business, but also benefiting [illegible] the freight on orders heretofore sent [illegible] their goods from six to ten days earlier [illegible] dealer in the far West, North, Northwest or [illegible] of considerable importance and will be appreciated, as the freight or express charges on small orders, when the goods had to be purchased in New York, was so great that it consumed the better part of a retailer's profit and made the handling of the powder of little direct financial benefit.

A series of team matches has been arranged between the Climax Gun Club of Plainfield, N. J., and the Keystone Shooting League of Philadelphia. The conditions are three matches each at live birds and targets; teams to consist of fifteen men from each club. The live bird matches will be shot under American Shooting Association rules, 15 birds per man, and the target matches at 25 targets each. The first match of the series is to be shot on the grounds of the Climax Gun Club, near Plainfield, on Monday, March 25. The return match will be shot on the grounds of the Keystone Club to be decided later. If a third match is necessary it will probably be shot on neutral grounds.

We are going to try a new and novel feature at our tournament this year and intend to give the shooters a rousing reception. We want all who shoot at all to come, and we think by paying railroad fare, which we propose to do, we stand a splendid chance of having the greatest shoot of the year. The last three tournaments we have given we have added from $150 to $200, but the few good shots in attendance got about all of this added money and we concluded that by paying the railroad fare of each one attending the poor shot would be as well treated as the good one. We wish to see all the boys and have them help us in the good cause.

Waverly, Ia. W. H. BABCOCK, Secy.

At a shoot on March 12 on Frank Class' grounds at Morristown, N. J., where about a dozen cracks had entered, only four put in an appearance, viz.: Messrs. Class, Morfey, Fulford and Timmons. The conditions were 50 live birds, $25 entrance. The entrance money, with $50 added, was divided between Messrs. Class, Morfey and Fulford, respectively, at the rate of 50, 30 and 20 per cent. With snow and rain falling it made difficult shooting, as at times it was hard to see birds much beyond the traps. Class missed only his twenty first bird, scoring 49 out of 50, Morfey falling behind by four birds and leading Fulford one bird. Mr. Timmons scored only 35

The Keithsburg (Ill.) Gun Club will hold a three days' tournament on inanimate targets on April 17, 18 and 19. Mr. E. L. Tobie, the secretary of the club, writing us regarding the tournament says: "The tournament will be a grand one. The entrance will be large and none but 'sporty' boys need come, for there will be no shooting on the side for the price of the birds; all must shoot for their good money and may the best man win. No person barred; no handicaps; no kicking. Let the boys come to a shoot where 'the bridle will be off from start to finish,' and they will all return to their homes feeling that it was well to have been here."

The Ideal Manufacturing Company of New Haven, Conn., has purchased the sole right to hereafter manufacture the Spangler Crimper. In notifying us of this fact the firm says toat it will continue to manufacture the crimper from first-class material and can guarantee it in every respect. It will hereafter pass under the name of the "Spangler Ideal Closer," and orders for it should be sent direct to the manufacturers or their jobbers, specifying as above. The company has also made an improvement recently on the "Ideal High Grade Closer," and think in it will now be found a closer that is almost perfection itself.

Mr. W. H. Skinner, representing the Leouard Powder Co., of Baychester, N. Y., called at the American Field office on Saturday last and exhibited a sample of the new Leonard hard-grained nitro powder. Formerly this powder was black and the grain soft, but as made at present the grain is hard and in color looks very much like ordinary sand. The company, we understand, is not now taking orders for this new powder for immediate delivery, but as soon as it is ready to do so will make proper announcement in the advertising columns of the American Field.

A new gun club was recently organized in this city under the name of the Home City Gun Club. The club started with a charter list of fifty members and now has on file about that many more applications. Each member pledges himself to abstain from hunting game out of season and to use his best endeavors to restrain others from killing game illegally. The club expects to hold a tournament during the Summer, due notice of which will be sent to the American Field,

Springfield, O. FRANK WRAGG, Secy.

That excellent all-around sportsman, business man and jolly good fellow, Mr. Fred W. Quimby, of New York City, made the American Field a pleasant call last week Thursday. Speaking of business, Mr. Quimby expressed himself very well pleased with what he had secured up to date, and spoke cheerfully of the outlook for the coming shooting season. He will visit Chicago again in June, so as to be in attendance upon the annual tournament of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association.

Mr. John L. Brewer paid forfeit in his first match of a series of three with Mr. Frank Class, which was to have been shot on Erb's grounds, Newark, N. J. Mr. Class was promptly on hand and as time passed and Brewer failed to materialize, he grew warm over the action of his expected antagonist. No explanation was vouchsafed by Capt. Brewer. The match was to have been at 100 live birds per man, $100 a side, 30 yards rise, 50 yards boundary, the loser to pay for all the birds.

At the recent annual business meeting of the St. Thomas Gun Club, the treasurer's report showed the club to be in a prosperous financial condition, there being a balance on hand of $89.05 after all claims against the club were paid. The assets of the club are valued at $316.33. There are over sixty members in the club. During the past year four matches were shot, two with Chatham and two with Port Stanley clubs, the home club being the victors in each instance.

St. Thomas, Ont. W. J. KIEFFER, Sec'y.

As stated in these columns last week, a team from the University of North Carolina Gun Club and a team from the Greensboro (N. C.) Gun Club will shoot a race at Greensboro on April 6. The gun club of Charlotte has also been invited to enter a team in the contest, and it is probable that it will, and if it does the three clubs, after the contest, will organize a game protective association, the objects of which will be the better enforcement of the game laws of the state.

The Goshen Gun Club will hold a three days' tournament on the club's grounds at Goshen, Ind., on April 23, 24 and 25. The club's motto for this tournament will be: "No one barred, but a class for all." With such an invitation to the trap shooters of the country the attendance at the tournament should be large enough to be gratifying to the most enthusiastic member of the club.

The old Fountain Gun Club, once a famous organization, has about completed plans for reorganization. The idea of the committee in charge is, to have some small but thoroughly first-class organization join them and make one strong and first-class club. A date has already been secured at Dexter Park, which will soon be announced.

Numerous attempts have been made in Maryland recently to stop live bird shooting at the traps. Several shooters have been arrested on the charge of cruelty to animals, but in each instance, at the trial, the court held that the case did not come under the law for prevention of crucity to animals, and the men were therefore acquitted.

The Hot Springs (S. D.) Gun Club, owing to the fact that Mr. F. S. Crabill, who was to manage the tournament, has moved to Sheridan, Wyo., has declared its tournament, which was to have been held in August, off. Mr. Crabill will give a tournament at Sheridan sometime during the Summer, date of which has not yet been decided on.

The Kenslugton (Pa.) Gun Club is making arrangements for a live bird tournament on its grounds near Bustleton, on April 4. The program will comprise a number of sweepstake events, under Rhode Island rules, miss and out system, and several at a designated number of birds, 30 yards rise, 30 yards boundary, Hurlingham rules.

A three days' tournament at live birds and targets will be held at London, Ont., on April 9, 10 and 11, at which experts will be handicapped by distance and unknown angles. Mr. John Parker of Detroit, Mich., has been engaged to manage the tournament, which is a guarantee that it will be run in the best possible manner.

The second annual tournament of the Montana State Sportsman's Association will be held at Butte, Mont., on May 17, 18 and 19, under the auspices of the Butte Rod and Gun Club. Programs can be obtained after April 15 by addressing the secretary of the association, Mr. C. H. Smith, Butte, Mont.

Messrs. Phil Daly Jr., Jas. Cooper, E. M. Cooper, Albert Ivins and Oscar Hesse Sr., are a team selected by the Riverside Gun Club to represent it in the New Jersey State League shoot at Springfield, N. J., March 27.

At the Standard Gun Club's tournament to be held at Point Breeze, Md., on April 15, in the team contest, which is open only to residents of Maryland, $25 will be awarded to the winning team.

It is said that Mr. B. F. Wright, of Hartwell, O., has patented a new trap for throwing inanimate targets that is quite different and much superior to any trap now in use.

The E. C. Powder Co., of Oakland, N. J., write us that the Simmons Hardware Co., of St. Louis, Mo., has been made a distributing agency for E. C. powder.

The Harrisburg (Pa.) Shooting Association will hold a special live bird handicap shoot on April 11, the handicap to be from 25 yards to 33 yards.

A two days' tournament will be held by the Auburn (N. Y.) Gun on April 17 and 18.

THE WORCESTER SPORTSMEN'S CLUB TOURNAMENT

Worcester, Mass.

Editor American Field:—The tournament of the Worcester Sportsmen's Club, held on March 6 and 7, was well attended considering the time of year and the bad weather usual during the month of March. The shooting also was above the average while some of the scores made were good enough to satisfy anybody, Jones, Bowker, Dickey, Leroy and Wheeler all doing excellent work.

The annual meeting of the club was held on the evening of the first day of the tournament, in the parlors of the Lincoln House, the principal business being the election of officers for the current year. Mr. Moses D. Gilman, who has served the club as its president for several years, declined a renomination, and Mr. William L. Davis, an old and very popular member of the club, was chosen to fill this important office. Mr. Colvin, who had served as the club's treasurer, also declined to serve another year, and for this office Mr. F. M. Harris was elected. A. W. Walls, who has made such an excellent secretary, was prevailed upon to continue in the harness and was reëlected for the fourth consecutive term. The other officers elected were: First vice-president, E. D. Buffington; second vice-president, J. F. Mascroft; executive committee, V. D. Keuerson, C. W. Walls, A. L. Gilman and M. P. Roach.

The meeting over, the members of the club and a number of invited guests repaired to the dining-room of the hotel, where an excellent dinner was served by Landlord Frost. Plates had been laid for fifty and an excellent menu prepared, which was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

After dinner an hour or more was spent in responses to toasts, addresses, discussions, etc., and at a late hour, after a most enjoyable and profitable evening's entertainment, those present bade each other good night and returned to their homes, first deciding that hereafter a banquet should be held in connection with each annual meeting of the club.

Twelve events were on the program for the first day and in addition to these three extras were also shot. The scores in detail are given below:

Event No. 1.—10 single targets per man: Jones and Dickey, first, 10 birds each; Parris, Davis, Bowker and Puck, second, 9 birds each; Leroy, Wheeler, Mascroft and Courtney, third, 8 birds each; Tolman and Hobart, fourth, 7 birds each.

Event No. 2.—10 birds: Dickey and Wheeler, first, 10 birds each; Parris, Jones and Leroy, second, 9 birds each; Tolman, Mascroft, Davis and Gilman, third, 8 birds each; Bowker and Puck, fourth, 7 birds each.

Event No. 3.—10 birds, known traps, unknown angles: Leroy, Parris, Snow, Jones and Courtney, first, 9 birds each; Mascroft, Wheeler, Davis, Dickey, Puck and Walls, second, 8 birds each, Tolman and Hobart, third, 7 birds each: Gilman and Bowker, fourth, 6 birds each.

Event No. 4.—20 birds, known traps, unknown angles.

THE GIBSON CITY TOURNAMENT

GIBSON CITY, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Something out of the usual way has come to pass. A shooting tournament was held here on March 6 and 7 without the aid of a shooting club, not a man of the town taking part in the shoot, and without any traps save borrowed ones. The great and only sparrow man, Mr. Hill, of Indianapolis, loaned the sparrow traps, Capt. A. H. Bogardus the pigeon traps, and the target traps came from all over the country and were a rare combination, consisting of midgets, etc. The thanks of the managers and the shooters present are due "Tramp" Irwin, for had he not appeared upon the ground with targets and carriers there would have been no shooting the first day except, possibly, a sparrow match. The management found out that depending upon the commission houses in Chicago for live pigeons will not do. They will know in the future that most of the pigeons that go to Chicago are consigned to John Watson. The management succeeded in getting birds enough for the Bogardus—Emery match.

The weather was fine and the attendance of shooters good, and they proved gritty stayers, even if the rabbit's foot was a winner in almost every event. This shoot will act as an incentive to the Gibson shooters to organize and hold regular tournaments in the future.

The individual match between "Tramp" Irwin and W. B. Linell, the American Wood powder champion of Pontiac, was postponed the first day for want of targets.

The attraction in the afternoon was the unfinished match between Capt Bogardus and Mr. Emery that had such an untimely ending at Saybrook on February 22. In the first twenty-five birds Mr. Emery killed eighteen and was one to the good. In the finish, after Capt. Bogardus had shot at five and scored, Mr. Emery five dead, Mr. Emery had lost one the most and the first match at 50 live birds, Bogardus rules, was a tie. It was agreed that this match should be decided by the result of the match to be shot the following day.

The scores in the tournament shooting the first day were as follows:

SHOOT No. 1.—10 Blackbirds, entrance $1.20: Linell 10, Stewart 10, Mortimer 10, Smith 10, Short 9, "Tramp" 8, Bowman 8, Meyers 7, Lyons 6, Miner 4.

SHOOT No. 2—10 Blackbirds, entrance $1.20: Linell first with 10, "Tramp" and Stewart second, Short, Bowman and Archer third, Smith fourth.

SHOOT No 3.—10 singles, entrance $1.20: Marshall and Smith 10, Linell, Meyers, Stewart and "Tramp" 9, McBarnes 8, Miner, Morris and Bowman 7.

BOGARDUS—EMERY

This was an ideal day for a match. Little wind, sun shining; yet soft under foot and some banks of drifted snow in the background which seemed to make the "getting on" to white birds rather difficult. At any rate, the conditions of the atmosphere or something else permitted a number of birds to get beyond the boundary line.

The conditions of this match were 50 birds, American Shooting Association rules to govern; but as there were only two traps on the ground it was agreed between the contestants that this match should be same as the first one, viz.: Bogardus rules, gun below elbow, one barrel only, bird to fly ten yards before being shot at.

Captain Bogardus took the lead and shot at ten birds, scoring eight. He gave Emery ten dead birds to start with and thus at the beginning of his string Mr. Emery was two ahead. From this time on it was about an even thing, though each had bad luck on a bird or two that fell dead out of bounds. There is a great contrast in the two men. Bogardus, the giant, although over sixty years old, does not appear to be fifty. Emery is young, fresh and full of vigor, and possesses a pair of blue eyes that indicate a great shooter. Emery did not keep his gun well below the elbow, because of the habit of shooting targets with the gun well up. It was remarked by many that Capt. Bogardus did not center nor kill his birds as dead as did Emery, and the contrast between the reports and smoke of black and nitro powder was never more noticeable. It made one think of the old times of 20 years ago to hear the cannon-like report of Capt. Bogardus' Smith gun, while Emery's did not assume as large proportions as a Fourth of July firecracker. The latter was using a small load of Schultze powder and his gun appeared to shoot very close. The birds were a good lot, but one being refused.

Capt. Bogardus used an L. C. Smith gun, 3½ drams of black powder in Blue Rival shells and 1¼ ounces of No. 7 shoot.

Mr. Emery used an L. C. Smith gun, 3 drams of Schultze powder in U. M. C. Smokeless cases, and 1⅛ ounces of No. 7 chilled shot.

W. B. Linell of Pontiac was chosen referee and he performed his duty well. The Hon. Tom Marshall of Keithsburg was pressed into service to see that the traps were properly pulled, and he "smole a smile" when some of the birds got away. The scores:

SPECIAL BLACKBIRD RACE

W. B. Linell of Pontiac and W. "Tramp" Irwin of Peoria were next called upon to shoot their match at 100 targets. Some delay was caused by the difficulty "Tramp" had in properly arranging the traps, and when the race was on it was almost a certainty that Irwin would be beaten, especially as he had consented to give Mr. Linell such great odds. The arrangement was that Linell should shoot known traps and angles, walk around, while Irwin should shoot from five unknown traps. The score in the first fifty will show that "Tramp" was doing great work, as he lost only six, while Linell lost nine. But here the "old man" got rattled and went astray. The race was a tie at sixty, and in the next ten Irwin lost five in succession and Linell broke straight. Irwin continued to occasionally miss one until he lost fourteen out of the last fifty, while Linell lost only three, making the great score of 47 out of 50.

Quite an interest was taken in the race and many other matches were talked of, but none were "salted." Several shooters wanted the same kind of a race against Irwin, but he had seen the folly of such matches and offered to shoot anybody present a race on equal terms, five unknown traps.

Mr. Linell used an 8-pound Lefever gun, U. M. C. Smokeless shells loaded with 3½ drams of American Wood powder, two cardboard, two blackedge and one cardboard wad on powder, with 1¼ ounces of No. 7 chilled shot.

Mr. Irwin used his old stand-by Parker hammerless gun, weighing 8 ponnds, and his load was 3 drams of Du Pont Smokeless powder in a Rapid shell, with 1⅛ ounces of No. 8 chilled shot.

Both guns and loads were effective and ground the targets to atoms. Not a "dusted" target was noticed during the match.

The Hon. Tom Marshall, ever ready to assist his friends, was pressed into service and filled the thankless position of referee with entire satisfaction. The scores:

VETERAN.

ROCKAWAY POINT ROD AND GUN CLUB

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—About 2,000 targets were thrown at the regular March shoot of the above named organization. Empire targets and five traps were used, and the shooting was of the hardest, as the events will show. Handicaps were allowed the less expert marksmen, and under the supervision of Mr. John Fleming the birds were thrown under the many different conditions with dispatch. The averages were as follows: Schorty .804, Wash .763, Edwards .665, Scott .621, McManus .724, Tiernan .770, Woods .782, the last named three shooting only in part of the events. Others, whose averages are not figured, shot occasionally. Moneys were divided under the "straight out" system, that gives no one an incentive to drop for place.

The gun and powders used by the different contestants were as follows: Schortemeier, Parker and E. C.; Wash, Greener, Leonard and E. C.; Scott, Scott and E. C.; Mulcahey, Parker and Schultze; Tiernan, Daly and E. C.; Edwards, Winchester repeater and Du Pont's smokeless; Woods, Greener and American Wood; McKenna, Smith and black; Walsh, Machine Arms Co. and E. C.; E. Bourke, Rigby and E. C.; Keim, Smith and E. C.; Spot, Clabrough and E. C.; Lyons, Parker and E. C.; McManus, Parker and E. C.; Katt, Parker and E. C.

The scores made were as appended:

PHŒNIX GUN CLUB'S TOURNAMENT

PORT DOVER, ONT.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Owing to the heavy snowstorm on March 4, which blocked many of the country roads, quite a number of sportsmen were prevented from attending the above club's tournament on March 6, although the day was perfect.

Aside from a little delay in starting and one of the traps giving some trouble, everything went off pleasantly, making our first tournament a decided success in more ways than one. Another year we hope to present a more attractive program and good purses, which we trust will induce some of the professionals to visit our little town.

The events were all shot from three screened traps, rapid fire system, and the purses were divided 40, 30, 20 and 10 per cent. Straight shooting throughout; known traps and angles unless otherwise specified.

EXTRAS FOR PRACTICE: J. Fick shot at 30, scored 12; S. Butler shot at 12, scored 3; F. Thorold shot at 6, scored 4.

EVENT No. 1.—12 singles, 50 cents entrance: J. Fick 6, F. Thorold 10, H. Marlatt 10, G. W. Price 8.

EVENT No. 2.—15 singles, 50 cents entrance.

Price won first money; Marlatt second; Fick third; fourth divided by Renton and McQueen.

Guns used: Price a Spencer repeater; H. McQueen a Burgess repeater; Marlatt and Renton, Clabroughs; J. Fisk an Ithaca hammerless; Landon an L. C. Smith hammerless; Fick a Winchester repeater; Wells a Bonehill.

Powders: Marlatt and Price used Du Pont's and E. C. smokeless and some black powder; Fick used Du Pont's smokeless; others used black powder mostly.

During the latter part of the shoot someone raised the cry "look at the wild geese!" This caused shooters, trappers, scorers and all to gaze at the supposed "honkers," when another wag remarked, "only sawbills," and all resumed work again coutentedly.

NEW UTRECHT GUN CLUB

President Sykes and Mr. Deacon of this club have of late been trying to make the shoots of the club attractive at targets as well as at live birds. The events below show how well the different target events were patronized and the successful shooters. The club has live bird events on hand with the Riverton and Peekskill gun clubs, to be decided in the next two or three weeks. First is home and home match with the Rivertons of Philadelphia, ten men to a side. With the Peekskill club there is to be fifteen men to a side. Following are the scores made Thursday, March 14.

EVENT No. 1.—Introductory sweepstakes, handicap, at 10 inanimate targets per man, known angles, 16 yards rise: Dr. Littlefield, first entry, 3, second entry, 6; Milton F. Lindsley 6, Gus F. Grieff 8, D. C. Bennett 6, H. A. Porter 6, M. Van Brunt 8, D. Deacon 9, "Wanda" 5, A. A. Hagemann 8, Walter D. Gilman 5, J. Lott 4.

EVENT No. 2—Same conditions: Deacon 9, Bennett 8, Van Brunt 7, Porter 4, Lindsley 4, "Wanda" 5.

EVENT No. 3.—Same conditions: Bennett 8, Van Brunt 9, Porter 6, Deacon 9, Lindsley 7, Grieff 10.

EVENT No. 4.—Club shooting competition. Special handicap at 20 single inanimate targets, and 5 doubles; handicap, classified allowances, all standing at sixteen yards: Class A—Deacon 25, Van Brunt 23, Hageman (w) 17, Grieff 22, Lindsley 15, Cornelius Ferguson Jr. 19. Class B—Dr Littlefield 19, Bennett 24. Class C—Lott 15, Porter 23, Gilman 11, Harry P. Fessenden 22. Deacon won first money, D. C. Bennett second, while Van Brunt and Porter divided third and Grieff and Fessenden fifth.

EVENT No. 5.—10 singles, known angles, same conditions as first event: Dr. Pool 10, Bennett 9, Grieff 7, Dr. O'Brien 8, Lindsley 8, Dr. Littlefield 6, Ferguson 4, Hagemann 9, Van Brunt 8.

THE CLIMAX CLUB

The meet was pleasant, as usual, at the club's grounds near Fanwood, N. J., March 13, and the numbers participating, seventeen, about the usual number. The weather was delightful, but a high wind prevented good scores. The club handicap match is always the feature at the regular monthly shoot of this club. Mr. Chas. E. Smith ("Dutchy") had an accident in the bursting of his gun during the afternoon. Van Dyke, Apgar and Keller were the ones shooting in the best form. The following were the guns, powders and shells used: Apgar, Smith gun, Walsrode powder and U. S. Walsrode shells; Brantingham, Parker, Walsrode, Climax shells; Van Dyke, Winchester, Du Pont, Leader shells; Keller, American Wood, Rapid shells; Capt. Cranmer, Smith, American Wood, Rapid shells; Woodruff, Parker, Walsrode, Climax shells; D. Terry, Smith, E. C., U. S. Rapid shells; Manning, Parker, Walsrode and Climax shells; J. Darby, Grecner, Wood, Rapid shells; S. Terry, Lefever, black powder, Club shells; D. Darby, Smith, E. C., Rapid shells; Swody, Walsrode, Climax shells; Singler, Smith, E. C., Rapid shells; "Edwards," Winchester, Du Pont, Leader shells; W. Terry, Smith, E. C., Rapid shells. Following are the scores:

COBWEB GUN CLUB

The members of this club had one of their regular events on their grounds at West Farms, N. Y., on Thursday, March 14, and by their method of handicapping added interest to the occasion. Their grounds are quickly reached by the Harlem branch of the New York and New Haven Railroad, thirteen minutes from the elevated railroad station at 129th Street. At the West Farms station there is about a 50 yards walk to their grounds. The members seemed a jolly lot, and the kindness and courtesy of Messrs. Train and Miller to strangers was a marked feature. With such persons in authority all feel welcome. The membership of the club is composed of several who are novices at the traps, but they are enthusiastic and will rapidly improve. The birds were an excellent lot, bothering the best shots of the club. On Thursday, March 21, they meet a team from West Newburg. Following are the scores of the shooting on March 14.

EVENT No. 1.—Club contest, 10 birds each man, $4 entrance, handicap rise, for club medal.

RIVERSIDE GUN CLUB

The regular monthly meeting of the Riverside club was held at Red Bank, N. J., March 15, in a snow and rain storm. The birds were an extra good lot. An amusing contest, at 5 birds, was one in which the gun was laid on top of a barrel and the shooter standing with his back to the gun and traps, would call pull, turn, pick up the gun and fire. James Cooper won first with 5 straight; Cowert was second with 4; Wm. and I. Bergen each got 3, and Throckmorton 2. The club has selected a team to represent it in the next Jersey league shoot at Springfield. The scores:

EVENT No. 1.—5 birds: James Cooper 5, E. L. Cowart, W. H. Little and John B. Bergen 3 each, C. E. Throckmorton 1.

EVENT No. 2.—5 birds: James and E. M. Cooper and Throckmorton tied with 5 each, Bergen and Cowart 3 each.

EVENT No. 3.—5 birds: James Cooper and Bergen tied with 4 each, Cowart 1, E. M. Cooper 3, Throckmorton 4.

EVENT No. 4.—5 birds: Cowart, James Cooper, Throckmorton and M. Rogers tied with clean scores, E. M. Cooper 4. Bergen 2, Little 3.

EVENT No. 5.—Miss and out: James Cooper 9, E. M Cooper 8, Bergen 0.

Two other miss and outs followed and were won by James Cooper and Bergen respectively.

UNKNOWN ROD AND GUN CLUB

The members of this club met at Dexter Park March 14 for sweepstake shooting and to contest for the club's badge. The shooting for the latter resulted in a triple tie between Messrs. James Bates, Henry Houseman and J. H. Bohling, each of them missing but one bird out of the seven. Messrs. Knebel and Houseman divided the honors in the sweepstake shoot. After the shoot a good dinner was served which was pleasantly enjoyed. The scores:

EVENT No. 1.—Club competition at 7 live birds per man: Class A—Henry Housemann, 28 yards, 6; Edwin A. Vroome, 28 yards, 4; Henry J. Kneble, 26 yards, 5; James H. Bohling, 26 yards, 6; Henry J. D. TERRY—W. LEVER

There was a good-sized audience at the grounds of Uncle Al Heritage at Jersey City Heights on Saturday last to witness two matches that had been announced to take place. Owing to the illness of Geo. Squires, one of the participants, but one match was decided, that between D. Terry of Plainfield, N. J., and W. Lever, of Elizabeth. The day was a hard one to make scores, a genuine March wind making every bird a fast one. Terry was perceptibly slow ou good birds and Lever won handily on the twenty-third round. Among the spectators were Neaf Apgar, Ferd Van Dyke, N. Astfalk, H. Folsom, Chas. W. Dodd, J. Blodgett. Wm. Ross, Earnest Seehueson, J. R. Dickson, Scot Terry, Wm. Terry, John Benner, W. Schorb, Capt. Cranmer, J. Maher, W. Parker, E. Jeoffrey, F. Batsch, Chris Reinhardt and Captalu Jack Brewer.

Following is the score. Conditions: 25 live birds, one barrel, gun in any position, 50 yards boundary, $250 a side. Referee, A. Woodruff.

Wm. Lever	1101101101 0111111100 011—16
D. Terry	1011000101 1110001010 111w—13

Several sweeps were shot by the spectators present after the above match.

EMPIRE ROD AND GUN CLUB

The monthly meeting of this club was held at Dexter Park on March 11, the shooting being under American Shootiug Associatiou rules. No extra shooting was done as the winner, Mr. Henry Mablstedt in the 7 live bird contest was the leader with a score of five. Messrs. O'Hara and Colgan tied for second honors with four. The scores show the members present.

EVENT No. 1.—Regular monthly club competition, 5 birds per man: Henry Mablstedt, 25 yards, 5; John J. O'Hara, 25 yards, 4; Richard W. Colgan, 25 yards, 4; William H. Roberts, 25 yards, 4: Frederick Behrens, 25 yards, 2.

MARSHALL, ILL.—I inclose herewith the scores made by members of the Marshall Gun Club, for club badge, on March 7. The shooting of Cook and Besler was decidedly interesting, as both are amateurs and there was a rivalry between them.— Their scores are very creditable considering the limited practice they have had. Each man shot at 25 Blue Rocks, 18 yards rise, known traps, unknown angles.

Answers to Correspondents

We are willing always to answer any question that we can answer, and prescribe for dogs or other animals in these columns, but we can not answer questions or prescribe by mail. In all instances where it is necessary that a sick animal should be prescribed for by mail, we refer the owner to Professor R. J. Withers, No. 627 South Main Street, Los Angeles, Cal., to whom one dollar must be inclosed to pay for his services.

KENNEL

READER, Norfolk, Va.—I lost a beagle bitch on January 20 and would like your opinion as to cause of her deatb. She was in season and bred on December 11 and 18. On January 11 she began playing with a dog aud acted as if she were going in season again, was cross and inclined to fight other bitches. She was hunted on January 15 and was very quarrelsome and did not work as was her custom. On January 16 she still noticed male dogs, until I had her confined, when she would eat nothing, and seemed very impatient of confinement until put where she could not see other dogs, when she became quiet. Her bark was about as usual except possibly a little longer. On January 18 sho would notice male dog as if she had sexual desire but would suddenly snap at him and once or twice went in for a regular fight. She neither ate nor drank, grew thinner and had a blank look out of her eyes and seemed extremely nervous; in other respects she seemed all right. She was confined in a small yard and would occasionally bark and howl, and tried to gnaw the pallngs. Died on evening of January 20, her voice getting so weak she could only be heard a short distance. As she bit several dogs I would like to know if it was rabies and if so what is the best course to pursue with the bitten animals. She was handled and showed no inclination to bite persons up to January 19, when she was shut up. Ans.—Rabies; quarantine all dogs bitten for nlnety days.

G. C. L., Austin, Tex.—Ans.—(1) It is only natural that your grey hounds should receive wounds and be laid up temporarily if you course coyotes and wolves; and no matter whether you course these animals with greyhounds, deerhounds or borzois or hunt them with a pack of foxhounds, it will always be the case that the hounds that are fastest and the best stayers will be the most frequently injured in the fray. To use Great Danes with your greyhounds would be useless, for the reason that if the greyhounds understand their business—which yours do, no doubt—the hottest of the fight would be over before the big dogs reached the scene of action. If you have a number of greyhounds you should sort them out and run them in packs as evenly as possible matched for speed and endurance; this applies to foxhounds also, and is especially important when the quarry is a big gray or "loafer" wolf. (2) Great Danes do not compare with greyhounds for speed, nor with foxhounds for carrying a trail at full speed. (3) It is impossible to say which are the three fastest greyhounds in the United States, there being several fast dogs that have never run against one another. (4) We do not know any greyhound named Rome Marble II. There is a white dog named Rome Marble, by Major Glendyne out of Lady Alice; he was bred by Dr. G. I. Royce and is now owned in St. Louis.

C. J. K., Winona, Minn.—Ans.—(1) Don H (14622) is by General Gordon out of Avery's Nellie (10322). General Gordon (not registered) is by Turk (Dash—Bel e) out of Gyp II (Jack—Gyp); the stud book does not furnish further information. Avery's Nellie is by Rothwell's Brutus (not reg.) out of Maud (not reg.), by Judge (2670) out of Pride of Glencoe (Black Prince—Murphy's Floss); Brutus, by Murphy's Black Prince (Lincoln—Flora) out of his Floss (2734). (2) Avery's Dixie (22755) is by Black Dick (14873) out of Avery's Nellie (10322). (3) To register your puppies write to Secretary American Kennel Club, 44 Broadway, New York. (4) Mr. James B. Blossom, Dwight Kennels, Highland Kennels, Dr S. G. Dixon, Miss S. A. Nickerson, Messrs. Meister & Sarvis, Reuben H. Donnelly, L. P. Higgins, etc.

SPANIEL, Chicago.—Ans.—(1) If you are breeding and rearing puppies it will pay you to buy Ashmont's book "Kennel Secrets." (2) Docking is best done about the tenth day after birth, as the bone is then scarcely more than cartilage, and only trifling hemorrhage results; it is a simple operation, and is best performed with blunt scissors, that the tendons may be drawn out instead of directly severed, as drawing the tendons prevents a too high carriage of the tail. (3) The operation is the same for all breeds for which docking is in vogue. (4) No. (5) Difficult breathing from the stoppage of one of the nasal apertures at a time; you will be able to detect which nostril is affected; our advice is to consult a veterinarian.

CONSTANT READER, Lancaster, Pa.—Ans.—(1) Warwick Belton is by Belton High (Royal Sultan—Reign) out of Magnolia (Leicester—Nelly). (2) Dashing Monarch is by Dash II (Blue Prince—Old Kate) out of Countess Moll (Dan—Countess). (3) Garda is not registered. (4) Which Nellie? There are several of that name. (5) Nilsson is by Dan (Duke—Rhœbe) out of Nellie (Dash II—Moll III). (6) Luella is by Rake (Dan—Ruby) out of Clara Dale (Dash III—Cornelia). (7) Gazelle is by Druid (Prince—Dora) out of Jolly May (Rob Roy—Pocahontas). (8) Princess Draco II is by Druid (Prince—Dora) out of Princess Draco (Rob Roy—Livy.)

TYCHO, Washington, D. C.—Ans.—(1) Gloster, by Dashing Rover (Dash II—Norna) out of Trinket (Crack—Diana). (2) Gloster won the Members' Stakes (12 starters) at the Eastern F. T. Club's trials, November, 1886, and was second in the All-Age Setter Stakes at the same trials; at the same club's trials, in November, 1887, he won both the All-Age Setter Stakes and the Champion Stakes; at the same club's trials in November, 1888, he again won the Members' Stakes; and at the same club's trials in November, 1889, he was second in the Members' Stakes.

J. W. B., New Orleans, La.—(1) Will you please give me the sires and dams of the following English setters: Novelty, Imp. Belton, Gem and Pearl Blue. (2) What is the close season in Louisiana on wild turkeys? (3) Is there any close season on squirrels in Louisiana? If so, please give dates. Ans.—(1) Llewellin's Novelty was by Dashing Duke out of Novelty (Dan—Nellie). Belton was by Dash out of Daisy. Gem was by Gladstone out of Gazelle. Pearl Blue is not registered. (2) From April 15 to October 1. (3) No close season on squirrels.

C. D. McM., Fort Sill, O. T.—Ans.—(1) Naso of Kippen (5552) is by Naso II (E. 8123) out of Champiou Maggie (E. 9049), she by Champion Baug (Mr. Coham's Baug—Mr. Price's Vesta) out of Mr. Leache's Belle (Champiou Sancho—Fau); Naso II, by Naso (Duke—Fairy) out of Miranda II (Cotter—Miranda). (2) Lad of Bow (7880), by Champion Graphic (E. 13366) out of Climax (E. 20217), by Champion Bang (E. 739) out of Juno (E. 9047); Graphic, by Bonus—Sancho (E. 10000) out of Fursdon Juno (E. 13418).

T. J. S., Lynu, Mass.—Ans.—Jim Dandy, the English setter that was third in the English Setter Derby (3 starters) of the American F. T. Club's trials at Columbus, Ind., in November, 1892, is registered (No. 26149), aud was whelped August 16, 1891, being by Braxtou Bragg (13070) out of Gipsy, by Gatb's Mark (4771) out of Kilmeny Noble, by King Noble out of Elsie Belton; he was, and is yet for all we know to the contrary, owned by Mr. John Roberts of Chicago.

E. J. W., Ft. Bennett, S. D.—Ans.—(1) Take oil of tar eight ounces, crude petroleum four ouuces, sulphurous acid four ounces, fishoil one and one-half pints; mix and apply all over the body for six consecutive days, giving a bath on the seventh; repeat treatment as often as uecessary. (2) The law is not specific on this point, but our construction of it would be that it is illegal to uet or trap prairie chickens at any time, or for any purpose, within the state.

T. S. S., Raudolph, N. Y.—Ans.—(1) Lass of Kippen is by Naso of Kippeu (5552) out of Juno II (8011); Naso of Kippeu, by Naso II (E. 8123) out of Champiou Maggie (E. 9049); Juno II, by Croxteth (2871) out of Belle, by Rush (1259) out of Schleffelin's Juno (no information giveu). (2) Kodosh Kate (15318) was owned by Mr. J. W. Babcock, Meadville, Pa., at the time she was registered, in 1889. (3) Wash them clean and then apply tincture of iodine daily.

F. M. N., Berwick, Me.—Ans.—Chorea, we think; it arises from the presence of intestinal parasites. After a fast of eighteen hours, give one and one-half grains of powdered areca nut to the pound weight of the dog, following it in one hour with a suitable dose of castor-oil. If the jerking still continues give her three drops of Fowler's Solution three times daily, also three grains of the citrate of iron and quinine three times daily.

A. M. D., Sau Antonio, Tex.—Ans.—Feed your dogs but once daily, then at night. Take four ounces oil of tar, two ounces crude petroleum, four ounces sulphurous acid, and one pint of fishoil; mix and apply all over the body for six consecutive days, giving a bath on the seventh. The buuches on the elbows are produced from pressure while lying down; bathe with warm water daily and apply tincture of iodine.

M.W.P., Maquoketa, Ia.—Ans.—(1) Indigestion. For five consecutive mornings give two ounces of castor-oil and ten drops of cascara segrada; feed but once daily, then at night. (2) We cannot say, as the stud book in which the registration is to appear is not out yet and we do not know the dogs you mention, except American Dan. (3) Snip is not registered. (4) Spratts Patent (24859) was whelped January 2, 1892.

R. F. B., West Orange, N. J.—(1) How should the spurs (as I call them) be removed from the hindlegs of a ten-months-old beagle bitch, and what should be applied after removing them? (2) Will the beagle in question be handicapped if I wish her to compete on the bench before the sores heal? Ans.—(1) Your better plan is to employ a qualified veterinarian. (2) Yes, if the places are not healed.

H. E. A., Pittsburg, Pa.—Ans.—He will be very difficult to coax out of his timidity on account of his age. If he had a merry, good-natured terrier as a companion he might gain confidence and become more sociable. However, if he is not susceptible to improvement you had better give him away, and let someone else try what can be done with him, or else put an end to him.

A. M., St. Louis, Mo.—Ans.—Take four ounces oil of tar, two ounces crude petroleum, two ounces sulphurous acid aud one pint of fishoil; mix and apply all over the body for six consecutive days, giving a bath on the seventh, repeat treatment as often as necessary. Feed but once daily, then at night, using cooked turnips and cabbage with well-cooked cornmeal.

C. H. K., Chicago.—Ans.—Chorea as the result of distemper is very difficult of treatment. For six consecutive days, only, give one grain of the iodide of potash three times daily; also give four drops of Fowler's Solution three times daily, from the seventh day increase the dose one drop daily until fifteen drops are given at each dose, then decrease in the same ratio.

J. F., Milwaukee, Wis.—Ans.—Gladstone (28815), owner H. R. Kock, Detroit, Mich., is by Earl Douglass (Lord Bute—Ellen Terry) out of Minerva (Canada's Merchant Prince—Blasz); and Gladstone S (16975), owner H. B. Sherman, Burnett Junction, Wis., is by Bonhomme (Rex—Theon) out of Liebe (Hermit—Sombre). Not knowing to which you refer, we give both.

B. H. W., Washingtou, D. C.—Ans.—(1) The Stud Book does not furnish any more information as to Nancy Lea's pedigree than you already possess. (2) Zoe W (4570) is by Gladstone (113) out of Fawn, by Scout (1777) out of Lady S. No information is given as to the breeding of Fawn and Lady S. (3) Twin Maud (3857) was by Gladstone (113) out of Clip (320).

C. D. W., Kansas City, Mo.—Ans.—The vulva is either too small to admit the bulb of the penis, or there is undue excitement of the vaginal bulb which causes the constrictor muscles of the vulva to act with sufficient force to prevent the entrance of the penis sufficiently to effect copulation. Try a smaller male, even of some other breed.

T. B. McC., Washiugton C. H., O.—Ans.—(1) Not registered. (2) Several pointer bitches named Nellie have been registered. (3) We do not know to what hitch you refer when you say "Dr. Shepard's pointer bitch." (4) Bang Bang Jr (15821) is by Bang Bang (4022) out of Boski, by Beaufort (2843) out of Zuba, by Bravo—Zanetta.

B. M., Ellisville, Miss.—Ans.—There is an Irish setter dog named Tramp registered in Volume III; his number is 19717, and he is by Dan out of Gipsy, by Elcho IV (2332) out of Nannie, by Palmerston out of Norah; Dan, by Frank (Plunket—Biddy) out of Veto (Elcho—Rose); he was bred by Mr. W. C. Kennerly, White Post, Va.

E. H. M., Sheldon, Ia.—Ans.—(1) Menekaune (3761) is by Paris II (1701) out of Romp, by Druid (95) out of Star (513). (2) May (6397), by Buff out of Tink II, by Dog Whip (278) out of Tink; Buff, by Count Blythe (1501) out of Blue Lill, by Blue Dash out of Fipp. The stud book does not give any further information.

C. C. S., Chicago.—Ans.—Rickets. Feed the mother with raw eggs with the shells finely broken up, also give her two dessertspoonfuls of precipitated phosphate of lime in her food twice daily. Get the puppies to lap sterilized cow's milk and give them fifteen grains of precipitated phosphate of lime twice daily.

HAWKEYE, Hamilton, Can.—Ans.—Probably caused by the presence of intestinal parasites. After a fast of eighteen hours give one and one-half grains of powdered areca nut to the pound weight of the dog, following it in one hour with two ounces of castor-oil; repeat treatment in seven days.

W. M. G., Oklahoma City, Okla.—Ans.—(1) We think this was a case of rheumatism; should have been treated with a hot bath, two ounces of castor-oil and thirty drops of cascara for three consecutive mornings, and five grains of the iodide of potash four times daily. (2) Rabies. (3) Rabies.

R. M. L., Scranton, Pa.—Ans.—We are inclined to think it is rheumatic. Take cerate of cantharides one ounce, warm it slightly and rub it into the foot; cover the foot and use a muzzle to prevent licking; in eight hours wash the parts with tepid water and for a few days apply a little lard.

B. E. Q., Freeport, Ill.—Ans.—(1) Jolly May is by Rob Roy (Fred—Rhœbe), out of Pocahontas (Rock—Dora). (2) Dog Whip is by Rake (Dan—Ruby) out of Dart (Prince—Dora). (3) Juno II, not Juno, is by Rover (Bob—Farish's bitch) out of Nell (Rob Roy—Juno).

J. E. G., West Rutland, Vt.—Ans.—Loumont Kit (19762) was bred in England, by a Mr. Brooks; she was whelped in June, 1888, and is by Gully the Great (22802) out of Kit, by Ducrow out of Eclipse, by Young Dutch out of Venom; Ducrow by Marquis out of Florence (22802).

CONSTANT READER, Yonkers, N. Y.—Ans.—(1) Keumore (8428), bred by T. J. Farley, Albany, N. Y., is by Gleucho (Elcho—Noreen) out of Red Lassie. (2) Cora, not Cora B, bred by the same person, is by Ned (Chief—Winifred) out of Fan (Rory O'More—Lady Gay).

W. J. O'S., Kingston, Ontario.—Ans.—Gypsie B (21474) (not reg.) out of Spring Fashion (5266); Don, by F[illegible] out of Rosa (11206); Spring Fashion, by Lamplig[illegible] Sprlug (not reg.), by Shot (not reg.) out of Queen [illegible]

W. F. B., Baltimore, Md.—Ans.—(1) As the [illegible] consecutively we cannot tell you; the numb[illegible] tered in Vol. XI would have to be invest[illegible] Neither Maud K, Maude K, or Kent's Maud I[illegible]

R. M. W., Chicago.—Ans.—(1) Lady Bess [illegible] seph (Beauchief—Bertha) out of Sibyl (Monk II—Sheila). (2) Grover Cleveland (89686) is by Otto II (Otto I—Irma) out of St. Pierre (Tell—Cico). (3) Queen Bess is not registered.

G. S., Little Rock, Ark.—Ans.—(1) Little Duke (5403) is by Racer (4922) out of Dolly, by Darwin (Rally—Rosie) out of Lady (Baker's Rock—Fannie). (2) It is perfectly legitimate for a beagle to be black and tan, but more or less white is preferable.

J. D., Grand Haven, Mich.—Ans.—For six consecutive mornings give twenty drops of the fluid extract of pinkroot and senna, and after that give three drops of Fowler's Solution and the one-eighticth part of a grain of the sulphate of strychnine.

READER, St. Louis, Mich.—Ans.—(1) It cannot be said positively that one is older than the other; both are mentioned by the earliest writers. (2) The entry of Plain Sam in the International Derby shows him to be by Hal Pointer—Kent's Star.

R. T., Milwaukee, Wis.—Ans.—Many of the dogs you are inquiring after appear in the pedigree of Heather Brownie (15082), owned by Mr. Ed B. Ulrich, Reading, Pa. If you will write to him he may be able to furnish you with the information.

ROCHESTER.—Ans.—Ozeua of the nostril and canker of the ear; take five grains of the permanganate of potash to one ounce of water, inject a tablespoouful into the nostril twice daily; use tinctnre of iodine for the ear.

GORDON, Nevada, Mo.—Ans.—Champion Gypsy Girl is listed, not registered; she was bred by Mr. Baulter, and is owned by Dr. H. T. Foote, Rochelle, N. Y., from whom you can obtain any further information about her.

E. A. G., Pittsburg, Pa.—Ans.—Your best plan would be to place the dog in the hands of some professional trainer that has a troupe of performing dogs, such as you may have seen at dog shows or with a circus.

G. S., Des Moines, Ia.—Ans.—You can register her if her sire and dam are registered, or if you can furnish an authentic pedigree for three generations; the fee is $1.

E. E. B., Butte, Mont.—Ans.—As he is not registered we cannot furnish you his pedigree; he ran in the Pacific Coast Derby of 1893. We do not answer by mail.

R. M., Cambridge, O.—Ans.—There are dogs of different breeds bearing those names, so please to repeat your query and state breed.

H. F. DEB. C., Detroit, Mich.—Ans.—Discontinue the use of carbolic acid, using tepid water only, then apply tincture of iodine.

H. C. W., Lisbon, N. D.—Ans.—From your description we should say the dog resembles a Great Dane more than anything else.

S. J. B., Binghamton.—Ans.—If our reporter said so we presume it is correct, though certainly very strange.

J. A., Ottawa, Ill.—Ans.—Give the one-eightieth part of a grain of the sulphate of strychnine three times daily.

A. L. S., Bristol, Conn.—Ans.—Give five grains of the citrate of iron and quinine three times daily.

B. R., Lively Grove, Ill.—Ans.—There are more English setters used than Gordon or Irish.

A. M., Cleveland, O.—Ans.—Whitewash the kennel three times before using it again.

W. G. H., Pittsburg, Pa.—Ans.—We cannot find him in the stnd book.

W. L. B., Millersburg, Pa.—Ans.—Repeat your question, stating breed.

EUREKA, Columbus, O.—Ans.—There are not any such standards

GAME AND SHOOTING

P. L. B., New Orleans, La.—(1) What is the difference in velocity, expressed in "feet-seconds," between load No. 4, put up by the U. M. C. Co. in Smokeless shells for trap shooting, containing 44 grains E. C. powder, and 1⅛ ounces No. 7 shot, and an ordinary 3 dram load of FFF black powder and 1 ounce of No. 7 shot? (2) Will a full choke gun give a greater or less killing circle with No. 2 shot than with No. 10 shot; or would the choke merely confine either size within relatively the same space at the same distance? X claims that a choke bore gun will scatter large shot so as to make a much larger circle than with small shot, at the same distance. Z claims that whether the shot be large or small it will put relatively the same percentage of pellets in the circle, according to the number of pellets in the charge. Ans.—(1) The difference is very trifling. In dry, warm weather, the first load will generally lead the second, and in wet and cold weather the black powder load may give a little higher velocity than the smokeless load. The difference in either case does not cut any figure practically. (2) The full-choke barrel will give a comparatively closer pattern with No 10 shot than with No. 2 shot, but much depends upon the individual quality of the gun. X is mistaken; Z comes very near to the facts in the case.

H. W. V., Cincinnati, O.—(1) Where can I buy live quails for stocking purposes that are from their native location best suited to this locality? (2) When is the best time to stock and how should it be done? Ans.—(1) We know of only two parties who are supplying quails for stocking purposes, Mr. G. L. Buck, No. 328 S. 2d Street, Philadelphia, and Mr. Chas. Payne of Wichita, Kan. Birds from either of these gentlemeu should be suitable for your locality. (2) The birds should be kept in a strong, healthy condition until the arrival of Spring weather and then liberated where there is ample cover, being particular to place a quantity of wheat and shelled corn near by where they are liberated so that they can have plenty of food until they become somewhat acquainted with their new surroundings.

W. H. H., Bryan, Tex.—I have a 10-gauge Parker gun (hammer), that is bored on the taper choke system, in which I wish to use nitro powder, and in order to do so I will have to use brass shells to use wads large enough to confine the gas and get the full force of the powder. Can you tell me how I can fasten the wads in the shell so as to get good results? Ans.—To get good results from nitro powder the shell should be crimped and there is no way that we know of whereby you can secure wads in brass shells so as to get the same resistance that the crimp of a paper shell gives. If your gun is a 12-gauge use 11-gauge blackedge wads in paper shells; if a 10-gauge use No. 9 wads, and we think you will get fairly good results.

E. H. E., Boston, Mass.—(1) Where can I get a sportsman's diary, a book arranged for recording the game killed during a term of years? (2) I am constantly traveling with my dogs and want the most approved crate in which to ship them by express. Can you tell me where I can get a catalog of such crates? Ans.—(1) We do not know of such a book in this country. If you will write to Horace Cox, Windsor House, Bream's Building, London, Eng., you can probably obtain what you want. (2) Address Spratts Pateut, 239 East 56th Street, New York City, for catalog of crates.

TRAP

CONSTANT READER, St. Joseph, Mo.—(1) In sho[illegible] here the trappers and handlers are continually pu[illegible] cutting off the birds' tails. Is this allowed in five bir[illegible] can a shooter refuse a bird that goes wabbling off wit[illegible] pulled out, and get another bird? (3) A bird hit with a missile before being shot at should be declared "no bird" by the referee, and the shooter should be required to shoot at another bird. (4) A shooter forfeits his right to use the second barrel when he orders either man or dog to retrieve the bird.

J. E. W., St. Joseph, Mo.—(1) Shooting live birds at the trap where the ground surrounding was very uneven, A went to the score and knocked his bird down with the first barrel, but as the bird fell it dropped into a sunken place in the ground where it could not be seen by either the shooter at the score or the spectators, so the shooter was unable to use his second barrel. The referee called it "dead bird," and the shooter left the score. The trapper first filled the trap and then went to retrieve the bird, but just before he got near enough to catch it the bird took wing and flew out of bounds. What should have been the decision? (2) Did Dr. Carver and Capt. J. L. Brewer ever shoot an individual match at live birds, and if so, when and where? Ans.—(1) If the shooting was under American Shooting Association rules it was a "lost bird," as Rule 9 says "a bird to be scored dead must be gathered within bounds, by a dog or man, within three minutes' time, and before another bird is shot at." (2) We believe not.

MISCELLANEOUS

J. W. D., Wallingford, Conn.—(1) Is it right to peg three holes for a 31 when it is the last card—I mean in six card cribbage? (2) If your opponent in playing his cards counts 27 and you play a four and score 31 before the mistake is noticed, are you entitled to the count? Ans.—(1) Yes, 2 for the 31 and 1 for the last card. (2) We do not understand what you mean by "before the mistake is noticed," as 27 and 4 make 31, and the last player counts 2 for the 31.

J. F. B., Carmichael, Pa.—(1) Where can I get live quails for stocking purposes? (2) Can you give me the pedigrees for three generations of Scott Noble, Sam Noble and Nettie Noble, all English setters? Ans.—(1) Write to either G. L. Buck, 328 S. 2nd St., Philadelphia, Pa., or to Chas. Payne, Wichita, Kan. (2) They are not registered.

A. A., Denison. Ia.—(1) Is there any dog, or breed of dogs, known as the black Irish setter? (2) Does the game law of Nebraska permit the shipment of game out of the state? Ans.—(1) No. (2) No.

J. E. W., St. Joseph, Mo.—Your cartoon suggestion received; please accept our thanks.

NATURAL HISTORY

A. J. K. Jr., Washington C. H., O.—The act of coition is performed by opossums in similar manner to that of other quadrupeds, especially the cat. The young are brought forth from the womb imperfectly developed and deposited in the pouch, where they attach themselves to the teats and are aided in their act of nutrition by two ossified tendons of the external oblique muscles, which press upon the mammary glands, causing the milk to flow until the young become strong enough to suck the milk unaided. (2) Yes. (3) Put a hood on to prevent shaking and apply tincture of iodine daily.

TRAVEL

J. F. W., Cape Town, South Africa.—Letter received. We should be pleased to hear from you again soon.

Information Wanted

CONCERNING the tanning of wolf and coon skins, about which J. F. N., of Port Byron, Ill., desires information, I will say I have had excellent success by following this plan: Stretch the skin, hair down, carefully on a smooth board and rub the flesh side thoroughly with a mixture composed of three ounces each of salt and alum, three gills of water, and one dram of sulphuric acid. To this mixture add enough wheat bran or flour to thicken it. After this has become completely dry upon the skin, scrape it off with some bluut instrument such as a spoon or very dull knife blade, then rub the skin (flesh side) briskly arouud a smooth post to make it flexible. Previous to putting any preparation on a hide to tan or cure it, care should be taken that every particle of flesh has been first removed. After the above process has been completed it will improve the brilliancy of the fur, and also strengthen it, if a small quantity of powdered arsenic be rubbed into the roots. This prevents the hair from falling out.

IN reply to Sportsman, who, in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 16, wished information regarding Tallapoosa, Ga., and vicinity, as to prospects for game, shooting, etc., I will say that quails, pigeons and squirrels may be found in fair quantities, and occasionally deer and turkeys within a radius of from five to ten miles of the city proper. The majority of the lands are not posted, and he will find, as a rule that if he will ask permission the owners will be pleased to let him shoot on those that are posted. He will find a most hospitable class of people and will undoubtedly be well received. In my opinion he will made no mistake in going there, but would advise him to take a brace of dogs with him. Can't say whether there is a gun club there at present or not, but believe there is.
Palatka, Fla. HARRY W. FOWLER.

IN reply to Fay L. Kenrick, Bedford, Mass., would say that some years ago when collecting birds' eggs for specimens, I happened on a nest of a crow in which were four eggs. One of them was as usually found, two were of a chalky white color and the fourth was shaded from the ordinary green color to the chalky white. Although I have not seen my collection for some time, I think some of these eggs are still in my possession. If Mr. Kenrick would like to have what I can find of them, I will be pleased to hunt them up and send them to him, if he will write me in care of the AMERICAN FIELD.
Boston, Mass. ELFIR.

I HAVE in my possession a gun made in England by a man named Hutchinson. It is of brass, a flint lock, but is in remarkably good condition. I believe it is over 150 years old, and if any reader of the AMERICAN FIELD can tell me through these columns anything in regard to the manufacturer or when he did business, I shall be greatly obliged.
Worcester, Mass. A. W. LIBBY.

IN answer to A. M. L., in the AMERICAN FIELD of March 9, I will say by all means take "tourist car," N. P. R. R. Many of my friends have tried other routes and have agreed with me and party I traveled with, that it cannot be beat. I shall be glad to see any sportsmen coming my way. It does an old, feeble sportsman good to talk dog and gun.
Seattle, Wash. C. D. C. WILLIAMS.

I WOULD say in reply to Mr. E. L. Taylor's query in AMERICAN FIELD of February 16, that a new edition of Lewis & Clark, edited by Dr. Elliot Coues, of Washington, in four volumes, with copious notes, biographical sketches and maps, was published in 1893, by Francis P. Harper, New York. This will "fill the bill" for Mr. Taylor exactly.
Charlestown, N. H. OLD FOGY.

CAN any of the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD give me the address of a Mr. A. Sidney Drake, who bought a dog by the name of Kirk from the Detroit Kennel Club in August, 1883? Any gentleman will confer a great favor on me by placing me in communication with the above named person, who, I think, lived in Kansas some time ago.
Des Moines, Ia. T. W. STODTENBURGH.

WILL some brother sportsman kindly inform me through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD where, along the G. R. & I. R. R., in Michigan, is the best point for a camp hunt in the deer shooting season? I should also be pleased to hear from anyone acquainted with the woods east of Boyne Falls, Mich.
Oakwood, O. PARSON INGLE.

IF G. W. W., of Kansas City, Mo., who inquired in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 23 if anyone knew of a good pointer stud dog within a reasonable distance of Kansas City, will advertise his full name and address I can inform him where there is one.
Geneva, Neb. B. E. S.

IN answer to James Simord I will say he cannot collect for dogs killed on a railroad track in Minnesota, or in any other state that I know of. If trains had to stop for dogs on the track few would get to their destination on time.
Seattle, Wash. C. D. C. WILLIAMS.

CAN any reader of the AMERICAN FIELD inform me through this column of any standard works on, or making special reference to, the habits and methods of capturing the snapping turtle and the same of German carp?
Mt. Pleasant, Pa. J. G. THOMPSON.

Amusements

COLUMBIA THEATER.—"The War of Wealth," Chas. T. Dazey's latest and most famous American drama, will commence next Monday, March 25, an engagement of two weeks at this popular playhouse. Manager Jacob Litt is said to have spent a sum exceeding $50,000 upon the scenic and other ornamentations of this presentation. "The War of Wealth" illustrates incidents in American life and strongly contrasted types of character that are exceedingly interesting to all. It is a melodrama of the highest class. Its hero is Philip Norton, a rich young American of leisure who proves to be something better. Its heroine is a highly vivacious and unusual stage type named Mrs. Marcia Dudley, a charming but business-like American widow. One of its most stalwart characters is Robert Warfield, a great American banker. Flavius Remsen, a cashier of Warfield's bank, also proves himself a hero. Among other strong situations in the play is one wherein Warfield accuses Philip Norton of attempting to gain the affections of the former's wife, and the latter rather than reveal certain indiscrepances that had been indulged in by Mrs. Warfield previous to her marriage, accepts the accusation without a word in his own defense. The most stupendous situation ever seen upon the stage is shown in the run on the bank scene, wherein over 300 people appear and in the midst of it all, a genuine express wagon drawn by two steeds of fine mettle is madly driven into view by the hero, containing a half million dollars in gold coin which saves the bank. Critics pronounce this the greatest company of dramatic artists ever seen in an American play. It includes no less than six successful ex-stars, among whom are: Frederic De Belleville, Sidney Drew, A. S. Lipman, Joseph Wheelock, Edgar L. Davenport, Mary Shaw and Miss Ruth Carpenter. The latter's gowns are said to be a forecast of what the Paris Spring styles will be, and are marvels of the modiste's art. Seats can be ordered by telephone, mail or wire.

SCHILLER THEATER.—The second week of Mr. Wilson Barrett's engagement he appears in a repertory of great characters as follows: Sunday night, "The Silver King;" Monday and Tuesday, "Ben-my-Chree;" Wednesday matinee, Wednesday and Thursday, "The Manxman;" Friday, "Hamlet;" Saturday matinee and evening, "The Silver King." Next week, Kellar, the wonderful and wonder-working Kellar, now generally admitted to be one of the world's greatest magicians, begins his annual engagement. Kellar is immensely popular in Chicago; for that matter he is a figure of interest in every city throughout the world. His performances are always new, startling and inexplicable. Kellar traveled in the old world considerably last year, and in India acquired the mastery of some of the strangest and most inexplicable Hindoo mysteries and illusions. No less a person than the celebrated Professor Heinrich Heusoldt confessed himself completely baffled by one of Kellar's startling scenes, called "The Mystic Light of Bala." This feature, with another, "The Shrine of Koomra Sami," Kellar for the first time now presents to the American public. His long program of novel mysteries must be seen to be appreciated.

HAYMARKET THEATER.—Bartley Campbell's famous melodrama, "The Galley Slave." Next week, return of "Old Kentucky." Each of the prior visits of this superior melodrama to Chicago has been the occasion of far more than ordinary interest and the popular Haymarket has never entertained larger or more enthusiastic audiences than have assembled to applaud the many stirring features of "In Old Kentucky." Since its September engagement here, the play has enjoyed a marvelous run of one hundred nights at the big Boston Theater and has aided to its already flattering and widespread indorsement that of hundreds of thousands of effete Bostonese.

ROYAL ENGLISH WINTER CIRCUS AND GERMAN WATER CARNIVAL.—This week see the great Schaffer, Mons. Cliquot, Loisette and his trained birds and animals, Chas. W. Fish, the champion rider, and the new banquet float in the water carnival. Two performances daily.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—The favorite Bostonians in their latest success "Prince Ananias," first times presented here. Next week, "Robin Hood." This excellent company has in preparation "The Maid of Plymouth." Large audiences greet each performance.

MCVICKER'S THEATER.—Last week of Hagenbeck's marvelous exhibition of trained animals, the most wonderful exhibit of the kind ever seen. Next week the famous and only Lilliputians, in "Humpty Dumpty Up to Date."

CHICAGO OPERA HOUSE.—Second week of Francis Wilson in the new comic opera, "The Devil's Deputy."

MADISON STREET OPERA HOUSE.—"On the Midway"—"My Uncle." Two big shows daily.

THE LINCOLN.—"A Green Goods Man." Next week, Frohman's "Men and Women."

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS

Advertisers are respectfully requested to observe the following rules governing the insertion of advertisements in these columns:

CLASSIFICATION.—Strictly kennel advertisements—those which relate exclusively to dogs and to nothing else—cannot be placed under headings of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange," but are subject to classification only under their proper kennel headings. When two or more breeds of dogs are mentioned in one advertisement, it destroys the possibility of giving it a distinctive heading and it is therefore classified under "Miscellaneous." For this reason it is well to advertise each breed separately.

If stud notices are included in advertisements of dogs for sale the classification given will be "Miscellaneous." Stud notices should be separate and distinct from other advertisements so as not to conflict with proper classification.

The departments of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" are reserved for advertisements relating in some way to sportsmen's goods or other articles of merchandise.

RATES.—The rate for advertisements under "Wanted," "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" is 3 cents per word each insertion. The name, address, initials and abbreviations are included and count as words.

The rate for advertisements under kennel headings is 25 cents per line for the first insertion, and 15 cents for each additional consecutive insertion. Estimate seven words to a line unless the words are unusually long. If display type is used the rate is $3.50 per inch for the first insertion and $2.50 per inch for each additional consecutive insertion. Special rates are given for displayed advertisements running three months or longer. Schedule will be mailed on application.

Remittances to cover full cost should invariably accompany advertisements. If too much is remitted we will refund you what is overpaid.

Advertisers will favor us greatly by writing their advertisements plainly, using separate sheets of paper. Copy should reach us by Tuesday of each week to insure insertion in that week's issue.

Excelsior Dog Cakes

As their name implies, are the highest grade in the world, and five gold and silver medals corroborate the fact. They are economical and nutritious and are used by the leading kennels in the United States and Europe.

The Swiss Mountain Kennels have the following to say about them:

SWISS MOUNTAIN KENNELS, GERMANTOWN, PA.

Gentlemen:—I have used Excelsior biscuits now for about five years and find them perfectly satisfactory in all respects. The dogs are not only fond of them, but even when used exclusively have always agreed splendidly with them, keeping them generally in a good healthy trim.

I have several times recommended them to other parties and have never failed to find them otherwise than pleased with them. I would here thank you for your prompt attention to all orders. I am perfectly willing you should publish anything I have said formerly or at the present time in regard to the cakes. Yours truly,

THE ART OF SHOOTING.

LONDON, FOURTH EDITION, 1892. PRICE $3.00.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

At the special request of many gentlemen who have placed themselves in my hands for instruction in the Art of Shooting, I have written this treatise. I have endeavored to meet the special requirements of those who are anxious to become proficient in the art, and who have hitherto been unable to obtain, in a precise form, the information necessary for studying the first principles of shooting at moving objects.

I have had the honor of coaching many gentlemen, and have carefully studied the points especially requiring attention that have cropped up from time to time while giving instruction. I hope that those who favor me by studying this treatise may quickly gain the knowledge so essential for the making of an average if not a brilliant shot.

I have purposely refrained from touching on the several merits of any class of gun—being a gunmaker myself; and, indeed, so many good works on the subject have been written, that it is really unnecessary.

I trust that authors from whose writings I have made extracts will pardon me when they recollect that I have at heart one object, viz., the advancement of a manly sport which gives pleasure, health and occupation to many, and to the patronage of whose followers I am indebted for many pleasant days.

THE AMERICAN FIELD GUN CLUB SCORE BOOK

Surpasses anything of its kind ever issued. It has, in addition to 150 score sheets, correct and complete copies of American Shooting Association Rules for Live Bird and Inanimate Target Shooting, also Hurlingham and Long Island Rules which will be found very convenient for ready reference. Further, it contains a proper form of Constitution and By-Laws (that may be used as a guide in organizing a club), also a set of Field and Club House Rules. Carbon paper for manifolding purposes is inclosed in each book. It is so bound that when in use the top cover may be thrown back and under the book, making a solid base on which to write.

Owing to the immense advantage we have in compiling and pushing the sale of this book we are able to offer it at only $1.00 per copy, but at this price our margin of profit is too small to admit of discounts on large lots or to dealers. Bear in mind it contains 150 score sheets, besides additional matter as detailed above. Size of book, 9x12 inches. Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

A DEER HUNT IN NORTHERN MINNESOTA

BY AL L. GETCHELL

On the thirty-first day of October, 1894, our party, numbering six, joined ranks at Aitkin. The boat we intended taking had left for up-river the day previous, thus compelling us to go by team in order to get to our proposed destination. We had arranged with an old trapper and hunter—a good old soul he was too—to act as our guide. After filling our mess chest with all necessaries, and loading our camping outfit, we went plowing through the mud en route for our camping grounds. We followed the state road, with rifles on shoulders, ahead of our team. The travelers we met were quite often heard to remark, "there goes the advance guard of Coxey's army." As we pressed forward, hearing an occasional bay of the hound and the crack of a rifle, the query ran through our minds as to what success we would meet with on this, our long-looked-for pleasure trip.

At noon we halted at Seary's ranch, built our campfire, and our lunch was served with proper ceremonies—corncobs for dessert. The shadows of night overtook us six miles from the ranch we intended stopping at for the night, and, as we went on—each mile seeming five—we were at last assured that the light in sight was Sanders' ranch.

After stabling our team and preparing our evening meal, we were introduced to the softest spots of the log cabin floor—our substitute for beds—and ere daybreak came we often thought of the good, comfortable quarters at home. At break of day we were on the road again, only to find, before we had gone far, a corduroy road leading across the dense swamp, almost impassable. Had it not been for our honest, quiet team, undoubtedly we would have been there yet. We soon had the chips flying, and with small saplings and brush repaired the road sufficiently to keep our supplies out of the mud and water.

At noon on the second day our dinner was served on the banks of the Mississippi, only eleven miles farther to go, and we had to reach there before darkness overtook us in order to pitch tent and gather balsam boughs, a substitute for feather beds. We arrived at last, and, after arranging matters comfortably, started our campfires and served supper, and by midnight we were all slumbering and snoring in as many different keys as the scale provides. That little camping ground, I think, we will never forget, for it was there that we wandered back at night with a saddle of some nice buck or doe on our backs, to relate the story and details of capture.

At break of day the following morning we were all on duty. The stands were covered and the drive commenced, which ended with the sight of but one little fawn, and often during our stay we met with disappointments of this kind. The second day's hunt brought no venison to camp, and we began to think that in order to have meat we would have to buy it. The third day, however, by diligent hunting, our guide came to the rescue and brought a fine yearling buck to camp. His greeting, I assure the reader, was a warm one. We soon had a good bed of coals, the broilers were brought out, and we soon prepared a glorious, good meal. Our bill of fare consisted of bean soup—raw onions on the side; broiled, roasted and stewed venison; pheasant—Alabama style; bread and oleo; pancakes that would bear investigation, and baked pork and beans—lumber camp style. For dessert we had Lone Jack in the cob. On the banks of a little stream flowing into the Mississippi and named by the Indians Poka Seba, our first deer was killed. Here we found several crossings and runways indicating plenty of game, and had the game law not prohibited hunting with hounds, we would have met with better success. For nearly two weeks, at times, the weather threatened heavy storms, and this seemed to keep the deer under shelter in the dense swamps, and as it was found impossible to drive the swamps without hounds, we had to resort to a runway and drive, shooting on pine ridges near the swamps. Each day's summing up was a pleasant feature of the trip, as each member of the party had some excuse to offer for not getting a deer. One would say he had a standing shot but the shell snapped, or the red brush was too thick, and another would have some other excuse equally as plausible.

The sixth day we brought down two fine yearling deer, and as the days rolled on toward the morning of our departure, we added others to the number; and after packing our venison to camp and hanging it up we felt well pleased with our success.

The buck fever topic was discussed quite thoroughly, and if any of our party had the disease it was never made known, although several of us were quite suspicious-looking at times.

We were supplied with bread and biscuits by Bonus & Anglo's logging camp, situated about a mile and a half from our camp. As our staple was flour, baking powder and water mixed up and called pancakes, we considered biscuits a luxury and they did not last very long, either. I made it a point to pass the camp above mentioned quite often, and never refused the kind invitation from Jim (the cook) to drop in and have a cup of tea and some good baked beans—lumberman's style.

I never saw pheasants more plentiful, and quite often, when hungry, we would shoot and broil them in the woods, being too far from camp to return there for dinner. Our plans for hunting always worked in harmony and I never experienced a pleasanter or more successful trip than this one.

Our hunt over, we loaded up our camping outfit and venison and started for home, and after two and a half days' hard travel with two yoke of cattle that our guide had supplied us with we reached Aitkin, and, after disposing of our game—all sharing alike in the expenses of the trip—we broke ranks, each wishing the other a successful year and a safe return here next Fall for a similar hunt.

St. Paul, Minn.

EFFECTIVE PROTECTION FOR SMALL GAME

BY A. W. RHOADS

At last the gunners are aroused to a realization of the fact that there is imminent danger of the extermination of all classes of game in the United States. Everywhere there is manifest a disposition to secure legislative enactment to protect native game either by lengthening the close season, or by prohibiting the sale and exportation of game of all kinds. There can be no doubt but that, owing to the scarcity of game at the present time, both of these methods will have the desired effect, but only to a limited degree, however.

The proper way in which to protect and increase the supply of game—particularly small game—is to get at the real cause of their rapid extermination. Kill the natural enemies of small game. How can this be done? will be asked.

As briefly as possible I will endeavor, in my poor way, to demonstrate how these game destroyers can be killed without the burden of expense falling upon any individual. And in no way can it be better demonstrated than by telling what the Luzerne County Sportsmen's Club, located in this city, has done in that direction. The club appointed a committee of five members who have charge of the matter. That committee, in the name of the club, offers the sum of $150 divided into four prizes, as follows: $75 to first; $45 to second; $20 to third and $10 to fourth. Each animal and bird killed may be counted as many points as the following list shows: Weasels (any kind and color) 16, catamount 15, fox (red) 14, fox (any other color) 13, great horned owl 12, mink (any kind) 11, goshawk 10, sharp-shinned hawk 9, cooper hawk 8, duck hawk 7, pigeon hawk 6, screech owl 5, long-eared owl 4, short-eared owl 3, skunk or polecat 2, hawk or owl (any other kind) 1. The rules governing the contest are: (1) The scalp or skin of the animal killed must be sent or given to the committee on or before the (date ending the year of the contest), and the person having the largest number of points to his credit will receive the first prize, the second largest number the second prize, etc. (2) No two or more persons will be allowed to form a combination or partnership, or place their scalps and skins together to help another to secure a prize. (3) Every contestant must prove to the committee that he did not have the assistance of any other person or persons in securing the skins or scalps he produces. (4) Contestants may reside in any part of this state, but the animals must be killed within the county of Luzerne.

The man who won the first prize during the first year of these contests given by this club had to his credit something over twenty-two hundred points. It can, therefore, readily be seen the vast amount of protection this system gives to small game.

Such protective clubs could and should be organized in every town or county in every state in the Union, and as a result, in a few years, the game would become so numerous that instead shortening the open season, as is now being done and necessary, the close season would be shortened.

To give some idea of the destructiveness of these animals I will recite some of the actual experiences of some of our vermin-destroying enthusiasts. A weasel has been known to kill seven rabbits in a night; an entire bevy of quails—fourteen to twenty—in a night. A red fox has been known to destroy six ruffed grouse in a night. A fox will average at least one game bird or rabbit in each twenty-four hours; where there are foxes, two hundred to every four hundred square miles would be a conservative average; one bird or rabbit per day for each of these two hundred foxes means 73,000 per year. A weasel will kill at least an average of one bird or rabbit each day; on the same territory, where there are weasels, one per square mile would be a very low average; this means 146,000 birds or rabbits. And so on, with the other animals and hawks, owls, etc.

It is fair to assume that one-half of those destroyed will be females; a female grouse will raise from twelve to sixteen young birds, say fourteen; a quail will raise from twelve to twenty, say sixteen; a rabbit will raise at least three and one-half annually. Say that the number of each kind destroyed, grouse, quails and rabbits, is one-third, and we have, as the loss of the product of the game destroyed, 128,250 rabbits, 584,000 quails and 511,000 grouse, or an aggregate of 1,223,250 lost that would have been produced had the old birds lived. Add to this number the old birds destroyed and it foots up 1,442,250 head of small game destroyed each year by vermin on an area of four hundred miles square. Think of it, gunners!

There is no manner of use in buying birds for stocking purposes unless you kill off their natural enemies. There is no use in legislating for the protection of game unless you first kill off these natural enemies, for as those enemies increase—and they surely will, as naturally as the birds and rabbits—the game must decrease.

Organize protective clubs that will protect in every county and watch the result.

Some say that severe Winters and deep snow will kill off game. This may be true in an open country or in fields where food is scarce, but in a wooded country never. Grouse, quails and rabbits will, when they can get food—sumach seeds are the natural Winter food for quails when snow is deep, birch buds and laurel the food of grouse, and a rabbit will live all Winter on a small brush of almost any kind—stand cold away below anything we get during the severest Winters.

A fox pounces upon the grouse while they are [illegible] the snow, and the owl seeks them in the trees, at night. The weasel attacks the quails under roots, stumps, brush where they roost or seek shelter at night, and upon the rabbit in his hole at night. When quails starve or are frozen their wings are close to the body and the legs stretched out and back; when they are killed by vermin [illegible] blood the wings are extended upward with [illegible] heid toward the neck.

[illegible] in plenty organize these ver[illegible] and see to it that each member is active in the good work. This is protection that will protect. Nothing else will.

GUNS

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Everybody seems to be taking advantage of the liberality of the editor of the AMERICAN FIELD to give expression to his hobby in the choice or selection of a gun. In almost every issue of the paper there appears an article from some gun crank illuminating the virtues of this or that gun till one is entirely at sea in regard to reaching any conclusion in the final selection of a gun.

Yes, brother sportsmen, I am a gun crank also, and I am proud of it; while at the same time I do not claim to be a fanatic on the subject of any particular firm's make of gun, as he who reads, or pretends to keep posted upon the many varieties of makes that are now offered the sportsmen public, will almost think as the old toper concluded in regard to whisky, that "they are all good, only some are a leetle bit better than others." It would be hard to go amiss in the selection of a gun from the stock of any reliable make now offered, unless the purchaser desired some special finish or other portion of the weapon made in some peculiar manner to suit a whim or fancy.

Now, my idea of a gun would not suit every shooter, any more than one particular make of gun would, but I know when I pick up a gun of any reputable make, that handles and balances well, shoots well, is strong and well made, fits me, will wear well and not shoot loose, the name of the maker cuts no figure. It is the gun and not the maker alone that suits me. I have my peculiar hobbies and notions as to the many virtues possessed by a good gun, and I cannot allow the opportunity to pass without airing a few of them.

In the first place a gun should be made so well that it will withstand the charges of the modern smokeless or nitro powders, and to do this must be made of first-class material, and before being placed upon the market it should be subjected to a private and governmental test, with proper stamping showing that it has been passed upon. In the matter of testing I refer to American-made guns, as most foreign makes are required to pass a government test. In the way of detail I am partial to an arm having all the modern improvements, especially the ejecting mechanism, which I claim is more essential to a field gun than to a trap gun, for the reason alone that it facilitates quickness in reloading. It is an assured fact that the ejector shotgun has come to stay, and the firm that is slow to adopt this improvement is not trying to keep in line with the demand of the times. Since the advent of an ejector double gun recently placed upon the market by a well-known firm at a price somewhere within reason of the additional cost required in placing this improvement on their guns, two other progressive makers have yielded to the demands and are now placing the ejecting mechanism on all grades in order to meet the competition. This is a step in the right direction, as heretofore makers have asked just about double what it cost for this improvement, the makers claiming that the necessary new machinery required in the construction of an ejector justified them in asking the extra price; but sharp competition has brought about quite a reduction in the price.

Now what comes next? The barrels. My hobby in this respect is solid steel barrels; I mean by this a pair of tubes that have been made by boring out round bars of solid steel. Authors upon the subject who are also gunmakers of note tell us that gun barrels made in this manner are entirely free from the imperfections or flaws so common to barrels made by welding twisted blades of steel and iron together in the form of a tube, that they are also harder and denser, subject to less expansion and thereby give better results when using nitro powder than the twisted barrels do, and my own experience in using a pair of barrels made of crown steel has verified this latter statement to my entire satisfaction. This steel is not so expensive as some others of the same nature, but from a practical standpoint I believe is the equal of any. The shaping of the stock has more significance in the making of good scores with the average shooter than the balance and handling of the gun, inasmuch as with a perfectly fitting stock one can command a more accurate aim, especially at moving objects, than with a gun whose measurements in regard to drop at comb and heel, and length of stock, are at variance with the shooter's line of sight when the gun is in position for firing. But how is one to know when [illegible] in fits him perfectly?

[illegible] d[illegible] first closing the eyes and bringing [illegible]er in position for firing, opening [illegible] sh[illegible] line of sight be in a direct plane [illegible] proper fit. As the novice ad[illegible] trap shooting he will make the discovery that his gun no longer fits him as it did when he first commenced shooting at the trap. It is too crooked in the stock for him and he wonders how to account for the change. Certainly the gun fitted perfectly at the start. My explanation for the change is this: The position of the shooter as he stands with gun at his shoulder, in a strained attitude, waiting for the moving object to appear, brings about a contracting influence upon the muscles of the neck, shoulder and arm, developing them into what might be termed a calisthenized condition of the parts, and influencing the accommodation of the position of the gun stock so as to bring about a closer contact or straightening-out feeling in the gripping of the stock. This naturally lowers the eye below the line of sight, and in reality the gun no longer fits the shooter. The question can here be rightfully asked, what influence will this change of affairs have upon the shooter when field shooting? A diversity of opinions could no doubt be expressed, but that it will have some influence pro or con, no one will deny. As a remedy for any bad influence that may have been exerted, such as inability to get the gun into position with the quickness and ease heretofore, I would suggest the form of the Monto Carlo stock in giving relief to a certain extent, as it will help one to return to his old form in getting there quickly when a bird gets up. In this form of a stock are presented advantages which are commendable, and to fully appreciate them the shooter must accustom himself to the use of this style of a stock.

To one who is still in the dark in the selection of a gun, after having looked over the field of offerings and is unable to find just what he wants with regard to style, finish, weight, etc., I would advise him to reduce his ideas as to just what he wants to paper and submit them to more than one reliable maker, asking them if they will construct a gun as per specifications. The chances are that he will not find more than one out of a half dozen makers who will make just what he wants without offering some suggestions as to certain changes he should have, or raising objections to a portion of the specifications, and therefore decline to construct as wanted. At least this has been the experience of the writer, and the name of the maker in the one instance to which I refer I shall not divulge at present, for reasons that the premature information I am about to make known might conflict with future arrangements of this particular maker. I do not know, however, that it would make a great deal of difference, as the information was not imparted to me in confidence. In our correspondence the company informed me that as an extra inducement to me to purchase their gun they would place the ejecting mechanism upon their gun without extra charge. This is as it should be, and I would advise parties contemplating buying an ejector gun in the near future to await further announcements, which will be forthcoming ere long, before making any selection. The gun is at present upon the market as a non-ejector and compares favorably with the best makes made in this or any other country.

QUAIL SHOOTING

NEBRASKA CITY, NEB.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—As I sit here in a hotel listening to the softly falling rain without, with nothing to do but wait for the next train, my thoughts turn to a quail hunt which I had the pleasure of participating in some two or three years ago, which I want to tell the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD about.

One Saturday morning the latter part of October, as I was getting ready to rustle up some trade, a telegram was handed me which proved to be from my friend Ab at A., which read as follows: "Come to-day, sure." I looked at my watch and found I had just twenty-five minutes to catch the train, but it did not take long to get my traps together and with my pointer Lee in the hack with me, we arrived at the depot just in time to catch the train. At 11:20 we pulled up at the station; on looking out I saw Ab with a double-seated conveyance waiting and in a few minutes we were at the hotel.

After a hasty dinner we were off, having taken in his pointer Ben. We were in a fine mood to enjoy our outing. After a drive of about thirty minutes through some of the finest farming land in the state, we came to a draw fringed with brush and bounded on either side by corn. We let the dogs out for a run and it was interesting to see them work. Taking advantage of the light breeze and working as eagerly as if their lives depended on the result, they raced here and there while we sat and enjoyed the beautiful Autumn tints and inhaled the pure, fresh air. Suddenly Ab exclaimed:

"Look at Ben!"

Down near the draw he had been going like a racehorse when he suddenly caught the scent of a bevy of birds and had stopped so short that his stern had swung almost around and with his head twisted sideways he presented a ludicrous appearance. But there he stood as rigid as a statue. We climbed out of the wagon and crawled through the barbed wire fence, and as we straightened up a picture was presented calculated to make a man's blood tingle. Lee had come up within twenty-five yards of Ben and was stretched to his full length, backing beautifully. We stopped and admired the picture and commented on the difference in positions of the two dogs, and mentally declared that it would take a good farm to buy either dog. We then walked up to the dogs with our 12-gauge Parker hammerless guns at the proper elevation, when "buzz," "buzz," "whir," "whir!" up got a large bevy of beautiful birds. The nitro powder cracked four times and three birds fell, which were retrieved by the dogs. We followed the scattered birds into the corn, but most of them flushed out of gunshot and we only bagged four more, making a total of seven from that bevy.

We then put the dogs in the wagon and drove on. Coming to a closely cropped hedge, I put Lee out to run ahead. We had gone to within seventy-five yards of the end of the hedge when the old fellow wheeled around and made a beautiful stand in the middle of the road. We were soon out of the wagon, and leaving the driver to look after the team we walked on a few yards, when we saw the birds running right in front of the dog in plain view of him. We flushed them and they all started for the corn except one fellow which circled and flew in the opposite direction. I tried hard to land him, but scored a clean miss with both barrels. Ab was more fortunate and called down one. The remainder of the bevy scattered well in the corn and we started for them, and were pleased to find the corn low enough to admit of good shooting, and the fun soon commenced. It was "bang," "crack," "whir," "bang," until all the birds were up. There were thirteen in the bevy and we secured eleven of them, which we thought enough from that bunch, so we did not follow the others. Thus it went from dawn to cornfield and from cornfield to stubble. We found seven nice bevies, killed often at long range and then missing a dead easy straightaway.

We passed the time pleasantly, joking, tramping, commenting on the work of the dogs, complimenting each other after an extra difficult shot. As the sun was going down we put the dogs in the wagon, covered them up to keep them from getting chilled, told the driver to "let 'em go," and were soon flying over the smooth natural roads for town. On the way we exchanged ideas in regard to hunting, and both agreed that for real enjoyment a quail hunt with an agreeable companion and two good dogs that understood their business was the sport for us.

We arrived at the hotel after a pleasant ride, and on counting our birds found that we had bagged fifty-nine quails and one jacksnipe, the latter found by Ab in a wet spot at the edge of a cornfield. After a hearty supper and a good feed for my dog I was ready for the 7 o'clock freight train that was to take me home, and as it was just pulling in to the station Lee and I were soon on board and Lee was not long in going to sleep, covered as he was with my hunting coat. I reached my home at 9 o'clock, tired but feeling that I had enjoyed one of the finest afternoons' sport of my life.

I have often hunted jacksnipe with Ab in the same locality and had good sport, but for real enjoyment give me quail shooting over a steady dog.

THE SPORTSMEN'S EXPOSITION

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The general interest manifested in the Sportsmen's Exposition is still on the increase. One of the most encouraging signs as the affair progresses is the evidence of the high character and standing of those who are interested in the event, which is indicated by the applications for information coming from the educated classes of the people of the country. Out of the two hundred or more letters which have been received by the association in the past ten weeks not one of them has emanated from any source but that of intelligent and cultivated persons.

Among the applicants for information regarding the exposition and the reduced railroad rates there are judges, doctors of law and divinity, lawyers, civil engineers and manufacturers who are in any way identified with the manufacture of sportsmen's materials. This is very flattering to the projectors of the enterprise. It was apprehended that the exposition might be considered as purely a trades or manufacturers' affair. That this is certainly not the case is verified by those who are seeking information regarding it. It is a singular fact, too, that the applicants reside in remote parts of the country, including Texas, Oregon, California, Idaho, Maryland, Virginia, Maine, North Carolina, Tennessee and Florida. This is worthy of comment and will be a source of great satisfaction to those manufacturers who have made preparations to extend their business and who are exhibitors in the exposition, when so many have said that it would be useless to calculate on an attendance from distant sections of the country—this having been the general belief up to the present time—of manufacturers and dealers who have heretofore been lukewarm as to the benefits to be derived from being identified with the exposition and who are of a very practical turn of mind; and some of the more cautious and conservative were reluctant to identify themselves with the exposition, fearing that no special advantages might come to them from it; but they are feeling quite different now and are inclined to change their opinion, swing around and get in for their share of the patronage.

The official catalog is now being arranged for, and it will present to the manufacturer and exhibitor a valuable means by which their specialties may be placed before the visitors and buyers. It will be a unique affair, entirely new in design and execution, and a preliminary edition of 10,000 will be printed, and other editions, if required, are provided for. It is not yet time to fully describe the special features of the many exhibits of the various firms, but several of them are so novel and will be such a feature of the exposition that a brief outline of the more important ones may prove both interesting and profitable.

One of the exhibits will be a log cabin 30 feet long by 13 feet wide. This cabin will represent a Western camp. The exterior will represent logs. One long side of the cabin next the aisle will be cut away and left open, which will enable all who approach it to see the interior. This cabin will be decorated with specimens of mounted game and the paraphernalia found in the camp of a Western hunter. Everything will be thoroughly appropriate, and the camp will have as resident hosts fourteen famous trappers and guides. These guides will be from every part of the United States where game is abundant and their reputations as leaders and guides have gone before them. They will be clothed in their hunting costumes and in every minute detail the typical hunter's camp and home will be carried out and made as real and as actual as possible. This display will be one of the most extensive of the exposition, and one likely to attract, of itself, a large attendance.

Another very important and perhaps the most carefully planned, accurate and complete exhibit will be that of a prominent railroad which has made in the past special efforts to care for the sportsman when traveling through its territory, and intends in the future to recognize how desirable it is to have the resources of their state understood by the hunter and tourist sportsman. The company is having made, in the forest, a regulation log cabin of acceptable type and convenient size. It will be about 20x16 feet and every log will be hewed by an old-time hunter, and each log will have the savory perfume of the woods. They will each be keyed and marked so as to fit exactly when sent to New York. The same hunter-woodsman will go to New York and put up the cabin. A wide veranda or porch will be a pleasing feature of the exhibit. Upon this veranda the old hunter and fisherman will sit and entertain his legion of friends whom he has piloted on many a tough and eventful journey in the primitive forest. Just how many "swaps of truth" will be indulged in remains to be heard. The stone chimney and fireplace, with the gas log fire, will suggest some of the comforts of home and a savory meal made up a la camp style.

The cabin will contain a full exhibit of mounted game and fish. From this cabin 25,000 souvenir papers will be distributed which will describe the resources of the great state as a paradise for the hunter and fisherman. This exhibit will represent a carload of material and the great expense incident upon the transportation of the natural logs to build the cabin—over 1,000 miles—and will represent the faith the enterprising railroad company has in the Sportsmen's Exposition, to say nothing of their energy and the originality of the company, which ought to impress the manufacturer of the value of the Sportsmen's Exposition as an advertising medium.

The following additions to the list of exhibitors have been received during the past week: A. J. Reach Company, Wright & Ditson, Marlin Fire Arms Company, George Barnard, Peck & Snyder, Lamb Manufacturing Company, St. Lawrence Boat Company, S. L. Crosby, Studer's Birds of North America, Natural Science Association, Leroy Shot and Lead Works, and the Excelsior Target Company.

THE PROPOSED NEW YORK GAME LAW

The Senate committee of the New York legislature has prepared a game and fish bill which is likely to become a law, making the close season as follows:

Deer, October 21 to August 15; hounding deer, October 16 to August 31; squirrels, December 1 to August 31; hare, December 1 to August 31; wild fowl, April 30 to September 1; quails, January 1 to October 31; woodcocks, January 1 to August 15; grouse, January 1 to August 15; snipes, May 1 to August 31; meadowlarks, January 1 to September 30; trout, September 1 to April 15; salmon trout, October 1 to April 30; landlocked salmon, October 1 to April 30; black bass, January 1 to May 29; mascalonge, January 1 to May 29; salmon, August 15 to March 1; pickerel, pike and wall-eyed pike, January 1 to May 29.

Deer are protected for five years in Ulster, Greene, Sullivan and Delaware counties. One person may kill only two deer in a season. Transportation forbidden except of one carcass, with owner. Sale forbidden from October 31 to November 10, except of venison killed out of state in open season. Hounding always forbidden in St. Lawrence, Delaware, Greene, Ulster and Sullivan. Killing of fawns, working and yarding forbidden.

Ferrets for rabbit hunting forbidden. Rabbit close season in counties of St. Lawrence, Franklin, Essex, Clinton, Lewis, Warren, Hamilton, Herkimer, Richmond, except August 16 to December 31.

Bounty on fox, $3; bear, $10; grown wolf, $30; pup wolf, $15; panther, $20.

Wild fowl shall not be pursued or killed between sunset and daylight, nor from "any other than a boat propelled by hand or floating device," nor bough house more than fifty feet from shore. Boats propelled by hand may be used on the Hudson River below the Troy dam.

Quail shall not be killed in Genesee, Wyoming, Orleans, Livingston, Monroe, Cayuga, Seneca, Wayne, Tompkins, Tioga, Onondaga, Ontario, Steuben, Cortland and Otsego counties prior to November 1, 1898.

Woodcocks and grouse shall not be transported unless accompanied by owner.

Wild birds protected do not include the English sparrow, crow, hawk, raven, crane, crow blackbird, common blackbird, kingfisher.

Mongolian pheasants are protected to 1897.

Ice fishing is forbidden in waters inhabited by trout, salmon trout or landlocked salmon. Lake Ontario, Lake Erie, Hudson and Niagara rivers excepted.

Trout, landlocked salmon, salmon trout may not be taken of less than six inches. They may not be transported save when accompanied by owner.

Black bass may not be taken under eight inches. Close season for Lake George except from August 1 to December 31.

Saltwater striped bass may not be taken under eight inches; nor shall striped bass be fished for between January 1 and April 30.

All county supervisors' fish and game ordinances shall be repealed by this act and supervisors shall not be empowered to legislate on species of fish and game named in the act.

The Long Island close seasons named in the bill are: Wild fowl, May 1 to September 30; plover, snipe, shore birds, except from May 16 to December 31; ruffed grouse, January 1 to October 31; woodcocks, January 1 to July 31; meadow hens, August 16 to December 31; hares, rabbits, November 1 to December 31; deer are protected for two years from passage of the act and for every alternate two years thereafter. In the open years the close period is except from November 10 to November 16. Black and gray squirrels, except from November 1 to December 31; trout, except from March 29 to July 31; salmon trout, landlocked salmon, except from April 1 to September 30; black bass, except from May 30 to December 31.

Floating devices, sail boats and boats propelled by hand may be used for wild-fowl shooting in Long Island sound, Great South Bay west of Smith's Point, Shinnecock and Peconic Bays.

AMERICAN VS. IMPORTED WALNUT FOR GUN-STOCKS

ESTILL, S. C.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I would like some of your many correspondents to give, through these columns, the reason for the preference, by sportsmen, of imported wood for gun-stocks.

I am a gunsmith of many years' experience and have worked most of the woods that are used in stocking guns, and I think that a good selection of American walnut preferable to any other, especially our Southern-grown wood. The imported wood is, most of it, soft, light and brittle. It takes a good finish and is of good figure, but it is getting scarce now and is expensive. It is so light that I have taken as much as half a pound of lead out of the stock of a hammerless gun put there to balance the gun.

Our Southern walnut trees all grow in old fields that have been planted for many years. They are consequently of slow growth, with large figures and distinct grains. The wood is hard, strong and heavy, and very dark (a rich, dark red color), free from white sap and does not need any stalning to make it suit the fancy of men who like dark stocks. I have a stock on my own gun, put there by myself fifteen years ago, the wood of which was grown a few miles from me, and it is as dark as rosewood and much resembles that wood in appearance.

I think if some of our sportsmen friends, when they need new stocks to their guns, will try American wood, ordering a good selection, they will never regret it, and will keep American money at home, where it rightfully belongs.

THE KANSAS GAME LAW

NORTH TOPEKA, KAN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The Kansas legislature has adjourned, and for two years longer, at least, the few remaining quails and prairie chickens in this state will be practically without any protection. A very good bill for the protection of game was drafted by Mr. J. C. Clark of Topeka, and introduced in the House, ea[illegible] by Representative Gardenhire, but it [illegible] all important measures in this state, [illegible] the legislative pigeon-hole.

It would be a difficult matter to d[illegible]ce the best of game laws in Kansas, because there are so few sportsmen here, compared to the number of hunters who will shoot quails any time they see them, and who will follow a hedge for miles in the hope of securing a pot-shot; and the idea of anyone attempting to enforce the existing, one-sided, unjust law is entirely out of the question. Evidently the quails and prairie chickens in Kansas must soon go the way of the buffalo, and then what will the lover of the dog and gun do? There are now no ponds to attract wild fowl, for every farmer, in this section at least, apparently considers it a sacred duty to drain every little water hole he may discover upon his property, whether the land thus reclaimed be tillable or not.

We are also prohibited from shooting at the trap for money by the recently passed Cubbison gambling law, which makes contesting for stakes in any manner (except "horse racing for ten consecutive days each year") a penal offense. What are we to do? This is a question that is puzzling many a true sportsman in Kansas who cannot afford to leave the state for his recreation.

DICK DEADEYE.

NOTES

MR. W. L. SHEPARD, president of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association, informs us that in a recent interview with Chairman A. B. Hallock, of the Illinois legislative committee on game and fish, Mr. Hallock stated he had every reason to believe that the game bill, which had been reported out of the committee, would pass the House and Senate as amended by the Illinois State Association, and published in the AMERICAN FIELD of March 2, with the exception that the bounty clause on foxes, skunks, minks, crows and hawks, announced in our issue of March 9, would be added, and that the chief warden's salary would be reduced to $1,000 and 5 per cent. of all convictions; and deputy wardens' salaries to $500 and 45 per cent. of all convictions. These changes will prove entirely acceptable to all sportsmen and will be a great victory for game protection. We caution the sportsmen, however, to keep a sharp eye on the bill, as we hear it rumored that at the last moment Section 4 will be so changed as to allow the sale of game, coming from other states than Illinois, up to the middle of April. This should be prevented at all hazards. The AMERICAN FIELD stands by its record, that not any game should be allowed to be sold at any period other than that during which it may be legally killed, and for a shorter period if possible, as stated in our issue of October 13 last, when the fabric of this bill was first woven. We quote from that issue: "Section 13 provides that game shall not be sold before the fifth day after the opening of the season and not after the fifth day preceding the close of the season. It is hoped to thus check the illegal killing of game before the first day of the open season and to have none on hand when the season closes."

This was as near the prohibition of the sale of game as we thought possible and consistent with public ideas, for without public support the best law ever enacted would fail of its purpose. During Mr. Shepard's recent visit to Springfield he talked strongly against the passage of the bill throwing open to all shooters the overflow marshes of private clubs. His talk had a good effect, for the bill was killed in committee.

SOME sportsmen at Toledo, O., have designed and had constructed a new style of boat for duck shooting in open water. The boat proper, or the upper portion of the woodwork, will lie as close to the water's surface as is practical and not have the water run over the edges into the boat. In the center of the boat is an opening into which a galvanized iron tank is fitted which extends below the bottom of the boat some three feet, and in this tank is a seat for the gunner. When the tank is in position—as it is both portable and adjustable—it is held fast by thumb screws, and, should the water go down so that the bottom of the tank would strike ground, the thumb screws can be loosened and the guard around the tank will lower with the water, leaving the shooting box resting firmly on the ground. When the water returns the float rises and the tank again assumes its proper position. A man seated in the tank is almost completely hidden, as only the top of his hat shows above the upper edge, and it is believed that ducks will approach it within good gunshot before they will discover that they are flying right into the arms, as it were, of the gunner. The woodwork is made of such buoyancy that the boat will not sink should it fill with water. The design of the craft is the idea of an old duck-shooter, and, while it has not yet been tested, sportsmen who have seen it and had its workings explained to them believe it just the thing for open water shooting. The boat is about 12 feet long by 4½ wide in the widest part and perfectly flat on the bottom, the latter feature making it less liable to capsize when in water deep enough so that the tank will not touch bottom. When the tank is in position it requires about three feet of water to float it nicely.

I have made considerable inquiry concerning quails [illegible] country, and from the reports I get I [illegible] in [illegible] they have wintered well and stood the cold [illegible] remarkably. In only one instance have I heard of the finding of frozen birds, and then only three were found. I was out on the Okaw after ducks only a few days since, and flushed a big bevy in the heart of the timber; great, big, strong fellows, that made a noise that resembled the hum of a sawmill when they rose, and I mentally figured how they would increase and what sport I would have next October. Later in the day I saw a large red fox scoot through the timber in nearly the same locality, and I made another mental calculation in which I reduced my previous figures about one-half. I fired a load of No. 5 shot at him at about 120 yards, but it only helped to increase his speed. We have had poor success here in raising Mongolian pheasants and are going to experiment crossing them with the English birds. The only young raised out of ten pairs were three raised by a pair on my place. The Mongolian Pheasant Association of Belleville is doing all in its power to introduce the noble bird in this vicinity. Had we been successful in passing a law to protect them, we would have liberated five pairs, just to see if they were a success; but our Governor said no, and that settled it.

Belleville, Ill. ELKIE.

No one knows better than the local sportsman that prairie chickens were as scarce as hen's teeth and as hard to get as diamonds last Fall. I never saw so few chickens on my drives as this year, yet you will see, "no hunting allowed on this ranch." Last week I got onto one of these posted ranches, and while hunting my way out, I ran across no less than thirty prairie chicken, quail and rabbit traps. I mentioned the fact to a local merchant and sportsman, who said: "It's a shame; they caught hundreds last Winter and shipped them; they were hard up; nothing to do, so we let them go. It is wrong; must and should be stopped. If there can be no united action taken by the sportsmen of South Dakota, why not every true local sportsman appoint himself a game warden and put a stop to this illegal slaughtering of our feathered game?"

Parker, S. D. E. J. MILLER, M. D.

MR. M. R. BORTREE, President of the National Game, Bird and Fish Protective Association, has brought suit against the Union League Club, of Chicago, for violating the game laws of Illinois by serving game illegally to its members. The violation was committed at a banquet on February 22, but it was some days before Mr. Bortree learned of the violation, and then just about the time that the warrant was to be issued Mr. Glennie, superintendent of the Union League Club, and by whom Mr. Bortree expected to prove the violation, was called away from the city on account of the serious illness of his mother, consequently the case has not yet been tried. If it can be proven, as charged, that the club served pheasants at its banquet on February 22, Mr. Bortree will doubtless insist that the court assess the full penalty prescribed for such violations, and in that case the club will be called upon to settle a nice little bill in court costs and fine.

I HAVE heard of many cute tricks being resorted to by hawks to get their food without much exertion, but the following which was told to me recently, and which occured about four miles from here, takes the cake: Not far from a farmhouse was a spring and on one side where the water spread out was quite a high bank. Occasionally ducks would alight here. A short distance away was a haystack upon which the old hawk would alight and watch for the ducks to come in, and when they had settled in the water the hawk would walk down off the stack, sneak up to the bank and pitch onto a duck. The farmer's boys got onto the hawk's trick, and would wait until they thought the hawk had the duck killed and then go and get the duck. In this way they procured four or five from the old fellow.

Pinckneyville, Ill. E. C. EATON.

THE Chicago Gun Club on Thursday of last week, it is reported, perfected negotiations by which it secured control of a tract of land about four miles in length at the junction of the Illinois and Bureau rivers. The land secured by the club has long been noted for its splendid hunting and fishing, and heretofore has been open to the public, but hereafter it will be reserved for members of this club only. Each year more and more of the good places for fishing and shooting are being taken up by clubs and soon it will be so that a man who is not a member of some club that has a preserve will have to travel many long miles t[illegible] at any sport of that kind.

[illegible] Protective Association recently [illegible], Mich., has a charter member- [illegible] embracing most of the leading [illegible] The association's headquarters will be at Chippewa Lake. Game Warden Osborne will be asked by the association to appoint Mr. W. A. Hunt, of Big Rapids county, warden. A determined effort is to be made by the association to protect the fish and game of the state.

WE have had an awful hard Winter on quails, but our farmers have wintered over several small bevies. Our prospects are slim for good shooting next Fall. I believe more game is destroyed by foxes, minks and owls than by hunters. Everyone seems to respect our game laws. I would like to hear, through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD, from sportsmen in regard to our new game law.

Edmore, Mich. FRANK L. HOLMES.

WE would call the attention of our readers to the excellent suggestions offered by Mr. A. W. Rhodes, in another column, pertaining to effective game protection by sportsmen's clubs. Mr. Rhodes produces figures to bear out his assertions, and as the method advocated does not entail labor on any individual member we hope the plan will be given a trial.

THE Guelph (Ont.) Gun Club, this Spring, contemplates the purchase of a number of ruffed and pinnated grouse and quails, which they will turn out in the vicinity for the purpose of stocking Wellington County. The birds will be protected for three years, when it is thought they will have established themselves sufficiently to permit of their being hunted to a reasonable extent.

ALL is not as serene as a May morning at the headquarters of the Spring Lake (Ill.) Hunting and Fishing Club, for a petition has been circulated and received the signatures of many people in the vicinity of Spring Lake praying that the club's charter be revoked. The matter will probably be settled in the courts.

PHILADELPHIA and New York sportsmen are establishing a game preserve in Nockamixon Township, Bucks County, Pa., where they have already secured by purchase and lease 380 acres of land. The land to be devoted to the preserve is not suitable for farming purposes.

THERE is strong talk among the sportsmen of Waco, Tex., of organizing a local game and fish protective association, one or two meetings having already been held to discuss the subject.

DURING the season which closed about the middle of March the members of the San Joaquin (Cal.) Gun Club killed 3,000 ducks. Last season the same club killed 3,200.

MR. G. O. SMITH of Wheeling, W. Va., is on a shooting trip South the guest of Mr. Chas. W. Tway of Michigan City, Miss.

QUAILS have wintered well here so far, and lots of them.

BY FULL CRY

Startled from a sound sleep by a loud knock at my chamber door, I heard a voice say:

"Hello, Marse Hade!"

"Who is that?"

"Me—Sam."

"What time is it, Sam?"

"Dunno, 'cept I no's its 'bout time youse up. De mornin' stair's up, the chickens dun crow'd fur day, and ole Foris a-talkin' down ter de ken'l."

"Sam, what kind of a morning is it?"

"It's des de kine youse allers talkin' 'bout so much. De win's in de souf, an' de sky es cloudy. W'at you gwine ter ride, Marse Hade?"

"I guess I had better ride Black Fox, Sam."

"Dat 'pens on whar you gwine ter go."

"We will try the old fellow on the mountain this morning."

"Dem cliffs er monstrus high, en de gullies er powerful deep. I spec' Wile Bill is de best hoss ter take dem leaps."

"All right, Sam, I will ride Wild Bill, and you can ride Black Fox."

"No sar, wid yo' purmission I'm gwine ter ride ole Gabr'el"—a mule—"heze sho footed en can go inter de deepes' gullies, en clime de steepes' mountins, en neber fall wid dis nigger."

"All right, you can ride Gabe. Wake Eliza and tell her to get us a cup of coffee."

"Lor', Marse Hade, Lize bin up fo' de mornin' stair en dun got eve'ything reddy. She dun cooked de pa'tridges and got de coffee bilin'."

"All right, I will be down in a few minutes."

While at the breakfast table, enjoying quail on toast, soft boiled eggs and a cup of coffee, Sam entered.

"Marse Hade, Ize dun fed de hosses and give de dorgs sump'n fer ter stay der stummucks, coz dey go'nter have de wurk cut out fer dem terday. Yo' ain't got nun dat ole corn juce, have you, Marse Hade? It wud help dis nigger pow'fully."

"There is the bottle, Sam, help yourself; here is some sugar."

"Great Gehoserfac, Marse Hade, Sam ain't gwine ter never spile medicine like dis wid nuffin."

"All right, Sam, eat your breakfast quick, then get the horses and let us be off."

"Yes, sah."

While enjoying a Partaga I inquired of Sam what hounds we should take.

"Wel, sah, fus en formus we mus take de ole Gen'ril"—meaning Forest—"den Whitefoot, Cricket, Chase, Bee, Money, Baby, Rip, Minnie en Matt."

"What about Fannie, Sam?"

"She wuz lame, an' de pups can't keep in her'n dis'unce after dat ole trav'ler."

"All right. Let the others out."

And out they came, ten as game and fleet foxhounds as ever followed me to the field; trained and drilled like a company of soldiers. After expressing their delight by a few yelps, as if to say "good morning," we were off to the grounds, eight miles distant. I looked at my watch, it was 4:10 a. m. Wild Bill and Gabe were enthused as much as riders and hounds. We went at a slow gallop, and the hounds knew full well where they were going. They kept close up, going neither to right nor left, and not a sound from one of them.

"Ride up, Sam. Sam, I intend to beat the General this morning."

"No, sah. Dat dorg nev'r did live what cud shake his tail in ole Foris' face."

"Yes, I think Baby and Chase can do it to-day."

"No, sah, dey nev'r will git ole 'nuf fer dat."

I struck a match and looked at my watch. It was just 5:20, and growing brighter in the east. We had reached the grounds, and not a hound had left the road.

"Now, Sam, go down to the cave"—distant half a mile—"and remain there until you hear the horn. Don't let him in."

It was the custom of this fox after standing up from one to three hours to take to this, and only this, cave. I was determined that morning to kill him or make him find another burrow.

After Sam had had time to get to the cave I gave the word and the pack was off. I rode up on the knob (though called a mountain), and when I reached the top not a hound was in sight or to be heard. It was indeed a typical morning for the sport; a gentle breeze from the south, the ground damp from recent rains, the last of November, and all things favorable. I struck a match to light a cigar, and looked at my watch, it was 5:40, when hark! the first challenge comes from Chase (the son of old Longstreet). It was daylight by now, and Baby answered two hundred yards to the left. Every hound knew when Baby spoke it was time to be getting there, for the game was not far off. Forest now challenged, still to the left, and repeated rapidly, as much as to say, "We are off, fall into line and follow." Chase was already with him, Baby moved up, followed by the gallant little Minnie with her clear tenor notes that seemed to lend wings to Whitefoot and Cricket as they passed me at breakneck speed and soon spoke out. Money also joined them. Bee was there, and Mattie. Yes, and then Rip, with his deep bass accompaniment. I dismounted, girthed my saddle tighter, and examined stirrups and bridle, for I knew the ride was to be hard and the route rough. I had followed the same fox a dozen times before.

The scent was growing warmer every minute, and each hound was now playing well its part. I knew each and every mouth as well as Theodore Thomas knew the instruments in his orchestra. The pack emerged from the woods and entered a large field, in the center of which were twenty or thirty acres of briers and bushes, and I rode rapidly to the far side in time to see the fox slip out. The hounds were now in the bushes; now they reach the spot. Here they come, with heads up and sterns down, running as if they were in sight instead of being four or five hundred yards from their game, and away they go into another body of woods. Knowing where the fox would double and cross back I rode to the point and listened. Yes, they are coming. After a few minutes he comes in sight, his brush extended and looking like a staff of gold tipped with ivory; and here comes the gallant pack, all up, each and every hound doing his best for the trail (I was glad Sam was not there, for Forest was slightly in the lead). They had gained very little, if anything, on the fox, and off to the right of the knob they went. I rode rapidly to the left and near the cave. Then I heard them swing around toward me. The fox saw me, however, and swung to my l ft, and I failed to see either fox or pack; but they went near enough to Sam for him to see the hounds.

I put spurs to my horse and was going to where the fox unkenneled, when I heard: "Oh! hole on dar, Marse Hade!" I looked back and saw Sam on Gabriel coming at breakneck speed, and I called out:

"Stop, Sam. Where are you going?"

"No whar, sah. I jess want'r tell de God's trufe."

"Well what do you want to tell?"

"Well, sah, 'fo' God it's de trufe."

"What is it? Tell me and go back to the cave."

"Well, Marse Hade, I'm de li'ness nigger ever wuz ef Foris wuz'nt fli'n'."

"Well, weren't the other hounds flying too?"

"Yes, dey wuz, but Foris wuz fli'n' de hi'es'. Den Baby en Whitefoot en all 'em; but dey never will shake der tails in Foris' face."

I lost five minutes with Sam, and falling to see them through the field I made for the point where I saw him on his return. I could hear them coming. There he goes, over the same line! And here comes the pack. They had gained considerably, and the fox was not three hundred yards to the good. (Glad again that Sam was not present.) The hounds were all well bunched and were running to kill. Away I went with them, though not saying a word (silence is the first qualification of a true sportsman), and for two miles I rode behind them. Forest was still leading; with Whitefoot second, Money, Chase, Minnie and Baby bunched; and Rip, Cricket and Mattie from fifty to one hundred yards to the re ar.

I swung round the knob and turned the fox from the cave. Sam failed to see fox or hounds but called out as I passed him:

"How is dey makin' hit?"

"I will beat Forest yet. Stay at the cave."

"Dey'll never shake der tails in dat ole dorg's face."

Over the fence into the field came the hounds, and in about the same positions, except that Baby had moved up to second place and was close to Forest. I now went to the opposite side of the field, and along he came, his brush no longer carried defiantly in the air; he carried it low down now, as he went into the woods, the pack evidently gaining. The hounds followed into the woods, and the fox doubled and re-entered the twenty-acres of briers and bushes. There the pack was within one hundred yards of him. I galloped to the opposite side, expecting him to make for the cave; though he doubled among the briers, a sure sign he was in trouble. Out he came; and only half a mile to the cave. He entered the woods, and then commenced the race for life.

As the pack passed me I gave the first halloo. Then I charged the fence and got over all right. I could see, though, that the pack had not yet caught sight of the fox. To the cave he went, and I wished he could get in this time; but Sam kept him out, and he made for the top of the knob. The pack was now in sight and must soon kill. They passed over the top of the knob and stopped. Riding to the spot, instead of a dead fox I found he had taken refuge in the root of an immense poplar tree.

Up came Sam on Gabe, screaming like a madman, and falling from his mule he seized Forest in his arms.

"I tole you so. Yes, sah, I did. I'se seed hit befo' en I no'd I'd see hit ergin terday!"

"What did you tell me, Sam?"

"Dat dar wuz no livin' dorg what cud shake his tail in ole Foris' face.

"Sam, what shall we do?"

"Marse Hade, ole Foris dun beat dis fox on de squar' en he mus' tase his blood."

Unlike the English sportsman, I could not resist the temptation to bolt this fox. He had been fairly beaten and I agreed with Sam that the gallant pack should enjoy their hard-earned victory. I suggested that we let Minnie (she being small enough to enter the hole) go in and drive him out. But instead the fox drove her out with a badly lacerated and bloody face.

"What shall we do now, Sam?"

"Let's put Min and Bee bofe in, en dey'll fetch 'im."

"All right, Sam; let them go."

In Minnie went with Bee and the fight was renewed, lasting ten or fifteen minutes, when the brave little bitches came out, dragging with them the dead fox. Upon examination I found the toenails of this fox had been worn off by the frequent long runs I had given him.

NOTES

FOLLOWERS of the Rose-Tree pack had a rousing good run on March 16 as a wind-up for their season, which customarily terminates on St. Patrick's Day. This run is said to have lasted through six hours, nevertheless the veteran Master, Mr. George W. Hill, was one of the few to struggle to the end, which, judging from the following account in the Philadelphia Ledger, seems to have been decidedly in the fox's favor: "It was a grand chase considering the heavy going. The hunters were in the saddle for six hours, and Reynard made the race so hot that his pursuers were compelled to cry enough and give him his liberty. Whipper-in Rogers turned the hounds loose at ten o'clock, and they started at once toward the hunting country in the Upper Providence Hills In Higgin's woods a trail was struck, and the loud yelping of the pack told that it was fresh. In a few minutes afterward the fox was sighted going toward Castle Rock. He did not tarry there, however, but struck out toward the West Chester pike. Here a circle of a mile or two was made, and the chase led back again to Newtown Township, and almost to the place of starting. Crum Creek was crossed several times and then the trail was followed over to Ridley Creek. The country here was rough, and the huntsmen had to do some hard riding to keep up with the procession. Once more the fox made a turn and passed Castle Rock and swam Crum Creek. He made a 'bluff' of going into Evans' Rocks, but, evidently enjoying the sport, made a killing pace across country to Sugartown, Chester County. Another turn was made here, and the fox came back along Crum Creek and then to Evans' Rocks. He could easily have taken to earth at this point, but he was not done yet with his pursuers. He started once more toward Castle Rock, looking back as if challenging the hunters and hounds to follow. The latter were a tired and sorry looking lot by this time, the chase for the most part having been made through mud and slush. Some of the horses were fagged out completely and it was decided for once to let Reynard have his way. The hounds were called off and the hunting aggregation made its way at a walk back to the club house. Those who started at the beginning and stayed in the hard six hours' run to the end were Simon Delbert, William Stotesbury, Alfred L. Hawkins, George W. Hill, J. Howard Lewis Jr., William Velotte, Wm. Davis, Daniel Rice, John Hawkins, Samuel McClure." A gallant little band, a tremendous chase, and the gamest kind of a fox. Some of our southern fox-hunters would enjoy themselves immensely hunting with this time-honored Pennsylvania pack.

THE following interesting instance of a blind but none the less keen sportsman riding to hounds in Ireland many years ago is contributed to our English cotemporary, The Field: "It may interest some of your readers to learn that a gentleman of the name of Mr. Hewetson Nixon regularly hunted with the Kilkenny Hounds in the present century, and that there are still living several people who well remember him. He died some fifty years ago at no great age. He became totally blind when about twelve years old, but not only was he able to ride all over the country entirely alone, but he was able to ride to hounds. A boy rode in front of him to give him warning when he was nearing a fence, and it has been related to me that on one occasion (possibly on many) the boy got a fall of which his master was unaware, and therefore continued to ride forward. Fences were encountered without warning, and denunciations were therefore hurled at the head of the boy, whom his master still imagined to be in front of him. He was probably riding to the cry of hounds or to some other rider. He was a remarkably active man, and could perform many extraordinary feats. As a young man, he used, in Summer, to go down from his father's house to a high rock over the River Nore, a distance of about a quarter of a mile, passing through a grove of large trees, jump off the rock into the river, swim about, and then return home My father often witnessed this practice. He was very fond of music and could play several instruments of a simple kind. But, more wonderful than all, he was considered an excellent 'vet.,' and his advice in buying a horse was much sought after. It was said that he could tell everything about a horse except his color, feeling him all carefully over; and that he could test his eyesight by touch also. His nephew, who succeeded to the family property and place, sold them fifty years ago, or more; but members of Mr. Nixon's family are still connected with the county. He died unmarried."

THE first run of the Meadowbrook's Spring season, which had been postponed from March 12, came off last Saturday. The meet was at Wheatley Pond, near Mr. E. D. Morgan's residence, and most of the regular followers of the Meadowbrook pack were on hand to greet the Master. Joseph Murphy had twenty-two couple of hounds out, and the drag led them across the Harbor Hills and over Hempstead plains to the Jericho tollgate.

Fish and Fishing

DARK VS. FULL MOON FISHING

CHICAGO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Kindly allow space in your valuable paper for me to ask my fishermen friends if they have ever noted that the moon had a controlling influence over fishes of the genus Esox. I am one of that numerous body of amateur fishermen whose other duties allow him to go fishing but once a year. For the past fifteen or twenty years, with few exceptions, I have annually made a pilgrimage to the headwaters of either the Wisconsin or Chippewa rivers—waters in which the gamy mascalonge, pike and bass do most abound. Heretofore I have always timed my trips so as to be in camp during full moon, not that I thought the moon exercised any influence over the fishes but from the mere fact that it is more pleasant in camp during the full, than in the dark of the moon.

Last year it so happened that I was compelled to reverse the usual order and take my fishing trip during the dark of the moon or not at all, and my success was so abundant in the number of fishes caught that I am almost persuaded to think the moon had something to do with it. True, I was fishing in waters new to me and had it not been for a remark made by my guide I would probably have attributed my good luck to there being more fishes in those waters than in the waters heretofore fished. I had for a guide an old and experienced fisherman who had more good horse sense (crude though it was) about fish and fishing than any man I ever met. He seemed to know to a nicety the very whims of the game we were after and where, when and in what manner it was necessary to cater to their fastidious appetites, and before my trip was over I learned to rely on his judgment almost implicitly. He assured me he had noted the fact during all the years he had been acting as guide that fishes were most voracious in the daytime during the dark of the moon. His theory was that fishes of the genus Esox gorged themselves with small fry on bright, moonlight nights, and as a consequence were logy and not inclined to bite very freely during the day following.

If there is anything in this theory it may have been noted by others, and if so I would ask them to kindly give their experience and observations on the subject.

NOTES

CRYSTAL LAKE, McHenry County, Ill., was at one time the finest bass fishing water in Northern Illinois. It is a landlocked lake, fed entirely by springs, which well up everlastingly through the gravelly bottom. The water being clear and cold the bass were noted for their fine flavor and firm flesh, and this, alas, was the temptation which brought about the depletion of the finny inhabitants, as Chicago anglers would go there by the score, and with the netting, seining and ice fishing indulged in by residents and farmers around the lake it did not take take long to destroy one of the finest angling resorts in Northern Illinois. In interviews with several of the shore residents, George W. Strell, president of the Chicago Fly Casting Club, has ascertained that they now see the folly of disregarding the laws for the protection of fish, and with their promise of protecting the same in the future has brought the attention of Col. George W. Langford, secretary of the Illinois State Fish Commission, to the matter, and asked him to restock the lake with bass from the state hatcheries. Col. Langford has promised to do this, and by his generous act has placed the sportsmen anglers of Cook and McHenry counties under many obligations to him, and we feel sure each and every one will appreciate his efforts in their behalf. The following is a quotation from a letter from Col. Langford to Mr. Strell: "We are going to work about April 1, and you can say to your friends that as soon as we can get the fish they shall have them. We shall instruct Col. Bartlett to get up a carload of the finny tribe and send them to your friends at Crystal Lake and some other parties near Chicago, and we will have them all sent at the same time, as we cannot always get a car when we want it." Louis W. Crow, a resident of Crystal Lake and an ardent sportsman angler, writes: "I wish to assure you that the fish will be amply protected." Of this we have no doubt, and the hearty coöperation of every angler is asked in the work of protection and in prosecuting relentlessly all violators of the fish laws in any of the waters which are about to be restocked, as well as the Fox Lake waters.

ON February 22 a Minnesota game warden [illegible] deputy sheriff arrested seven men for illegal fishing [illegible] lakes in the vicinity of Waterville in that state. The [illegible]ials seized fifteen spears and about 100 pounds of [illegible] report from Waterville says:

[illegible] with the men had arrived at the hotel [illegible] trials would be at Kasota, some thirty [illegible]s [illegible]ant. The town became wild with ex[illegible] [illegible]han 300 men came together immed[illegible]d to inform the officers that the town possessed courts of justice, and that, as some of the prisoners were decrepit, others with sick in their families, two or three boys, and as many old soldiers, and all poor people, it would be entirely proper to give the arrested a hearing at home. While this argument was in progress, the spears and fish disappeared. The warden seeing that there might be trouble if he undertook to take the prisoners away, had them arraigned before Esquire Delon, where they pleaded not guilty and demanded separate trials and by jury, and time to prepare for trial. The court gave them till February 27 to appear, without bail. Some of the fishermen said they were fishing with hook and line and had their spears handy so as to help out such fishes as were liable to break the lines. All that is lacking to compel the repeal of this law is to have it put in force. It is generally known that no member of the legislature can ever be elected here who will not pledge himself against any such game law as we now have. There is not a friend of the law in thi end of Le Sueur County.

Truly this depicts a fine condition of affairs in that county. The law does not please the people, therefore they mob the officials who are executing its provisions and steal the incriminating implements and fishes. These are bad methods by which to fight a detested law,

On Monday of last week the Ferris bill to regulate the use of pound nets in international waters caused a breezy discussion in the lower body of the Minnesota legislature. Mr. Douglass proposed an amendment limiting the use of the pound nets, so that no fishes could be caught between April and May 20—their spawning season. He described the use of the nets, with their leads and pockets, and the havoc they played with the sturgeon. Mr. Robbins opposed the amendment, as the sturgeon was the only fish caught, and it could not be exterminated by the use of pound nets. It spawned at all seasons, and it would be a really beneficial thing to have its numbers diminished, as it destroyed smaller fish. It was not a game fish and therefore its absence could mean nothing to the sportsman. Mr. Robbins read a letter from Prof. Conway MacMillan of the Natural History Survey, substantiating these points, and further claiming that the companies now located in the Lake of the Woods conducted their fishing in lawful manner, and that there need be no fear of fishing the lake out, as it was a large body of water, and nets could never be set in between the rocky little islands, where the fish spawned. After considerable debate the amendment was adopted. Another amendment, limiting to fifty in number the nets to be used by any one fishing company, was also adopted. By another amendment the state fish and game commission was authorized to locate in the future the fishing stations on the Lake of the Woods.

That many trout have been caught illegally during the past few weeks is not open to doubt, says the San Francisco Chronicle in a recent issue. This fishing is done by people who live along the streams and are very careful not to be seen by anyone that would enter a complaint, and although the state fish commissioners have employed men to patrol the streams none of the violators have been captured. The trout season will open April 1, and anglers are anticipating excellent sport. On March 10, at the preserve of the Tamalpais Shooting and Fishing Club, on the Throckmorton Lagoon, a party of three men from San Francisco—Messrs. John Berges, John Lemmar and Osborn—had unusually fine sport with steelheads. Mr. Osborn caught sixteen small ones and Mr. Berges hooked a big one three times. Twice the fish broke away, but the third time the hook held; and after a fight which lasted over one hour, the big steehead was landed and proved to be a sixteen-pounder.

Stray shad were taken last week at several places along the Delaware River. The New Jersey state fish commission has given notice that hereafter no brook trout fry will be furnished by the state to stock the waters of private citizens. The day of the German carp in New Jersey has passed. A law has been enacted and signed by the governor which inflicts a penalty of not less than $100, or imprisonment, for placing any kind of carp in any waters—public or private—in the state, excepting that the law does not apply to the owners of private ponds or waters which are so constructed or arranged as to effectually prevent the escape of the carp or their spawn into any other waters of the state or those owned by other private parties. Although the trout season opens on April 1, by reason of snow and ice the fishing season will not really commence for some weeks to come.

Early this month Iowa State Fish Commissioner G. E. Delavan paid a visit to Webster City, his principal business [illegible] tion of the necessity for fishways [illegible] [illegible]ase and Excelsior mills upon the [illegible]. [illegible] made arrangements for the pro[illegible] th[illegible]nd parties in that section who have [illegible]bearing, seining, shooting and dynamiting will have to be careful how they continue their illegal pursuits.

The trout law of Connecticut now prohibits the taking of any trout under six inches in length, and it is thought the enforcement of the law will make a great difference in the success of troutsmen, as for many years the greater part of the catch has been less than six inches in length.

On March 21 the Wisconsin state fish car left a batch of several thousands of brook trout fry at Hudson, in that state, for distribution in the streams of the county. The state fish commission has bought two or three hundred thousand of fry from the hatchery of Crary & Graves, at Hudson.

In the Maine House, the inland fisheries committee has agreed to report unanimously in favor of an appropriation of $25,000 for carrying out the provisions of the fish and game laws.

THE REPTILES OF MICHIGAN—NO. 10

BY MORRIS GIBBS

Racine Garter-Snake—Eutainia Radix (B. & G.).—Professor Hoy, now deceased, a renowned naturalist, brought this reptile to light as a species. It has been repeatedly reduced to the ranks as a variety by writers, but is, I believe, now acknowledged as a species. It differs principally in sometimes having twenty-one rows of scales on its back, from side to side, while the others of the genus have but nineteen rows. It is a very dark colored, striped snake. I have never found it common, but Mr. Geo. Sudworth, of Washington, D. C., considers it abundant in Michigan. In its habits it is quite similar to others of the terrestrial members of the genus. Professor E. D. Cope says:

"The genus Eutainia presents especial attractions to the student who desires an illustration of the phenomena of variation and constancy in the physical characters of animals. In few genera do we find so well illustrated the persistence of specific characters exhibited side by side with variations of the same."

This snake, as with all other species which I have noted or have received information upon, sheds its skin How often this process of exfollation is accomplished I do not know, but feel well satisfied that it occurs at least once a year, and with the snakes of my neighborhood the act is usually accomplished during the month of May or early June. At this season the specimens look brighter and fresher, while during the late Summer and Fall months individuals examined appear much less bright. The process of dropping the old overcoat or, more properly, of crawling out of it, is an interesting one. The length of time varies greatly, sometimes taking but a few minutes and again occupying about three hours and depending, probably, on conditions and surroundings. The skin splits at the muzzle, usually, and the snake glides out of it. Sometimes it is easily done, and again it is accomplished with difficulty, the external coat coming away only in flakes and patches. I have seen wild individuals who had a tattered and ragged appearance and made me think of an old sheep which had run wild in the woods and had tags hanging to its sides.

Some observers assert that the exuviated coat is an exact form of the snake, but I have often found that the skin was completely inverted. This can be readily proved or disproved by stuffing out the shed skin, when it will be generally seen that the skin has been turned inside-out. The scales or plates about the head will best indicate this. The skin, if still fresh, can readily be stuffed to a proper size and will easily give a fair idea of the reptile, but, of course, without any color, which proves that the colors are confined to the deeper integument and that this exfoliated coat is to be likened to the epidermis or so-called scarf-skin in man.

NOTES

In New York City recently died Mr. Berthold Neumoegen, an amateur ornithologist of note who had passed over twenty years in making a collection of over 100,000 specimens of rare and beautiful butterflies. The science was his passion and all his leisure was spent in adding to his collection, which is exceeded in number and variety by but two in the world—one in the British Museum, in London, and one in Paris. He generally had in stock an immense number of butterflies to exchange with other collectors, employed two men who were kept busy shipping and receiving specimens, and eight years ago he shipped in one year 20,000 butterflies to Europe. Livingston, the great African explorer, furnished Mr. Neumoegen with some of his rarest specimens. Others were furnished by Henry M. Stanley, Lieut. Schwatka and members of the Greely relief expedition. Among them were butterflies from Franklin Bay, from the shores of Greenland, from Lakes Tanganyika and Victoria Nyanza, from the headquarters of the Amazon, and from Labrador, Thibet, Alaska, China, Siberia, Turkestan, and Kamtchatka, and from the Himalayas, the Rocky Mountains and the Alps.

The Chicago Audubon Society, composed of forty-four ladies of that city, and of which Mrs. E. Irene Rood is president, holds monthly meetings at the Athenæum. The object of the society is to protect birds by discouraging the use of birds' plumage as millinery, and to effect legislation for the better protection of our songsters. It is claimed by the president of the society that the organization is the only one of its kind in the United States, that a similar society existed in New York but has disbanded.

The revenue cutters on the Pacific assigned by Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle to the duty of patrolling Bering Sea to protect the fur seals are six in number—the Corwin, Rush, Bear, Grant, Wolcott and Perry. Probably several war ships will be assigned later in the season to assist the revenue cutter fleet, should the poachers become so numerous that the revenue cutters and the English naval squadron in Bering Sea are unable to effectually protect the seals.

The festive polecat (Mephitis mephitica) is not uncommon in the staid old state of Connecticut, it seems. During the past Fall and Winter, Charles Skinner, living near Norwich, caught and skinned sixty-seven skunks. Quite a "skinner" Charles proved himself.

Near West Mystic, Conn., a few days ago, a fox-hunter—John Emmons—of that place is said to have shot a silver-gray fox, an animal which is very rare in that section of the country.

Fifty-seven foxes have been killed this Winter within a five-mile radius of Exeter, N. H., town hall.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—NO. 10

The Mining Camps of British Columbia

There is no field of enterprise, to which Americans have devoted their energies, more replete with the stories of adventure than the mining camps of North America. Much of the thrilling incident, wild life and reckless daring; and something of the tireless toil, sturdy manhood, changeless fidelity and lofty heroism that have clustered around the mining camps of California and Nevada have been perpetuated. Much more has passed out of remembrance, and concerning the camps of the North Pacific slope very little has been preserved, although Fraser River, the Caribou, Peace River and the Cassiar are names familiar to every old-time miner from the Columbia River to the Yukon.

From the volumes of stories of adventure, hardship, heroism and devotion to which—around the cheerful fires of the settlements during the long Winter nights, and in the lone cabin of the miner during the matchless Alaskan Summer evenings when the silvery brightness of the slowly fading twilight lingers until midnight, and at the campfire in front of the tent on the beach, with the somber gloom of the evergreen forest behind me and in front the waters of some lonely cove smooth as a mirror and reflecting back the mountains, the sky and the stars—I have listened, this sketch of the mining camps of British Columbia has been gathered

The first discovery of gold in Her British Majesty's American possessions was made in 1857, by a man named Walker (whose first name I have not been able to ascertain), at Murderer's Bar on the Fraser River, two and one-half miles below Fort Hope, a post of the Hudson Bay Company. This great monopoly then held undisputed sway from the boundary line of the United States to the Arctic, and from Hudson Bay to the Pacific, ruling this vast area with an iron hand. Its charter over the region of the Fraser River was to expire in 1858 and with it Walker's term of service. He therefore kept his discovery a secret until both these events had transpired and then commenced mining on the Murderer's Bar. Despite the long distance and the isolated character of the place, the news was not long in reaching San Francisco and thence spread rapidly into the towns and mining camps of the interior. Probably, of all the excitements that have followed the gold discoveries along the continental range, the stampede for Fraser River has never been surpassed. Miners threw up claims that were paying an ounce per day to the man, and abandoned water rights, ditches and tunnels, which, in some instances, had cost thousands of dollars and years of labor to construct. Merchants sold out their goods at any sacrifice; lawyers quit their briefs, as clients had disappeared; physicians packed their medicine cases, as their patients had caught an epidemic they were powerless to stay; ministers of the gospel abandoned their pulpits for lack of flocks; and all were absorbed in the single purpose to be the first to reach the new diggings. Property holders in San Francisco were taken with the fever and some of that city's most wealthy men of to-day trace their fortunes to the Fraser River exodus, which gave them the opportunity to purchase for a song lots now in the very heart of the city and whose value mounts up into the millions.

One branch of the migration was overland, and long wagon trains wound through the mountain ranges headed for the North. The other branch took the Pacific for Victoria, thence across the Gulf of Georgia to the river's mouth. Every craft that could turn a wheel or spread a rag of canvas was called into service, and each one left San Francisco loaded to the guards. Victoria was transformed into a city of tents, the public houses being unable to accommodate more than a fraction of the crowds which poured from every newly arrived vessel.

Strange to say scarcely an accident occurred along the water route until the ascent of the river was commenced. The stream rises in the Rockies proper, and breaks through the Cascade and Coast ranges by way of some of the most majestic cañons on the continent, and a short distance above tidewater is navigable only for canoes and small boats. In ascending the river rapids are encountered which are often turbulent in the extreme. To capsize between the perpendicular walls of one of the cañons is to meet swift destruction, and many perished thus in the wild scramble to reach the Murderer's Bar. But the large majority, in spite of danger and hardships, reached the new Eldorado, where one bar after another to the number of eight or ten was worked off, and by the Fall of 1859 the mouth of Canal River, one of the upper tributaries of the Fraser, was reached.

The precious metal taken from the bars was nearly all what is known in miner's parlance as fine or "float" gold, but in the Spring of 1860 coarse gold was discovered in a small stream tributary to the North Fork of the Canal River and shortly after a similar discovery was made at Ross' Gulch, a small feeder of the South Fork of the Canal. By the Summer of 1861 every creek, great and small, comprising the extreme headwaters of the Fraser and numbering nearly a score, had been explored. These streams, taken all together and draining an area of about twenty-four miles square, comprise the famous Caribou District, from which, there is scarcely a doubt, more placer gold has been taken than from any other area of equal dimensions on this continent.

The deposits found along some of the creeks and gulches were fabulous. As high as two hundred and sixty dollars are known to have been the "prospect" of a single pan of dirt. A thousand dollars were not an uncommon day's earnings for a single man. Two partners took out sixty-five thousand dollars in one season. Gold was handled not by ounces but by the pound. Nearly every extravagance which graced the pioneer mining days of California was here repeated if not outdone. As all supplies had to be "packed" in, over the mountains, from the mouth of the Canal River, a distance of about fifty miles, on the backs of white men and such natives as could be engaged for the purpose and at a cost of one dollar to two dollars and a half per pound, prices reached the most incredible figures. Rubber boots sold for fifty dollars per pair; picks for fifteen dollars apiece and shovels for twelve dollars. Flour and bacon were two dollars and fifty cents per pound; tobacco ten dollars per pound and whisky fifty cents a drink. Day wages for common laborers reached seventeen dollars, and "packers" not infrequently averaged forty dollars per day. These latter were a most hardy, muscular and resolute class, and well earned their money. By them not only all clothing and food supplies, but blacksmiths' iron, anvils, cooking stoves and even billiard tables were taken over the range, from the mouth of Canal River, into the camps.

The placer miner and prospector is a creature of unrest, and before the diggings in the Caribou were exhausted miners from that camp were on their way to new fields of discovery. In 1863 a party of Indians from the vicinity of Great Slave Lake reached the mouth of the Canal River, bringing with them some fine gold they had taken from the bars of Peace River. This stream, although rising well west, toward the Pacific, breaks through the Rockies by the Peace River Pass, and its waters find their way thence to the Arctic by the Great Slave Lake and the Mackenzie River.

A party, headed by a man whose real name is now lost in the sobriquet of "Peace River Smith," constructed a boat, pushed up the westerly tributaries of the Fraser to Fort George—the most northern post of the Hudson Bay Company on the tributaries of that stream—crossed the portage to the basin of the Arctic and reached the Parsnip River, a branch of the Peace, in the Autumn of 1863. Along the bars of these rivers they found fine gold in paying qualities, but the diggings failed to prove either as rich or extensive as those of the Fraser. Quite a rush for this section occurred, however, in the succeeding years of 1864 and 1865, and the Dominion Government expended several thousands of dollars in constructing a road over the portage to enable miners to take their boats and outfits from the headwaters of the Fraser to those of the Peace. The excitement concerning this section was short-lived, and at best comparatively few found employment; but of these a small number remained mining, trapping, hunting and subsisting on the natural products of the country until the discovery of the Cassiar, on the Arctic side, north of the headwaters of the Stickeen River.

From the Peace River the next camps founded in British Columbia were in the Kootenai Mountains, in the year 1863. This range is a western spur of the Rockies, and from the panhandle of Idaho, near Lake Pend d'Oreille, extends north across the line into British Columbia. During that Summer a party of half-breeds, known as the Findlays, took out about a thousand dollars from the cañon of a creek which rises in the Selkirk Range and empties into the Columbia lakes, at the head of the South or East Fork of the Columbia River, now known as Findlay's Creek.

The fact that this sum had been taken out by half-breeds led miners on the American side to believe that the deposits must be very large, as they had long ago learned that the noble red man's blood prompted not toward the labor and hardship of the mining camp, but rather toward horse stealing and chasing the buffaloes which in vast herds then ranged every valley and grazed every mountain slope from the Texas border to the plains of the Saskatchewan.

This tribe of half-breeds also enjoyed a wide reputation of being good for almost anything except work. Their original paternal progenitor was an Irishman, named Patrick Findlay, who, many years before the time of which I am now writing, had been an employee of the Hudson Bay Company, and after quitting that service led the wild, nomadic life of half-outlaw, half-trader. His habitation was a buckskin wigwam, labeled and known far and wide as "Lodge No. 98." He appears to have been a prolific sire, as the saying has it that it soon took ninety-eight lodges to house his posterity, and in 1863 octoroons of his blood were not uncommon. His descendants may be found at the present time along the forty-ninth and fiftieth parallels of latitude, in almost every valley from the Red River of the North to the headwaters of the Columbia; but whether they have bequeathed anything of value to the world aside from "Findlay's Creek" is not known.

In the Spring of 1864 parties began to move toward the new country from Walla Walla, the Dalles and Portland, and also from Salt Lake, Nevada and Montana, and during that Summer some profitable placers were found, the most notable of which is Wild Horse Creek, which for a distance of nearly four miles yielded from ten dollars to ten ounces per day to the man. By the Fall of 1864 explorations had reached the extreme headwaters of the Columbia, in the Selkirk Range, and in 1865 the creeks along the Big Bend of that river were active scenes of placer mining; but the greater attractions of Montana, which at this time was at the zenith of its mining prosperity, drew the adventurers back to the "States," and by the Spring of 1866 mining in the British Possessions was practically at a standstill, and so remained until 1872, when the headwaters of the Driard River were reached and the rich deposits of the Cassiar brought to light.

Concerning this discovery, I doubt if the whole field of human adventure has anything to surpass the hardship, suffering, courage and endurance of the original discoverers of this camp, McCullough and Thibert. They left St. Paul, Minn., in the Summer of 1869, with a horse and cart and an outfit of guns, ammunition, fishing tackle, traps, picks, shovels and pans, and a small supply of provisions, as they intended to subsist chiefly by hunting and fishing. They moved northwest, crossing the rolling prairies of Minnesota into Manitoba and Assiniboia, and reached Fort Edmonton, on the Saskatchewan River, late in November of that year, where they passed the Winter. Having procured some fishing nets and several other articles needed for their further trip, they proceeded to a Roman Catholic mission, situated on the headwaters of Athabasca River, making the trip in a sleigh. There they constructed a boat and passed down the river to the lake of the same name, thence by the Slave River to the Great Slave Lake, reaching Fort Resolution—a post of the Hudson Bay Company, located at the mouth of Slave River—in the last days of Summer.

Thus far the adventurers had fared well. The country along the Athabasca and Slave Rivers is [illegible] covered quite a heavy growth of cottonw[illegible] there interspersed with patches of pra[illegible] cranes and waterfowl were abundant, a[illegible] uncommon.

But the real toils and hardships of t[illegible] were yet to come. They remained a f[illegible] Resolution, and then cruised southeast [illegible] Slave Lake to the mouth of the Hay River, another affluent of the lake, where they passed the Winter at another Catholic mission.

As soon as the ice broke up in the Spring of 1871 they were again under way and passed out of the Great Slave Lake into the Mackenzie River, and descended that stream to the confluence of the Driard, which they decided to ascend. This stream is generally known among miners and explorers as the Deloure, and is laid down on most of the maps as the "Liard." It has its source on the east slope of that range of mountains which skirts the Alaskan Coast, and its headwaters comprise two series of streams—one rising within three miles of the head tributaries of the Stickeen, the other away to the north near the source of the Peily, which is an affluent of the Yukon. The two branches unite near the fifty-ninth parallel and flow east, breaking through the Rockies by way of a colossal cañon situated over a hundred miles north of the Peace River Pass.

Among all the fastnesses of nature along the continental divide, for intensely wild, lonely and terror striking grandeur the cañon of the Deloure is probably without a rival. It is a monstrous chasm, over twenty miles long, severing in twain the main chain of the Rockies. Its sides are precipitous, often perpendicular, and tower thousands of feet above the bed of the stream. The volume of water is very large, several times greater than that of the Wisconsin River at the Kilbourn Dalles, and in making the descent of twenty miles it rushes down rapids, plunges into huge caldrons, breaks into cascades and leaps into cataracts, continuously boiling and seething and sending forth from the cañon a ceaseless, hollow, rumbling roar which rivals the thunder of Niagara Falls. The stream from its mouth at the Mackenzie to the foot of the cañon is swift and turbulent, and McCullough and Thibert passed many a day of toil paddling and poling up the river before they reached the great cañon. Six weeks were then consumed in making the portage of their boat and effects, over the divide to the head of the cañon, and the Winter of 1871–72 found them alone, without provisions, in this remote and almost uninhabited and uninhabitable region.

In former years the Hudson Bay Company had maintained posts in that section, but these had been abandoned, so that, as to supplies as well as regarding information about the geography of the country, the explorers were left to their own resources. McCullough was an old miner and had passed through some of the later camps of California, and was at the Kootenai and the diggings near the Big Bend of the Columbia. In prospecting the bars of the Driard, above the great cañon, he [illegible] found fine gold in paying quantities, but in the [illegible] of the wilderness which surrounded them, where [illegible] Arctic Winter pierced to the marrow and the pan[illegible] hunger preyed at their vitals, how utterly worthless [illegible]

the God of Mammon. As the Winter advanced, the sole question became how to sustain life. The country [illegible] to be nearly barren of game. Before they completed their forage around the cañon they had been compelled to look [illegible] at a buffalo skin that was a part of [illegible]ng. They frequently separated at camp, taking different directions, and sometimes did not see each [illegible]vs [illegible]ms. Occasionally a fish was caught or a ptarmigan [illegible], but big game seemed out of the question.

On one of his trips Thibert found a small lake, and after hours of toil succeeded in chopping a hole through the ice with a small hand ax, and was rewarded by one fish which in the fierceness of his hunger he devoured without waiting to cook it. On another occasion each of them, after two days' absence, reached the log cabin they had built for their Winter quarters empty-handed, and as a dernier ressort they gathered together the already well-picked bones of the birds, fishes and animals which had previously graced their bills of fare, and from these remnants prepared a consomme sufficiently void of nutriment to satisfy the most exacting boarding-house keeper, which, nevertheless, they devoured with avidity.

Winter slowly dragged by, and with the returning Spring the two frontiersmen resumed the ascent of the Driard, now intent on reaching the tidewater of the Pacific. The Summer days passed by and Autumn found them still en route.

On a bright September morning they entered Dease Lake, the southern source of the Driard and one of those mountain gems whose beauty is ever enhanced by the rough surroundings in which they are set. The lake is nearly twenty-six miles long but only three to four miles in width, and the explorers scanned either shore with eager eyes for signs of human life. They soon descried a column of blue smoke slowly curling upward which their unerring judgment, gained by years of experience on the border, told them was the sign of a campfire. The camp proved to be that of a Tal-tan or Upper Stickeen Indian and his native spouse, who were in there trapping beavers. Although neither party could speak the vernacular of the other, the word "Stickeen" proved to be a sort of Shibboleth which led to a mutual understanding, and that evening the native host entertained his guests with a dinner of steaks from a caribou he had killed the day previous.

The lake abounded with fish, and not knowing but they might be obliged to pass the Winter there the whites commenced to lay in a stock of the finny tribes, which McCullough proceeded to dry in the open air after the manner of the natives of this coast. Thibert began to explore and prospect the neighboring streams, and the second day out found coarse gold in the bed of one of the larger creeks that empty into the lake. The "prospect" was taken into camp and shown to McCullough, who at once pronounced it gold and manifested that excitement an old miner is never able to suppress in the presence of a new "find." He proposed to return at once to the ground and continue explorations, but the Indian had determined to return that day to the Stickeen and the whites reluctually concluded to accompany him. Four days later they reached Telegraph Creek, on the Stickeen, where a party of miners were at work, and the story of the new discovery was related.

Later that Fall McCullough and Thibert, in company with the Stickeen miners, returned to Dease Lake and claims were staked and a mining district was organized under the name of the Cassiar, which for the next succeeding three years proved to be one of great activity and several millions of precious metal were added to the wealth of the world.

The names of its original discoverers have, however, nearly passed into oblivion. Thibert's subsequent career I have not been able to trace. McCullough perished on the Stickeen, in the early Spring of 1873, while on his way to the ground of his discovery, and he sleeps his final slumber in the little graveyard at Wrangel. The mining camp founded by him and his companion is now a thing of the past, but I have thought the story of their remarkable expedition worthy of a longer lease of life.

THE tendency of the times is for men who possess wealth and leisure to gratify their love for field sports in a truly luxurious manner. One of the latest instances coming to our notice is the order said to have been given by a Chicago man, Mr. Frank H. Ray, for the construction of a light-draft stern-wheel yacht, with which he intends to pursue the sports of shooting and fishing upon the headwaters of Western rivers, the Missouri, Yellowstone, or any in which he can find seventeen inches of water to float the craft. The boat is to be constructed of steel, 125 feet in length, 25 feet beam, 5 feet depth of hold, will have two poppet valve engines with 12-inch cylinders and 78-inch stroke, will be supplied with an electric light plant, and a powerful searchlight will be placed upon the hurricane deck forward. The hull will [illegible]ater-tight compartments, there are [illegible]ft bulkheads, and floor plates will [illegible] the bottom. Upon the main deck [illegible] stables, carriage rooms, cookhouse, [illegible]arters, engines, boilers, etc. Upon [illegible]oon deck will be a smoking-room forward, next a large dining-room, washroom and pantry, twelve bedrooms on either side of a long, wide hall, then a large drawing-room, aft of which are to be bath and toilet rooms. The finish of all these rooms is to be mahogany and other hardwoods. The vessel is to cost over $50,000 as she leaves the steel works, and the owner expects to have her ready to start upon a six months' cruise in July next. An electric launch will be carried upon the main deck, and the craft will be supplied with all the latest appliances for sport and safe transportation. This light-draft river sporting palace will have a speed of fifteen miles an hour.

PULLMAN car porters form one great secret society whose ritual differs only in a slight degree on separate systems, said Philip Welsh, a traveling man, to a writer for the Washington Star. "You know the professional tramps leave hieroglyphic information for those of their guild who come after them on fences and gate posts along the roads they travel. Pullman porters instruct each other about the traveling public in much the same way. The means taken by the porters are simple but unerring. The favorite place in which they put their ciphers so full of meaning is on the inside edge of travelers' boot heels. Every patron of a Pullman must, of course, place his footgear for a time at the mercy of the porter, and if such a traveler is wise in his generation and will examine the heels of his shoes he will find a nick here and another there, which, if he can secure a translation of them, will tell him what the porter thinks of him. A nick in one part of the heel will mean that their wearer is a generous, open-hearted man, and the porter who gets a pair of heels marked in such a way will fairly overwhelm their owner with attention. A nick at another place will denote a crabbed, close and bad-tempered owner, and future porters who get gaiters bearing that information will steer clear of their wearer. A 'spotter'—one of the individuals who are employed by the Pullman company as spies on the conductors and porters—is known by a certain nick in his heel, and you can bet the employees mind their p's and q's when such a heel is found in the porter's aggregation of boots and shoes. The American railway porter is a pretty cute individual, I tell you, and when you see one of them particularly attentive to some one passenger you can make a bet that his heels bear the proper cabalistic marks."

WE feel deep sorrow at being compelled to announce the demise of Capt. C. W. Bellairs, of St. Louis, Mo., who died last Sunday night from erysipias, at the age of sixty-three years. Captain Bellairs was formerly an officer in the British Army, spent many years in that service in India, and his death will be regretted by many readers of the AMERICAN FIELD who knew him as the writer of a very interesting serial, entitled "Life of an English Army Officer," published about three years ago, in which he graphically described the field sports of an army life in India. Captain Bellairs was an enthusiast in racing matters, for years was the superintendent of the St. Louis Jockey Club's racetrack and fair grounds, was devoted to fox-hunting, coursing and shooting, and was the genuine type of a whole-souled all-round sportsman. A large circle of friends and acquaintances will mourn his death.

HUNTING TO THE GUN IS NOT ALL

ST. LOUIS, Mo.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD: Early last Fall I sent two very beautiful and highly bred setters to a trainer in Tennessee, to have them broken. Word came from their tutor from time to time that they were progressing nicely, and that one of them was very fast and extra stylish on point. As I have owned their mother till she has grown old and almost toothless in the service, I was anxious for her to leave at least two worthy of her name. As time grew apace I became intensely anxious to see these hopefuls with my own eyes, so last December a chum and myself started for ten days' quail shooting in Tennessee. We went by invitation to said trainer's home, and were told by a friend before we went that we would have a pleasant time—and I can assure the readers of this article that it was "no lie, either." I found my dogs in beautiful condition; their coats, like their eyes, fairly shone, as did all the other dogs at the school.

After enough dog talk had taken place to satisfy almost any crank, this disciple of the whistle said he wanted to show me on game a very fine Derby entry that he had. Attached to a chain came forth a beautiful lemon and white setter dog, and we started for a likely looking covert, not two blocks away. I asked Andy (we will call him this) what he had the dog chained for when going only such a short distance. He said that he was breaking dogs for three of the leading field trialmen, and that he had positive instructions from them all not to use force on their puppies, as they wanted them to be full of ginger and afraid of nothing. He said that this particular dog had killed five chickens for him, and that he had given him four good beatings; he thought it was not much trouble to lead the dog to the covert, and that he preferred this to whipping them so hard. I thought the dog would have to stop killing chickens if I were handling it, or I would be apt to use a whip, but just then Andy unsnapped the chain, and cried out, "get away," and such getting away no one ever saw outside of a field trial.

I wish you could have seen this imp of lightning go. Straight away he ranged until just a little white streak could be seen, when I remarked, "My goodness! He certainly is the right color, or he would have been out of sight long ago.' The whistle went to the mouth in a hurry, and back he started by a circuitous route, over a hill where a few scattered birds were feeding, but he either had not been educated to point singles, or he was too fast for his nose; at any rate, when they flushed, down he went, and there remained riveted until we got to him. A very pretty piece of work, and Andy rose in my estimation.

I said, "Now we can see some work on singles." I had located about where they went.

He remarked, "His owner don't care to have him worked on singles, and I let him go through them whenever he wishes; but he has to drop when they flush." He then went on to say: "I have never attended a field trial in my life; but these gentlemen told me that what is needed is wide and fast ranging, with an occasional point on a covey, but not to let their dogs potter on singles."

We started in another direction and I don't think it was over ten minutes before this lemon and white critter was out of sight. Then the whistle was agitated, and a systematic hunt commenced—not for the birds, mind you, but for the creature that was supposed to be huning for them. We found him at last half a mile from where we first missed him and just as he had flushed a large covey, and you can bet the way the lash wound around him was a caution. I don't think this trouncing was given so much for his bolting, as it was for his deliberate flush; but how could a high strung dog have done any better than did he, unless he had found them just before we came up? I rather insisted on following the birds, but he pulled out his watch and said: "I guess we had better go to the house and get another dog. This fellow has been working nearly two hours, and Mr. B—doesn't want him worked over an hour at a time; he wants to keep him fast." He said he had told the owner that if he was to work the dogs only an hour a day it would take six years to get them what he would call "trained," and that the owner replied that he did not care about their being broken. All he wanted was wide ranging, and now and then a point on coveys; that a field trial did not require it.

I wish you to kindly note what the instructions were to this handler, viz., "Have them range wide and fast a point occasionally on coveys will do, but don't let them fool with singles, and pay no attention to retrieving." These are the orders given by three of the most noted field trial followers we have to a man who is high-class as a shooting-dog breaker, but who had never been to a field trial or broken a dog for one; and I think if you will compare these orders to the way that some of the dogs have been running in the late trials you can see they must be instructions pretty geuerally used by those miserable trial breakers. Take, for instance, the last Southern trials, and you will find a heat run like this: "Dogs put down and ran from 3:16 to 4:30. After a run of about fifteen minutes, in which both showed fair pace and range, a bevy was flushed by horsemen and marked down in a wood near by. The dogs were worked to it; a little point work was done by both dogs, but the birds flushed wild ahead (I say from dogs not being under control and taught to use care and their heads when ground and circumstances demand painstaking work). Passing to the open again T— pointed. McC— could not find the birds. Both dogs now tried to locate them, but failed, although the birds were flushed from ground passed over by them. T— put up some in thick grass. After this they were ordered up." This is a heat, word for word, and I could give you a score of others where scarcely a point was made: but it was pace and range that "knocked the persimmons." One of these dogs has won in an all-age stake and is considered high-class. He may be; but if this be the opportunity and class work he is judged by, then the instructions I speak of are good ones and well worth remembering by handlers breaking for the trials.

I herewith give you the actual work done the first day's running of the Derby at the Southern trials, as given by Major Taylor's report in the AMERICAN FIELD. Fourteen dogs ran, including Tony's Boy (the winner), Tony's Gale (second) and Delhi (third): Bevies pointed, 9; bevies flushed, 3; bevies supposed to have been flushed (judges not sure), 2; singles pointed, 10; singles flushed, 4; false points, 3; to say nothing about unsteadiness, etc., etc.

What do shooting-dog men think of this record?

I think I have shown that a dog to stand a show in the trials of to-day must be very speedy and a wide ranger; so if some of the professional breakers see a strange dog with the speed of the wind at the next trials they will know it is a puppy bred by me out of a crazy running bitch (by Roderigo) I own and by a crackajack greyhound that belongs in my locality. I know the bitch will give the puppy enough bird sense to occasionally point a bevy, and if I can get Jim Avent to let this anticipated winner run with his wonderful running foxhound Hunter a while then I know I shall have a winner Why shouldn't I? Just fancy how I shall be able to come out in the AMERICAN FIELD the next week and advertise him as the winner in such and and such a trial, fee $75 to $100.

No one likes speed and range better than I do; but a high-class shooting dog, to please me, must have something more. He must surely hunt to the gun, as Mr. P. H. Bryson suggests. I do not want to be watching all the time for my dog. I want him in some degree to have his eye on me, and recognize that I am afield with him. I want him to range wide in the open; but after the birds have gone to the timber, I want him to be educated that care must be exercised, or he will flush his birds, which certainly would follow. Imagine a dog going through the dry leaves in the wood at a great burst of speed, or over sparsely covered ground, and what proportion of the birds do you suppose he would point? I want style to enter into this idol's make-up. And I would not give two cents for a dog that has not it. Then again, I want a field companion that stores up his strength, so that it is not all spent the first two hours (during which time he certainly goes too fast to do good work), when he gradually drops down to a gait that in a few hours fits him for his kennel, and the next day is (like the present field trials) almost dead. My dog must keep going. He must have the strength in the first place, and then he must know how to use it.

Now, if I am on the wrong track, and there is a difference between a high-class field trial dog and a high-class shooting dog, I want some of my numerous friends, through this valued journal, to explain it to me. I have asked several of the best handlers and breeders of the day what their opinions are on the subject, and although some of them at first start in with, "why there is a decided difference," usually end up with an explanation that a trial dog, if he were better educated, would make an extra good shooting dog. Now, why not raise the trials to this standard? I think you will find that in place of the number of entries decreasing each year, as they certainly are (and figures will show it) they will increase; and gentlemen who own well educated dogs will send them for competition, and will bring both their influence and money to bear, and the management will be lifted from the grasp of the handlers, who have at last secured what they have been working for for years.

A VISIT TO THE CROYDON KENNELS

CHICAGO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Recently the writer paid a visit to Peoria, Ill., where so many prominent fanciers reside, and among other kenneis he looked over were the Croydon Kenneis, owned by Mr. F. L. Dever, who is fast coming to the front as a bull terrier breeder and exhibitor.

Mr. Dever is a true fancier and most enthusiastic over his favorite breed. It is but a little over two years ago that he imported his first dog and commenced his career as an exhibitor, and although, owing to business engagements, he has not exhibited much, he has been fairly successful, both on the bench and in the kennel. He now owns several winners and can boast of having bred five or six more, an achievement few can lay claim to in so short a space of time.

The kenneis are situated at the back of Mr. Dever's residence, just at the end of his garden, and consist of a large barn divided into six comfortable compartments, kept nicely heated during this severe weather, opening out into a good inclosed yard for exercise, and, although there are not many inmates, Mr. Dever employs one man, whose only duty it is to attend to the dogs, and who walks them all out daily, weather permitting.

The sultan of the kennel is Croydon Dutch (75436). Breeder, Mr. H. North, England. Date of birth, August, 1890. By Streatham Monarch (Streatham Flyer—Trentham Baroness) out of Rose of Streatham (Trentham Dutch—Beeswing).

This is a grand-bodied, powerful terrier, with short back, well sprung ribs and deep chest, great length of head, good clean, flat skull, strong, punishing muzzle, and excellent expression; in fact his tout ensemble gives one the impression of tremendous strength and activity combined with elegance of outline, great quality and intense character. He is about a fifty pound dog.

It is a thousand pities that this good dog cannot be shown, but owing to an almost half lemon face he is barred from competing successfully on the bench; as a stud dog, however, he is bound to make his mark and to be of great service to the breed, and he has already sired several winners.

Bellerby King (32547). Breeder, Mr. J. Hill, England. Date of birth, February, 1892. By Ladywood Prince (Gully the Great—Robotham's Nell) out of Hill's Daisy. This dog is another more than useful one. He is not so good in body and substance as Croydon Dutch, but has good head properties.

In England he won second at Newcastle-on-Tyne two years in succession, second at West Hartlepool, and V.H.C. at Darlington. Since Mr. Dever imported him, he has the following wins to his credit: Third at Detroit; second (novice) at Chicago; and first at Des Moines, 1894, first open class, Chicago and Denver, 1895. I hear he has already sired some very promising puppies, some of which are shortly to make their debut on the bench.

Burston Kit (28431). Breeder, Mr. R. Taylor, England. Date of birth, April, 1891. By Derby (Champion Como—Rose) out of Countess Bendigo (Sullivan—Kit).

This is a good bodied bitch, weighing about thirty-five pounds, with a fair head, good skull and powerful muzzle, although a bit lippy, and her eye might be smaller. She is the first dog Mr. Dever ever exhibited, and she was successful at the first time of asking. This was at Omaha, in 1892, and since then she has won second at Detroit; she has, however, been but little shown, having always had maternal duties to attend to, but this year Mr. Dever has reserved her for the bench and intends trying his luck with her again at the approaching Chicago show. She is the household pet and is the especial delight of Mr. Dever's little girl.

Lowland Duchess (28432). Breeder, Mr. E. Burston, England. Date of birth, July, 1891. By Lowlander (Marquis—Kit) out of Random Nellie (Lord Random—Grove Violet). Another useful one both on the bench and in the kennel. She has good bone, legs and feet, nice head, eye and expression, but might be a bit shorter in body and stronger in muzzle.

She has won first at Chicago, 1893, second at Des Moines, and third at Chicago, 1894. She is the dam of several winners, among them Mr. George Whitney's smart bitch Fay; and, as she is now in whelp to Bellerby King, Mr. Dever is anxiously awaiting the arrival of another batch of winners.

Lowland Lassie (28433). Breeder, Mr. E. Burston, England. Date of birth, October, 1890. By Lowlander (Marquis—Kit) out of Maggie II (Dutch—Maggie May).

Lassie is another more than useful brood bitch, though not a show specimen, her head being too short; but if bred to either Dutch or King—who both have plenty of length of head—she should produce something out of the ordinary, as she is good in eye, body and tail, and her breeding is second to none.

This completes the list with the exception of Croydon Flyer, one of Mr. Dever's own breeding, by Croydon Dutch out of Burston Kit, and two promising puppies—a dog and bitch—three months old, by Tompkin Blucher (Champion Grand Prior—Lowland Lassie) out of Duchess of Dorking, an imported bitch. The dog puppy is particularly promising and will be heard from later if all goes well.

Croydon Puss is another bitch bred by Mr. Dever, but she was not at the kennels at the time of my visit. She won second in the puppy class, and divided the special for best bitch in the show with the winner in the open class, at Des Moines, last September, and was at that time a very promising youngster.

Altogether Mr. Dever is to be congratulated on the judgment he has used in having imported so good a specimen for the stud as Croydon Dutch, and in having got together such a sorty kennel. Brother fanciers will join me in wishing him still better success in breeding in the future, and that in the hope before long he will be the proud possessor and breeder of a White Wonder or a Streatham Monarch. With such a high quality dog as Croydon Dutch to breed to, there are many things less likely to happen than this.

BREEDING ENGLISH SETTERS

ATLANTA, GA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—A great deal has been written about the "Gleam blood" as a stay to keep the Llewellin strain of setters up to their present high position as field dogs, by infusing new blood into them, and I am not alone in the opinion that they must find an infusion of new blood from somewhere if they expect to hold their present position as field dogs. For some time I have foreseen the day coming when the get of Gladstone and Count Noble would be so thoroughly intermingled that it would be one and the same blood after Gladstone and Count Noble were useless as stud dogs; and even now most of the American Llewellins are of that type.

When we inquire whence did Mr. Llewellin get his excellent field dogs what is the only answer? His dogs are of necessity a combination of the Gordon, Irish and English setters, and their diversity of colorings is proof of the fact, Most of their pedigrees show that his Dan (E. 1336) was only two generations removed from the Gordon. Does not that fact show that the commingling of different bloods gave us the best of setters? Yet it would seem that as the Llewellins have been bred pure for a long time their blood would degenerate, and that a new infusion would add a new lease to their usefulness; and especially so in America, where most of the dogs are descendants of Druid, Gladstone and Count Noble. In a few years all their own get will be dead and we shall be virtually breeding brothers to sisters, and we shall be raising pets instead of bird-finders.

I believe we can get good assistance from the Gleam blood, as Gleam had some of the blood of San[illegible] to that of Dan. And Sam must have be[illegible] as the orange and whites have come down[illegible] out showing the tan of the Gordon. Will [illegible] help to keep the Llewellins up to their p[illegible] I think so and have thought so ever sinc[illegible] her reputation as a field dog. But at [illegible] was classed as a large, coarse dog (his brother, Baden Baden, was dubbed the "big cow" at the trials in 1885. nevertheless he downed such dogs as Mainspring and Belle of Piedmont, and, I hear, was entitled to the heat that was given to Bob Gates), and breeders did not use him much. But a few of us reared litters by him, and to the writer is due much of the honor of perpetuating his blood. I first bred my Buckellew—Brimstone bitch Doe to him and she produced Georgia Belle, my dog Almo and others; and better field dogs are not in the United States. Again, I agreed to buy a bitch puppy if the owner would breed his bitch Tube Rose (Count Noble—Champion Lit) to him; and I did buy and rear a bitch and bred her to my Gleam dog Almo. Now I have three dogs (Spy, Carnot and Beau) from that double cross of the Gleam and Count Noble bloods; they are to perpetuate the Gleam blood, and I expect, from indications, will add some laurels to that blood. And, unless poverty should force me, I will always have some of Gleam's progeny as company when I want a day's pleasure in the field, as they have range, endurance and bird sense and are healthy.

In my judgment the Gleam blood is the best that can now be used on the Druid, Gladstone and Count Noble crosses. I am convinced my friend, Dr. J. N. Maclin, is in full accord with me; he has shown his judgment by breeding two litters that were world-beaters and one of them was from a Gleam bitch that I bred and he reared. I was so well pleased with Gleam in the field I attempted to breed his daughter to him to perpetuate his blood, but the season had passed when she came to be served.

If the reader does not agree wsth me, wait and time will tell the truth of my ideas.

W. H. BLANCHARD.

HANDICAPPED BY THEIR SEX

CHICAGO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Last Summer, when the repealing of the "old mossback robber rule" had been accomplished I ventured timidly to question the U. S. F. T. Club's good judgment, and consequently was hauled over the coals by Messrs. Nat. B. Nesbitt and D. E. Rose, who had agitated the repeal. The former wound up his letter with: "In conclusion I will invite Mr. Two-Bits to West Point to see the United States trials run, and if there is no bitch there in heat, to prove my position, I want him to stop off with me a few days." I am afraid I did not thank Mr Nesbitt for his kind invitation (I was so appalled, Mr. Editor, by contemplating my temerity in venturing to differ from such authorities that I forgot my usual good manners), and I did not "come back at him" because I—well, I knew he would not be so easy to convince as a Pullman porter.

By jacks! but I am sorry I could not leave business to attend the trials at West Point. There was the bitch in season (Lad's Lady), doing her level best to prove that a bitch in that condition "cannot be expected to run in her best form," etc.; and your reporter says: "Lad's Lady's condition must have seriously handicapped her;" and, at her next trial, "she is clearly out of form." I wonder how Mr. Nesbitt would have explained it away to me (had I been present), and made good his declaration that "she works with more vim and animation than at any other time." I hope he will not take this as a challenge to bombard each other at long range through the AMERICAN FIELD'S columns, but I do regret very much that I was not at West Point to have a good talk with him about it. However, one cannot take in everything that is going on.

TWO-BITS.

JACKSON, TENN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I have wondered if it was a fact that bitches did not run up to their form while in heat. I have heard the question debated on both sides, but I am now convinced that it is surely the fact that a bitch is badly handicapped while she is in heat.

There were Lula K and Selah that started at the United States "B" trials in the All Age Pointer Stakes. Lula K ran a good heat in the first series and was thought by many to be a winner. She came in heat that day and the second series was not continued until the third day after she came in heat on account of rainy weather, which was all the worse for her, as she was flooding when she ran her second trial and seemed to be all out of shape and off her nose.

It seemed to be the case also with Selah, as I understand she was also in heat, and the report shows she made two rank flushes in the second series.

Lula K has been bred to Tick Boy. He is a son of King of Kent and Bloom, and I think stood second to none in that stake.

A VISITOR.

SPANIEL CLUB'S MEETING

A meeting of the executive committee of the American Spaniel Club was held at the office of Dr. S. J. Bradbury, 110 East Twenty-second Street, New York, Tuesday evening, March 19. Present: Messrs. E. M. Oldham, Dr. Bradbury and M. A. Viti; Mr. Oldham in the chair and Mr. Viti secretary pro tem.

The Secretary reported receipt of a letter from the American Kennel Club, stating that it was the sense of that body that the specials presented by Geo. Bell to the Spaniel Club were vested in that club and could be offered as heretofore.

The treasurer's report showed a balance of $200 25.

The committee on specials reported that the Duquesne Kennel Club, of Pittsburg, having complied with the Spaniel Club's rules, the Whitehead Trophy and Bell Cup would be offered at the Pittsburg show: also that the New England Kennel Club, having complied with the rules, the St. Lawrence Trophy, the Bell [illegible] and the Saybrook Trophy would be offered.

The Secretary reported that the New England Kennel Club had adopted the old classification instead of the new classification, and that he had written calling attention

...r. Messrs. Bradbury and Keasbey were ...mittee to communicate with the New ...nel ...b and given power to act.

...y r... that sweepstakes be opened at W. ...06. ...nown as the American Spaniel ke... sporting spaniels whelped in 18..., ... made not later than September 1, 1895, and to be accompanied by forfeit of $2; second forfeit of $3 to be paid January 1, 1896; entries on which forfeits are not paid on the stipulated dates to be thereby declared out. At least $25 to be added to the stake and the divisions to be 40 per cent. to first, 30 per cent. to second, 20 per cent. to third, 10 per cent. to fourth; open to club members only.

A WHOLESALE POISONING

PITTSBURG, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The poison fiend is again at work in this neighborhood and has succeeded in killing no less than thirty dogs, all of which had been entered for the coming dog show and were being put in condition at the time.

The poisoning took place at Waynesburg, Greene County. The dogs were all English and Irish setters of good breeding, and entailed quite a loss to their owners. Among them was the English setter Sallie Mac, owned by Frank R. McClure, of this city, who valued her highly; she was by San Roy—Cora, and was well thought of. John J. Kobart, of this city, lost his English setter Jerry; and Jas. Waldon, of Allegheny, lost two promising Irish setters. Some time ago Fred Pastre, superintendent of the last dog show here, lost his Irish setter dog Fred P at the same place; he was by Mac N out of Nettie and was entered in the Chicago show.

Although a detective has been put on the case it is doubtful if anything can be done, as these poison fiends cover up their tracks so well that it is a hard matter to secure a conviction even if they are caught. I would advise owners in this neighborhood to keep their dogs away from Greene County.

Everything is shaping itself well for the coming show by the Duquesne Kennel Club, and the entries are now close to 700, which figure, no doubt, will be reached by the time the entries close. The hall is very well located, being right in the center of the business portion of the city and readily accessible from all points. Fox terriers have quite a large list of specials.

THE PROPOSED METROPOLITAN KENNEL CLUB

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The committee appointed by Dr. Foote to help in forming the proposed Metropolitan Kennel Club met at the office of the American Kennel Club, 44 Broadway, New York, on March 21. Present, Dr. Foote, A. C. Wilmerding, James Watson and E. M. Oldham; Dr. Foote in the chair and E. M. Oldham secretary pro tem.

There was considerable discussion as to the best way to organize the new club, and it was finally resolved that the chairman should send out a circular letter to those who have already signified their desire to be members.

Further resolved that a meeting for the purpose of organization be held in the near future.

On motion adjourned.

The different members of the committee reported that much enthusiasm was shown by persons they had broached the matter to. It is the intention of the committee to make the club a social feature of the kennel world at a moderate expense, and with this end in view one of the matters discussed and looked favorably upon was to make the annual dues ten dollars for the first three hundred members.

NOTES

IN the report of the last Chicago dog show your reporter, Mr. James Mortimer, in commenting on my dog Beaufort's Boy (V.H.C.Res. open mastiff dog class, 3rd novice) takes occasion to say that in his opinion the dog was suffering from chorea. This statement is absolutely without foundation as I don't believe a healthier dog than Beaufort's B... came under the observation of ... should give utterance to such a ...nprehension. Beaufort's Boy is ... dogs that has never tasted a ... my knowledge (and I have had ...py), ever had a sick day in his ...s feed. He has lived out doors ...o matter what the state of the weather, hot or cold, and slept in a kennel without any artificial heat, and has never had any covering other than that given him by nature, whether the temperature was 90° above or 20° below zero. As to his condition at the time of Mr. Mortimer's criticism I will leave to all those who noticed him and care to do so to testify. I will merely say that I was complimented on it by several good judges. It is rather strange that, although criticisms of him appear in four kennel papers, Mr. Mortimer was the only reporter who "got on to" the chorea. I can only surmise that the dog "winked his other eye" at the man "with his feet on two continents," when the aforesaid man was taking notes and Mr. Mortimer took the wink for chorea. I have not owned less than six dogs for the past eighteen years, and have owned at one time or another dogs of nearly all the non-sporting and several of the sporting divisions. I now own dogs of six different breeds, among them such hardy representatives as Irish water spaniels, collies and fox terriers, and I never saw a dog that was as well all day and every day during his life as is Beaufort's Boy. It is not customary with me to notice or contradict the sometimes absurd, foolish or prejudiced comments that have appeared about my dogs in the many years I have been exhibiting, but this statement has brought me several inquiries as to its truth or falsity and I ask space for this correction.

Chicago. THOMAS W. MILLS.

I HAVE seen lately in the AMERICAN FIELD many complaints from dog owners relative to express companies and the excessive charges on dogs shipped by them; and these companies somehow never seem to have a uniform rate. For instance, last Spring I shipped a dog to B. F. Lewis, Lansdowne, Pa., on which the charges were seventy cents; later, the same dog in the same crate was sent to New York prepaid, for the same amount. I have had several similar experiences. Last Fall I shipped a dog to the terrier show at Brookline, Mass., and from the time he was in the office here until he was delivered in Boston it was just fifty-four hours. Two weeks ago my dogs benched at Chicago were returned to me, having been en route sixty-five hours; and simply because of the long journey and liability of delay between Chicago and Denver, I wrote Mr. Lewis to send my dogs home rather than have them take such a trip. I lost an entry at Denver, but better that than have a dog sick, from privations in an express car; though I was sure Ben Lewis would give him every possible care and attention, as he has in the past. I expect to send Hillside Royal, Wawaset Luna and Wawaset Lucy (a new bitch) to both the Pittsburg and Boston shows. Lucy came from the kennels of Mr. Francis Redmond, London, England, and was shipped on March 8 on the steamer Civic, reaching me March 23. She was in fine condition and showed she had been well cared for on the long trip. Mr. Fred Mansell of London acted as my agent and tended to shipping, etc. The bill of extras for freight, hamper, fees and commission was surprisingly small, and I can cheerfully recommend him to anyone purchasing dogs abroad; especially fox terriers, as a man of good judgment. Wawaset Lucy is by Despoiler (a grandson of both New Forest and Stipendiary) out of Squalls, by Champion Venio out of Shindy, the dam of Stipendiary; she has many fine points, is all white except a small black spot around left eye, has a rare coat, capital front and legs, and is a terrier all over. If Delaware climate agrees with her I hope to have her in bang-up shape for Pittsburg and Boston.

Wilmington, Del. JAMES FERRIS BELT.

THROUGH an error, we published in our premium list the American Spaniel Club's old classification (No. 1), not thinking for a moment there had been a change until advised by Mr. Keasbey, secretary of that club, that such was the case. It was far from our intention to provide other than the best classification of that club, and we were greatly surprised when we learned we were in error. We therefore withdraw that part of our premium list which says "American Spaniel Club's classification No. 1." Had we been advised sooner of our error we should have made our classification to conform to their latest but at this late day, much as we regret it, we fail to see how we can do otherwise than to adhere to our original one. Additional specials have been received as follows: From the Pointer Club of America, $10.00 for the best pointer dog in the open classes and $10.00 for the best pointer bitch in the open classes; these prizes are open for competition to members of that club only. The Collie Club of America offers a silver medal for best dog in the open class, a silver medal for best bitch in the open class, a bronze medal for best dog in the puppy class, and a bronze medal for best bitch in the puppy class. The American Bedlington Terrier Club offers $5 for the best American-bred Bedlington terrier.

Boston, Mass. D. E. LOVELAND, Secy.

How small and ridiculous it is for those who fancy one kind of shooting dog to scoff at other kinds and decry their merits; and particularly is it so when the traducers' favorites have been defeated by the very dogs they disparage. We regret to notice in the San Francisco Post of March 15 that "the recent field trials at Salinas left some sore spots with dog men. Owners of setters are particularly put out over the success of the pointers in the chief events, and the prestige they fairly lost on the field of contest they are endeavoring to make up by detracting from the performances of the winners. Such a course is unfair and is calculated to injure the cause, for the advancement of which field clubs are organized." In this last sentence the Post hits the nail on the head, and farther on it very truly remarks: "After all the record tells the tale, and men, horses and dogs are to be rated by their performances. The fact that Glenbeigh won against the best dogs in England and easily defeated the pick of California canines entitles him to the field championship." The Post also announces that Mr. Howard Vernon, owner of Glenbeigh, is willing to make a match against any dog in the state, and is ready at any time to wager $500 that he can beat Mr. H. T. Payne's Countess Noble or Mr. Crocker's Soapy. If the owner of either of these setters wishes to settle the question of supremacy, he can get a match at once.

REFERRING to your reporter's criticisms of the Irish setters at the Chicago show, it appears from them that my Irish setter bitch Champion Ruby Glenmore competed and was beaten in the challenge class for Irish setter bitches; whereas, the fact is that Ruby Glenmore, though entered in this class, was absent, having been kept at home on account of being in season at that time. I will also mention the fact that owing to the lack of their condition I have not shown any of my dogs (excepting Finglas) elsewhere than at New York. Though my Irish setters were entered at Detroit and Chicago, Finglas and Ruby Glenmore were the only two dogs I had that were in anything like condition. Ruby Glenmore, by the way, is as young looking and as beautiful as she was when she was four years old, when she was retired from the show bench with a record of eighty first and special prizes, having defeated every Irish setter bitch of prominence in America at that time. She has lately been bred to Finglas, and I am hopeful of a fine litter. Ruby is a great breeder, and has whelped something like ninety puppies. Champion Kildare Glenmore, Kildare Beverly, Nora, Ruby Glenmore II, the field trial winner Fingaln, Bessie Finmore, Dick Finglas and numerous other good ones are among her produce. I intend to keep every puppy Ruby Glenmore whelps, and it may be well to mention that none of them will be for sale,

New Castle, Pa. W. L. WASHINGTON.

BUCCANEER

THE following letter from Bound Brook, N. J., was received recently, which may prove of interest to your many readers:

I have got a nice puppy. He is a full blooded Pennsylvania buckhound, nine months old, and will run a rabbit good. He is a beautiful black, white and tan, has a beautiful ear and hangs well, a beautiful tail which he carries well. His mother s name is Maggie Murphy. and has taken the prize in Philadelphia, Harrisburg and Pittsburg, and his father has taken the prize all over the world. His name is Happy Jack, and the price of these dogs is from $20 to $100 up, and puppies from $20 up to $50. As long as you have none of our kind I thought I would like to make an exchange for one of your kind. I deal in buckhounds, foxhounds and deerhounds. The buckhounds are not high; they are about sixteen inches high and they can't be beat for rabbits or foxes. My puppy is fifteen inches high and twenty-three inches long now, and he has a good voice.

Perhaps some of Pennsylvania's sons can inform me what and where the breed of buckhounds originated. I have never been fortunate enough in my show experience to run across any, and would like further particulars, especially as they seem to be quite a valuable breed of dogs, and as they appear to have won at Pennsylvania shows perhaps the Yeadon, Pa., authority or others in that state can enlighten me, as our New Jersey friend has evidently imparted all he knows.

Orland, Me. F. W. CHAPMAN.

THE following amusing press dispatch was sent out from Pittsburg Pa., on Monday last: "Sherman Zimmerly, a Swiss laborer living near the Mingo street bridge, was held for court by Alderman Parkinson to-day on the charge of stealing, killing and eating a seven-months-old bull puppy, the pet of David Hesson, a neighbor. Zimmerly testified that he and his wife had killed and eaten eighteen dogs. They liked bull puppy cutlets breaded, he said, though Newfoundland fillet, or to be precise, 'large woolly dogs,' are better than puppy. He denied having taken Hesson's dog and said he could prove it by the dog meat he had salted in jars at his home. Lard was rendered from the carcasses and sold as an ointment by Mrs. Zimmerly. One of the witnesses who testified against Zimmerly was his brother, who lived next door to him. He was annoyed, he said, by people taking him for 'the man who eats dog,' and he had been charged with stealing canine pets to make mince meat of them. As a matter of vindication he asked to be allowed to testify against his brother." Perhaps he had heard of "jelly dogs," as packs of harriers sometimes are referred to facetiously in England, and was sampling all kinds to discover that particular variety.

THE vigor with which the Montreal Kennel Association has gone about its self-appointed task has surprised even its organizers' most sanguine expectations. The reports of its meetings from time to time and a record of the number of new members enrolled have been sufficient to assure the public that the association has been doing good work. It has now been decided to commence practical operations by the holding of a local dog show on May 18 at the Victoria Rink. This was arranged at a committee meeting held the evening of March 15. There will be open classes for dogs and bitches, and probably classes for puppies also. It is not likely that any awards other than diplomas will be given, but it is expected this will no way interfere with the success of the show. This will suffice for a start, but Montreal should take its proper place—which is at the head—among Canadian show towns. Montreal's annual dog show should hold the same position in Canada that the New York show does in the United States.

IT is said that so much poultry has recently been killed by dogs in Bloomfield, N. J., that the township committee has been asked to increase the dog tax. The principal losers have filed bills for damages against the township, and the committee does not dispute their legality, but the dog tax fund, from which they should be paid, is so small that they cannot now be met. However, it would be just as well for the township committee to take some steps toward laying the blame at the right door, for it is extremely probable that the poultry depredations are due in great part, if not wholly, to stray curs, which can be reached more satisfactorily and securely by a bullet than by increased taxation; the latter would in many instances fall unjustly on owners.

SINCE the premium list for the Pittsburg show was published, the following special prizes have been donated: A box of cigars for best mastiff; same for best St. Bernard; and same for best brace of Italian greyhounds; $10 for best borzoi; $10 for best brace of greyhounds; a lamp and shade for best English foxhound; $10 for best brace of English setters, and a stud service for the bitch placed second in the open class; $10 for the best brace of Irish setters, and a silver cup for the best; the Spaniel Club's specials mentioned last week; the Collie Club's silver medal for best collie, and bronze medal for best puppy; and a stud service for best dachshund bitch owned west of the Alleghanies in the open class.

THE seventh annual dog show of the Southern California Kennel Club will be held, as your readers are already aware, in the city of "Lost Angels" on April 17, 18, 19 and 20. We have secured a building on the corner of Broadway and Fourth Streets, just over the way from the Chamber of Commerce and a bully location to catch the crowds. Mr. G. L. Waring (an Englishman) will judge St. Bernards, mastiffs, Great Danes, deerhounds, fox terriers and bull terriers. Mr. A. C. Waddell, of Santa Cruz, Cal., all other breeds. The officers are as follows: C. A. Sumner, president; E. Tufts, treasurer; and myself secretary and superintendent.

Los Angeles, Cal. R. J. WITHERS.

The Continental Field Trial Club having decided to hold a field trial on chickens in the Northwest beginning September 2, I will be glad to hear from gentlemen acquainted in that part of the country relative to locations for the trials. I can assure the sportsmen of America that the prairie chicken trials of this club are a certainty, as the club has no intention whatever of abandoning them. We are anxious to locate the trials in a country where chickens abound and at a point where livery and hotel accommodations can be secured. Answers to the above will be gladly received either through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD or by mail.

Indianapolis. Ind. P. T. MADISON, Secy.-Treas.

A SHOCKING termination to an attempt at dog-poisoning occurred at Peoria, Ill., on Monday of this week, when a babe of thirteen months died in terrible agony from strychnine poisoning. It was learned that poison had been put into a wienerwurst by someone and thrown over the fence to the dog. The fatal sausage was carried by the dog into the house, where the child, creeping about on the floor, found it and ate it. Perhaps some day—when the people have tired of machine politicians—legislation will be enacted imposing a sufficiently severe penalty upon anyone convicted of throwing poisoned meat to dogs.

THE proposal to organize a bull terrier club seems to have taken root, and Mr. W. J. Higginson sends us the following: "I am requested by a number of prominent breeders and fanciers of the bull terrier to call a meeting of those interested in the welfare of this breed, to take place in Pittsburg, Pa., at Hotel Schlosser, on April 10, at 8 o'clock p. m. To those who cannot be present and who may wish to coöperate, I would suggest they send me their proxy to act for them. The object of this meeting will be to form a bull terrier club."

IT affords us much pleasure to state that Dr. W. A. Bruette, the able veterinarian of the last Mascoutah Kennel Club's show, is again up and around in the enjoyment of good health. The night preceding the show he stayed in the armory till morning, checking in dogs, and as the large hall was chilly he contracted a severe cold which laid him up the first day of the show and confined him to bed for over a week. Dr. Bruette has established a large practice and his personal attention is now being given to it.

MR. FRANK F. BOCK of Battle Creek, Mich., will please accept our thanks for a splended photograph of his English setter Dan o' Light, winner of first in the open class at the lateMascoutah Kennel Club's show. Mr. Bock writes "Dan had but two weeks' conditioning for this show, and was handled by a person with no experience either in conditioning or handling dogs. Ben F. Lewis now has him and will probably take him to Pittsburg and Boston."

I HAVE sold the young pointer dog by Little Ned—Pearl's Dot to Mr. F. I. Cooper of Chicago, through my advertisement in the AMERICAN FIELD. I could have sold twenty-five dogs like him, buyers answering the advertisement from Pennsylvania to Colorado and from Wisconsin to Florida. I am certain Mr. Cooper will find he has a puppy with all the quality to make him a high-class field dog.

Mexico, Mo. G. H. KUNKEL.

I HAVE sold all but one of the dogs I advertised for sale. I think the AMERICAN FIELD the greatest advertising medium in America. The extremely cold weather froze nearly all the quails this Winter. I have made inquiry from a number of farmers and they say it was nothing uncommon to find eighteen and twenty birds in one bevy frozen to death. We will not have enough quails left to restock.

Edmonton, Ky. I. W. RAY.

COMMENTING on the mooted kennel association for ladies in the United States, Mrs. Robinson, secretary of the Ladies' Kennel Association of England, is quoted as advocating an international body by amalgamating the English association with the one that perhaps will be organized in New York. Owing to the different conditions in the two countries such a scheme is scarcely practicable.

MR. C. W. LOUGEST, of Franklin, Mass., is importing from England two Bedlington terriers, one of each sex. "They have good hard coats," says Mr. Lougest, "which is what is wanted in this country, as all of them at the present are short of that wiry coat. They are prize-winners, and I expect them to arrive in time for the Boston show."

WE publish this week a portrait of Mr. Roger Williams' imported bloodhound dog Buccaneer (late McComo), by Dandy—Etta. Buccaneer is a young hound, the date of his birth being June 3, 1892; he was imported by Dr. Stahl, of Boston, from whom Mr. Williams purchased him. He won at the open dog class at Detroit, Chicago and Denver, but without any opposition on each occasion.

KINDLY stop advertisement when our contract is fulfilled. We can assure you we have had great results, receiving one thousand inquiries from the advertisement. You may hear from us again with another novelty shortly.

Detroit, Mich. GEO. HILSENDEGEN.

THE wholesale poisoning told of in another column by Mr. H. N. Seaber is outrageous, and the very fact that it is so difficult to run down the cowardly perpetrator makes it all the more exasperating. What would not the owners of the dead dogs give for some conclusive evidence?

MR. G. W. PRICE has sold Quaker Lass, the young fox terrier bitch that won in open and novice classes at the little Cincinnati show in January, to Mr. Benjamin C. Thomas of Columbus, Ind. Quaker Lass is by Warren Landlord out of Warren Chance.

MR. T. G. DAVEY of London, Can., writes: "During the past three weeks I have received a number of letters which, for some reason or other, have been misplaced and as I have no record of same I shall be pleased to hear from correspondents again."

THE Dent Medicine Company's dog biscuit bakery, which was partly destroyed by fire a few weeks ago, is now ready to resume operations and will begin filling promptly the hundreds of orders for dog biscuits which have been coming in daily.

MR. C. A. SHINN of Philadelphia, Pa., the well-known Skye and Irish terrier breeder, informs us that hereafter he will handle all his own stock at bench shows. Heretofore he has sent them through the circuit in charge of a handler.

I LEAVE here for my Indiana training grounds April 1, which will be my future address. I have been informed by those that are in a position to know that quails have wintered well in the vicinity of Carlisle, Ind.

Guyton, Miss. J. H. JOHNSON.

A QUARTERLY meeting of the New England Beagle Club will be held at Mechanics' Building, Boston, on Friday, April 19, at 2 p. m. Members should make every effort to attend.

IN consequence of the space needed for the report of the Waterloo Cup meeting, Names Claimed, Sales, Whelps and Visits are crowded out this week.

AMONG those to take dogs to the Pittsburg show will be Ben Lewis and A. G. Eberhart.

Originally intended to have been commenced on February 20, the Waterloo Cup has now been postponed altogether for three weeks, the adjournments, as is well known, being caused by the recent severe weather. Great difficulty has been found by the trainers in getting their dogs anything like fit, but, notwithstanding, very few changes were made at the last; indeed, not more than half a dozen in all. The alterations that were made were Recouvrer for Royal Ulster, Golden Arrow for Glass Knowledge, Featherwood for Four-in-Hand, Gallant for Drizzling Morn, West Bretton for Wang and Poverina for Brilliant Betty. The arrivals at the headquarters—the Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool—were fairly numerous, both on Monday evening and Tuesday morning, and the usual routine was observed in most cases, viz., journeying out to Hightown and Formby, attending the sale at Lucas' and then back to the Adelphi for the National Coursing Club's meeting. As if Mr. Hartley Bibby had not had enough trouble on his shoulders with the postponements, another came on the morning of the draw, and this was a wire saying that Bootiman was too ill to be able to officiate at the meeting, so another slipper had to be decided upon. R. Wright was chosen, and, in response to a wire, quickly telegraphed that he would come. Up to 5 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon the assistant secretary, Mr. H. B. Sanders, was to be found at work taking the different entries and seeing that they were correct, and then, after that hour, one was able to look down the lists and see what changes had been made.

On going over the list it was seen that thirty-three puppies were entered against thirty-one all-aged, and of these fifteen had run in last year's Cup. Six nominations had been returned to the committee and re-awarded, while no less than twenty-seven of the nominators had been obliged to borrow dogs. Among the entries were six unbeaten dogs, these being Flamma, Holborn Maid, Rumbler, Real Point, Reception, and Tuddenham; while twelve had been out twice or more and only beaten once, and, in addition to these, Recouvrer, Scandia, and Julia Nitrate Co. were dark aspirants to fame, never having run in public. Looking further into the entries, one noticed that there was only one fourth season dog (Ivan the Great), five third-season dogs, twenty-five second-season dogs and thirty-three puppies. Messrs. Fawcett and M. Fletcher were answerable for filling five nominations each, while Mr. Pilkington supplied four representatives and Mr. Russel three. One great feature of the entry was the fact of there being no less than three dogs running from each of four litters, these being by Herschel out of Fair Future, Young Fullerton out of Bessie Landells, Herschel out of Fine Sport, and Restorer out of Real Lace. The veteran Herschel sired seventeen, while Young Fullerton was responsible for nine.

Notwithstanding the repeated postponements of the meeting, there was a capital assemblage of coursers in the banqueting-room of the Adelphi Hotel when Sir Wyndham Anstruther took the chair at half-past six. Altogether there must have been some 180 sitting down to the dinner—a good one and well served, as usual at this hotel. Mr. Mercanton, the general manager, was very much to the fore in the way of arranging everything. The chairman was supported on his right by Lord Masham, Mr. A. Brisco, Mr. R. W. Jardine, Mr. J. Hartley Bibby, Mr. C. J. Fawcett, Mr. J. Mugliston, Mr. O. Jones, and Mr. T. Quilhampton, and on his left by the Hon. Osbert Molyneux, Mr. R. F. Gladstone, Mr. Harold Brocklebank, Mr. W. Paterson, and Col. Holmes. In addition to the coursers mentioned, there was a truly representative company present from all parts of the kingdom. The dinner being finished, Sir W. C. Anstruther proposed the Queen and the Earl of Sefton—the lord of the soil—coupling with his name that of his son, the Hon. O. Molyneux, who briefly responded, and remarked that he hoped in time himself to win the Cup.

The draw was then proceeded with, Mr. Hartley Bibby, the hon. sec. calling the numbers, and the chairman the names of the dogs, as they came out of the jug. The first feature was the coming out together of two of Mr. Fletcher's in the fourth course, while, before half the number had been drawn, all the dogs belonging to that courser had appeared, three being in the first sixteen and two in the second. Messrs. Fawcett's lot of five were better distributed, three being in the top half and two in the bottom, but even then the three were in one sixteen and the two in another. Mr. Pilkington also was rather unlucky, as three out of his four were all in the third sixteen. Of the supposed good dogs, Falconer, Ivan the Great, Fair Floralie, Fortuna Favente, Thoughtless Beauty, Fabulous Fortune and Real Point were decidedly the best drawn. The draw being finished, the card was well called through by Mr. J. Mugliston, the hon. sec. to the Ridgway Club, and a good amount of betting took place, both on the individual courses and at the long odds. A fair number of bookmakers being present, good odds were obtainable in most instances; indeed a dog could have been easily backed to win £15,000. As was the case last year, Falconer settled down in strong demand, being heavily backed at 11 to 2, while Fabulous Fortune was also well supported at 10 to 1. After these two came Fair Floralie at 100 to 7 and Fortuna Favente and Thoughtless Beauty at 100 to 6 each. Purser also met with good support at 100 to 5, while the longest price offered was a 1,000 to 3 against The Quorn, Berrow Prince and Ego.

Long Odds: 11 to 2 agst Falconer (t & w), 10 to 1 agst Fabulous Fortune (o), 100 to 7 agst Fair Floralie (t f), 100 to 6 agst Fortuna Favente (o), 20 to 1 agst Pursuer (t), 20 to 1 agst Thoughtless Beauty (t & w), 20 to 1 agst Rumbler (o), 20 to 1 agst Reception (o), 200 to 9 agst Flamma (o), 25 to 1 agst Forum (o), 200 to 7 agst Fife and Fiddle (t & w), 200 to 7 agst Real Point (o), 100 to 3 agst Grey Morn (t f), 100 to 3 agst Free Kick (o), 40 to 1 agst Hurlbert (t), 50 to 1 agst Scandia (o), 50 to 1 agst Fertile Field (o), 66 to 1 agst Hertford (t f), 66 to 1 agst Axterley (o), 66 to 1 agst Huanaco (o), 66 to 1 agst Cloudy Night (o), 66 to 1 agst Maid of Glenetive (o), 66 to 1 agst Coca (o), 1,000 to 12 agst Carmel Myrtle (t), 100 to 1 agst Poverina (t), 100 to 1 agst Ivan the Great (t & w), 100 to 1 agst Pennegant (t), 100 to 1 agst Mellor Moor (t), 100 to 1 agst Featherwood (o), 100 to 1 agst Kilrosa (o), 100 to 1 agst Chinese White (o), 100 to 1 agst Burwell (o), 100 to 1 agst Ruby Red (o), 125 to 1 agst Great Pearl (t), 125 to 1 agst Consie (t), 125 to 1 agst Gallant (t f), 125 to 1 agst Hypnum (t), 125 to 1 agst Waterside (o), 125 to 1 agst Castle Fergus (o), 125 to 1 agst Gweeda (o), 1,000 to 7 agst Gauger (t & w), 1,000 to 6 agst Beethoven (o), 1,000 to 6 agst Hugh (o), 200 to 1 agst Skyscraper (t & o), 200 to 1 agst Townfield (o), 200 to 1 agst Word of Honour (o), 200 to 1 agst Julia Nitrate Co. WEDNESDAY.—Although the night had been a moderately cold one, it was not the frost that caused us to dawdle about at Hill House this morning. This time it was the fog that delayed us, and, though the mist lifted a bit soon after eleven o'clock, it was not until the half hour that the order was given to move down on to the river bank. With the Monk's Carr nearly all plowed up, the large flat below the Hill House Wood was requisitioned for the early courses, and here thirteen trials were run off before a move was made right along the bank to the Withins. Just before three o'clock the card had been run through once, but after that hour the hares seemed difficult to bring up in the right direction, and it was not until 4:55 that the day's coursing was brought to a conclusion. The carrs were in capital condition for the running, and the hares, with very few exceptions, ran exceedingly stoutly. Wright handled the slips well, but had to run too far to get the dogs properly behind their game, this being necessitated by the hares not being too well flanked up to him.

Taking a glance down the different courses one saw Hawkcombe Head too clever for Quite Right, and then in his second spin he had only to beat the hard-run Reception To all appearances Flamma led and beat her kennel companion Falconer—the favorite for the stake—or, at any rate, made the spin undecided; but Mr. Hedley thought otherwise and decided for the crack. Curiously enough lookers-on on the bank, and also those on the side where the members generally stand, were in agreement on this occasion; but against this Mr. Hedley was much closer to his dogs, and from his decision must have given the turn to Falconer. Coca hoisted two flags, but it can hardly be said that either of her displays were first rate. Ivan the Great got off with a very short spin against Featherwood, and then had too much pace for Great Pearl, both dogs running well. Fair Floralie never gave Gauger the slightest chance, but hardly worked close enough to her game to please me, though her second effort against Free Kick was a most brilliant display; indeed, it would be hard to find a better, and this was the more so, as Free Kick had previously run a splendid trial against Waterside and shown she was in form. Concord II won a couple of spins under difficulties, her feet being anything but in good condition. Fife and Fiddle had very little to spare against Hurlbert; indeed, it was a very unsatisfactory course for the latter, being only a run-up and into a weak hare, and the lead was a mere nothing. Fortuna Favente went well both times, and had little difficulty in raising two flags. Kilrosa had a big inside against Fertile Field, and then the latter hardly seemed to try afterward. The puppy Tuddenham made a very good show against Pursuer with all his pace, and then in the latter's next spin Kilrosa was much too smart for him, after being led over three lengths. Thoughtless Beauty ran two very smart trials; indeed her display against Cloudy Night was perhaps the best of the day, as, though apparently thrown out when she flecked her game, she had possession again before her opponent could score, and very soon afterward killed. Fabulous Fortune was far too good for each of his opponents, and seemed to be going more than a fair pace. Pennegant got through his two courses in anything but first-class style. Real Point disappointed everyone with her running, and must have been anything but well. Hertford led her, and scored almost every point in a long trial, and next time he could, of course, make no show against Mellor Moor, who got off very lightly both times. Another great disappointment to his connections was Gray Morn, who easily succumbed to Green Onion and this big puppy also beat Gweeda after an undecided. Gallant went fast and well both times, and Hypnum showed himself exceedingly smart.

Messrs. Fawcett's was the most successful kennel of the day, as, with five dogs running, only Fertile Field went down in the first round, and the whole of the remaining four were left standing when the next round had been completed. Of Mr. Fletcher's five, three remained in after the first round, but at the end of the day only one—Falconer—was to the fore. Mr. Pilkington raised three flags out of four in the opening round, and then had two—Thoughtless Beauty and Pennegant—standing after the second round had been disposed of. One of Mr. Russel's three went down the first time; neither of the two survived the second round. Of the seventeen of Herschel's progeny that were running, six were left in at the finish of the day, but only one Young Fullerton stood up out of nine. After the fog had lifted, the weather throughout the day was of the most brilliant description, the sun shining almost all the time. Began with the Waterloo Cup.—Quite Right, on the inside, just gained the turn, but Hawkcombe Head shot across for the next two points before Quite Right made a good sequence; the white collar then drew right round for possession, and held his place for a splendid succession of points, and then finished off the spin with a good kill. Reception quickly began to show in front of Rumbler, and eventually reached her game four lengths in front, and, never leaving the hare in a tremendously long trial, hardly allowed the fawn a single point, puss eventually taking them over the bank, where the bitch soon afterward rolled her hare over. Maid of Glenetive reached her game a length and a half in front of Townfield, who had a slight inside at the finish of the run up, and though the latter was placed for the third turn, she rushed over a dodging hare, and the red collar had two or three more points; Townfield got possession for a nice sequence, but a couple of points made by Maid of Glenetive when near the covert just left her the winner. Falconer was the quicker away, and led for some distance in the run up, but Flamma gradually drew on terms and then just gained the turn, then Falconer took possession as the hare came round, and held his place for a smart sequence of points; then some exchanges took place before Flamma shot out and made two or three wrenches before killing her hare close to where the members stood on the far side of the ground; this looked like a win for Flamma, if not an undecided; the decision for Falconer. Coca, on an outside, led Dorothy D nearly four lengths, and held her place well for the next four or five points, and then the black, when she was placed, went the wrong side of the dyke, and afterward she fell into one, Coca going on alone, but never again reaching a good hare, which made its way on to the Hill House covert. Julia Nitrate Co. made the turn quite two lengths in front of Poverina, and for a long time had the hare all to himself, puss taking them right back past the slipper's hurdle and away toward the farm buildings, Poverina only getting a few at the finish of a very long trial. Ivan the Great jumped well out of slips, and though Featherwood was catching him slightly at the finish of a short run up, the red collar led, and coming round well, scored a couple of wrenches and killed. Holborn Maid was a couple of lengths in front of Great Pearl for the turn, and also made the second before tripping, and the brindled had a short sequence before Holborn Maid was once more placed, only, however, to again trip in attempting to kill, and Great Pearl scored three or four more before making a good kill. Fair Floralie was in front almost directly after leaving slips, and eventually led Gauger quite three lengths, and, going round well with her game, scored five or six good points before making a fine kill. After running level for some distance, Free Kick shot out for the lead, when the hare straightened, and, after leading Waterside rather over a length, came round smartly in possession, and, in a very smoothly run trial, which she finished with a good kill, hardly allowed Waterside a point. Recouvrer drew out some two lengths from Beethoven, and also made the second, and afterward the latter kept cutting across, but could never get placed, and the black scored almost everything, including the kill. Border Story led for a long distance in the run up, but the hare coming rather to Concord II, she shot up for the turn, and also had the second; then the red got placed for a nice sequence before Concord II resumed possession with a dodging hare, and was just a winner when she killed. Barnton was showing well in front, but puss coming rather to Golden Arrow, she gained the turn, the hare then going to Barnton, but he had only scored once before the black shot up and killed. Fife and Fiddle at one time was over a length in front, but Hurlbert then began to close up the gap; but, when the hare stralghtened, the former again drew out, only once more to see Hurlbert draw level, but, puss shooting to Fife and Fiddle's side, he killed immediately. Word of Honour made the turn quite two lengths in front of Forum, but went past his game, and the latter had a couple before the red collar again joined, but, after some exchanges, Forum showed himself the better worker, and, with a nice sequence and a good kill, he finished a decided winner. Fortuna Favente quickly began to show in front of Ego, and, though he went a trifle over his game after leading three lengths, was quickly in possession again, and, then spinning round Ego several times, was the easiest of winners when he killed. Immediately after the slip, the hare went round to Kilrosa's side, and, after leading, she kept selfish possession for several good points before killing, Fertile Field never making a point. Pursuer quickly began to show in front of Tuddenham, and reached his game nearly four lengths in front; the latter had the second when puss broke round, but, whenever the hare shot away, Pursuer drew to the front, and, though the puppy struggled on well to the finish, Pursuer's pace earned him the verdict at the finish of a fairly long trial. Cloudy Night, on the inside, led Carmel Myrtle, and held her place for the first seven or eight points, and then, after a couple of exchanges, again took possession for a nice sequence, the red now getting an occasional point, but Cloudy Night then drew out alone, and finished with a good kill. Immediately after the slip, Thoughtless Beauty shot to the front, and came round with her game a long three lengths in front; after scoring the second and third turns, The Quorn had one, but the fawn quickly resumed possession, and, moving very smartly with her game, never left it till she killed. Fabulous Fortune came away a long three lengths from Clyde Daisy, and held his place for the next three turns, and then, after the brindled had scored a couple, again took possession for a couple of wrenches and the kill. After running level for a few strides, Hugh began to draw right away from Consle, and, leading nearly four lengths, drew past again for the second, and, in a trial of fair length, scored almost every point, the hare being killed in the dyke. Chinese White drew away five lengths from Castle Fergus, and, though the latter had the next three when the hare broke back, the brindled then resumed possession, and, in a trial which finished behind the traps, had matters all her own way. Pennegant got over the dyke rather the better, but only led Still Charteress a length to the hare; holding his place, he then had the next three or four points before the black began scoring quickly, and nearly equalized the points; afterward it was give and take, slightly in favor of Pennegant, who, however, had not a deal to spare when Still Charteress killed. Mellor Moor reached his game two lengths in front of West Bretton, and, coming round very smartly in possession, scored several more points before making a good kill. Hertford quickly began to show in front of Real Point and, after making the turn three lengths in front, held his place nicely for the second, and, after the latter had made a couple, resumed possession, his pace taking him to the front time after time, and, though Real Point was going rather the smarter at the finish, Hertford was an easy winner of a long trial when puss smeused. Gweeda was a couple of lengths faster than Skyscraper, and, in a smartly run trial of fair length, only allowed the fawn to score once, Gweeda finishing the course with a good kill. After running level for some distance, Grey Onion began to show in front of Grey Morn, and eventually led two lengths, and he also made the second, and then, after an exchange or so, had another couple before puss went in the dyke, and then immediately afterward was killed. Gallant went right away from Scandia immediately after the slip, and led quite four lengths to the hare, and, always going the better throughout a trial of fair length, was the easiest of winners after Scandia had made a few at the finish. Ruby Red, on the outside, led Axterley a length, and held his place for the next three, and then the black was in possession for a short sequence, but Ruby Red came again, and was a distinct winner when he killed. Burwell drew out a long two lengths from Huanaco, and for a long time scored almost every point, and won with something to spare, although Huanaco was going much the better at the finish of a very long trial. Hypnum drew away quite three lengths from Berrow Prince, and, going very smartly with his game, only allowed the latter to kill.—Second Round: Hawcombe Head made the turn three lengths in front of Reception, and for a time scored almost every point, and then, after some exchanges, the former finished the better, and was an easy winner when he killed. Falconer quickly began to leave Maid of Glenetive, and was quite three lengths ahead before the hare began to turn, and, holding his place well, he put together a smart succession of points, and, after an exchange, resumed possession for three or four and the kill. Coca led Julia Nitrate Co. a couple of lengths, and, always going the better in a trial of fair length, won all one way, puss being killed between them. After running level for a long distance in the run up, Ivan the Great gradually began to show in front, and reached his game a length and a half ahead; puss then came round to Great Pearl, who, however, had only scored twice before Ivan the Great forged right past for possession, and made a couple of good points, Great Pearl then killing. Fair Floralie quickly began to show in front of Free Kick, and, though the hare began to come to the latter before being reached, Fair Floralie held her place well, and, moving very smartly with her game, scored three more before making a good kill. After a short undecided, Recouvrer just led Concord II, the latter then falling badly, leaving the red collar alone for a bit, but when Concord II did join she never allowed Recouvrer to score again in a fairly long trial, which she finished with the kill. Fife and Fiddle, after being momentarily behind, shot right past Golden Arrow, and, keeping his place well in spite of an occasional rush, was the easiest of winners when he killed up close to the carriages. Fortuna Favente led Forum a couple of lengths, and again scored before puss shot round, and Forum then wrenched and killed. Pursuer quickly began to show in front of Kilrosa and was a long three lengths ahead when he reached his game, but, failing to come round well, Kilrosa took possession and scored once, and then swept right round Pursuer for a couple of wrenches and the kill. Thoughtless Beauty soon began to show in front, but did not get away more than a length from Cloudy Night until nearing the hare, when she drew out a bit; coming round very smartly Thoughtless Beauty gained some three lengths, and, at the first attempt, flecked her game, but even then did not lose her place, and, going on very smartly in possession, never left the hare till she killed—a grand performance. Fabulous Fortune reached his game quite three lengths in front of Hugh, and went round well in possession for the second and third turns, and then put the hare to Hugh to kill. After running level for a short distance Pennegant drew out from Chinese White and led a couple of lengths for the first turn, and also took the second, and then, after an exchange, scored again before killing. Mellor Moor drew out two lengths from Hertford, and, holding his place well, scored three or four times before putting the hare to Hertford to kill. After an undecided, Green Onion was showing in front, when Gweeda fell badly, and the brindled was alone for a time, and when Gweeda did join she quickly killed the hare. Ruby Red was in front for a short distance, but Gallant struggled past for the turn, and, after leading a length and a half, came round well and quickly killed. Before being picked up Gallant got after a second hare and made a second kill. Although he dwelt twice in the run up, Hypnum just gained the turn from Burwell, and then, taking selfish possession, never left his game till he finished off the spin with a good kill.

It was a fairly large company that sat down to dinner under the presidency of Mr Brisco, and later on that courser called over the card, and a fair amount of speculation took place at the undermentioned prices:

Waterloo Cup.—Individual Courses.—Third Round: 4 to 1 on Falconer v. Hawcombe Head, 13 to 8 on Ivan the Great v. Coca, no betting Fair Floralie v. Concord II, 11 to 10 on Fortuna Favente v. Fife and Fiddle, 9 to 4 on Thoughtless Beauty v. Kilrosa, 4 to 1 on Fabulous Fortune v. Pennegant, 7 to 4 on Mellor Moor v. Green Onion, 6 to 5 on Gallant v. Hypnum.

Long Odds: 100 to 30 agst Falconer (t & o), 9 to 2 agst Fair Floralie (o), 5 to 1 agst Fabulous Fortune (t & w), 5 to 1 agst Thoughtless Beauty (t & o), 100 to 7 agst Fortuna Favente (t & o), 100 to 6 agst Ivan the Great (o), 20 to 1 agst Fife and Fiddle (o), 25 to 1 agst Hawcombe Head (o), 25 to 1 agst Kilrosa (o), 25 to 1 agst Mellor Moor (o), 100 to 3 agst Gallant (t & o), 100 to 3 agst Hypnum (o), 100 to 3 agst Green Onion (o), 40 to 1 agst Coca (o), 66 to 1 agst Pennegant (o), 200 to 1 agst Concord II (t).

Thursday.—With no fog to-day the weather was everything that could possibly be desired. The meet was at Lydiate Station, and from there a move was made down on to the second flat, the hares being driven right away from the Monk's Carr past a slipping station placed at the north end. Hares were seen in abundance all day, but somehow or other they were difficult to bring up to "the scratch," and it was not until half past five that the forty-nine courses—including four undecideds and a no-course—were run off. For the second time through the card the hares were slipped from the reverse end of the Carr. The hares were not a level lot to-day, so that some of the dogs were far harder run than others, though, for the most part, the trials were decidedly good, and fair tests of the merits of the dogs. In the Cup, Falconer soon chopped up a weak hare when put against Hawkcombe Head, and afterward well beat old Ivan the Great, who had been very hard run against Coca. Fair Floralie ran an exceedingly smart trial against Concord II, but in the next round had to succumb to her brother, Fortuna Favente, in a well contested spin. Thoughtless Beauty, in a tremendously long run up, was much too fast for Kilrosa, but afterward hardly ran as well as on Wednesday, but this no doubt was partially due to the great strain of the run up. In the fourth round she took every advantage of Fabulous Fortune, and ran an exceedingly smart trial. Mellor Moor, after his two short courses, was too fast for Green Onion, but in the next round he had to succumb to Gallant, who seems to improve every course he runs. In the Purse Quite Right ran well, as also did Featherwood, in spite of having long spins. Word of Honour ran well both times, on the second occasion beating a strong favor[illegible] Fertile Field ran well in both his trials, [illegible] only won from Castle Fergus by her [illegible] Point ran very much better to-day, an[illegible] led by Grey Morn, showed herself muc[illegible] latter. Huanaco also ran well in [illegible] the Plate, Maid of Glenetive ra[illegible] her bye, and Cloudy Night went very smartly against Pursuer. A commencement was made with the Waterloo Cup—Third Round: In a very long run up, Falconer soon began to draw away from Hawkcombe Head, and on reaching the hare was quite three lengths to the good; coming round well with his game, Falconer kept possession for the next three turns, and then killed, after wrenching. Ivan the Great quickly began to show in front of Coca, and was some seven lengths in front when he came round with the hare; after making the second, he lost possession for a couple, but was quickly placed again, and in a very long trial scored fully two-thirds of the points made, puss beating them both at the finish; before being picked up, Ivan the Great got after another hare, but luckily killed very quickly. Fair Floralie got badly away, but in a long run up came right past Concord II, and led a long three lengths at the finish; sweeping beautifully round in possession, Fair Floralie held her place for another three before placing the black for two, but she quickly took the hare away again, and, going very smartly with her game, never left it till she made a grand kill. Fortuna Favente was a long three lengths in front of Fife and Fiddle for the turn, and also held his place for the second and third; then the brindled and white had a couple before Fortuna Favente again took possession for three more strong points; exchanges followed, still in favor of the red, before Fife and Fiddle shot out and made a good kill. In another tremendously long run up Thoughtless Beauty, who got well from slips, came right away from Kilrosa, and eventually led some five lengths; going well round with her game, she made another three before giving the black a chance; but, after Kilrosa had made a couple, Thoughtless Beauty took possession for another sequence, and then, after some exchanges. Kilrosa, finishing well, wrenched twice and killed. Fabulous Fortune was some three lengths in front of Pennegant for the turn, and also made the second, and then, after an exchange, the re l kept possession for two or three and a good kill. Meller Moor and Green Onion were almost level on reaching the hare, but puss coming to the former's side gave him the turn, and then, keeping selfish possession, scored three or four more before making a fine kill. Hypnum got well away and led for some distance, till, nearing the hare, Gallant drew past for the turn, but when puss broke back Hypnum took possession, and had just equalized the score when the hare went into the dyke and the hat came off. In the run off, Gallant drew out well from Hypnum, and, after leading quite two lengths, never gave the white and black a chance in a short spin, which Gallant finished with a good kill.—Fourth Round: To a very bad hare Falconer got well away, and eventually led Ivan the Great three lengths, puss being reached shortly after she had made the dyke, and, Falconer going slightly past when the hare came round, Ivan the Great was placed for one before the white shot past, wrenched twice, and picked up his game. Fortuna Favente got the better away, and at one time was leading a couple of lengths; but nearing his game, he slightly steadied himself, and only just made the turn from Fair Floralie, holding his place well for the next two points, and then, after an exchange or so, Fortuna Favente made a couple of wrenches before they killed together. After running level for some distance, Fabulous Fortune just got his head in front of Thoughtless Beauty, but, after crossing the drain, puss inclined slightly to the latter, who immediately shot out, and reached her game a length and a half in front; after again scoring, a couple of exchanges took place, and then Thoughtless Beauty went right round her opponent for possession, and, afterward being decidedly the smarter, was a decided winner when she killed. Gallant, after starting the slower, drew past Meller Moor, and eventually led some two lengths to the hare; he also scored the second and third turns, when, after Meller Moor had scored once, Gallant shot past, wrenched and killed.

Waterloo Purse.—Rumbler being drawn, Quite Right ran a bye. After an undecided, Townfield, on the inside, led Flamma a length, and scored two more before the latter wrenched twice and killed. Poverina was leading well at one time, though Dorothy D was catching her at the finish, but, the hare going round to the former, she scored again before they killed between them. Featherwood was a long three lengths faster than Holborn Maid, and also had the early points, and, though the black did well in the middle and finish of a very long trial, Featherwood's pace kept taking him to the front and won him the spin. Gauger, after getting badly away, drew past Waterside in the run up, but the latter then took possession and had all the remainder in the spin to himself. Border Stag being drawn, Beethoven ran a very long bye with Beowulf, and was beaten. Hurlbert reached his game a couple of lengths in front of Barnton, and, though the latter was placed after the turn for a couple, Hurlbert then drew past and killed. Word of Honour ran into his game a couple of lengths in front of Ego. Fertile Field came away a long two lengths from Tuddenham, and, though the latter had the next two, the red collar was quickly in possession again, and, going smartly with his game, soon killed. The Quorn was quite two lengths faster than Carmel Myrtle, and kept his place for all the early points, winning very easily, although the red had most of the finish of a tremendously long trial. Clyde Daisy then ran her bye, Consle having been drawn. Castle Fergus came away some three lengths from Still Charteress, and again scored before the black killed. Real Point, on the outside, came well away from West Bretton, and, running very smartly throughout a fairly long trial, scored fully two-thirds of the points made, the brindled finishing off the course with a kill. Grey Morn was a long two lengths faster than Skyscraper, and, after scoring the second and third turns, finished the course with a good kill. Axterley came awa[illegible] from Scandia, and scored almost every [illegible] exception of a few at the finish, the white [illegible] naco reached his game some four lengths [illegible] Berrow Prince, and, after coming round, she [illegible] killed as puss attempted to break forward a[illegible] Round: After a no-course, Quite Right and [illegible] reached their hare together on the edge of the dyke, but the latter jumped over, and afterward in a fair working [illegible] Quite Right was the smarter, and won when he [illegible] undecided, Featherwood again led a [illegible] length and in a tremendously long trial well [illegible] although the latter was going the better at [illegible] then ran a bye, Beethoven having [illegible] undecided, Word of Honour again led [illegible] lengths, and then in a well-contested trial did more than his share of the work, and was an easy winner when he killed. Fertile Field then ran a very long bye, The Quorn being drawn after his very long course in the first round. Castle Fergus drew right past Clyde Daisy in the run up, but, after leading a length, lost possession to the brindled, and the latter, being exceedingly smart with her game, never left it till she had killed and won. Grey Morn was a couple of lengths faster than Real Point, but immediately after the turn the latter took possession, and, holding her place well, scored three or four points, and then made a good hili. Axterley was showing in front, but dwelt slightly at the dyke, which Huanaco jumped well, and this gave him the turn by a length and a half; afterward it was give and take all through a well-contested trial which Axterley finished with the kill.

Waterloo Plate.—Reception being drawn, Maid of Glenetive ran a short bye which she won easily. After being led two lengths, Julia Nitrate Co. took possession as the hare broke back, and just did enough when she killed to beat Great Pearl. After an undecided, in which Recouvrer led and Free Kick wrenched and killed, the black again led a length and a half, but Free Kick was much the smarter after the turn and was a good winner when she killed. Forum got away the better, but even then only just led Golden Arrow, who, however, took the second, and then, after an exchange, Forum wrenched and killed. Cloudy Night got well away, but, though Pursuer was catching her, she led a length, and also made the second, when the hare broke back, and then, after Pursuer had scored once, they killed together. Chinese White, on a slight inside, led a length, and in a well-run trial scored almost every point. Gweeda gained the turn from Hertford a length, and then, after a well contested trial for the first twelve or fifteen points, had all the remainder of a very long spin to herself. Ruby Red then ran a bye, Burwell being drawn.

In the evening Mr. Mugliston called over the card in the Sefton Room at the Adelphi Hotel, and a fair amount of speculation took place, both on the individual courses and also at the long odds.

WATERLOO CUP.—Fourth Round.—Individual Courses: 7 to 4 on Falconer v. Fortuna Favente, 5 to 2 on Thoughtless Beauty v. Gallant.

Long Odds: 6 to 4 against Falconer (t & w), 5 to 2 against Thoughtless Beauty (t & o), 9 to 2 against Fortuna Favente (o), 8 to 1 against Gallant (t & o).

FRIDAY.—It was grand weather again to-day when we met at Hill House at 10 o'clock and very shortly after that hour a fairly large assembly moved down on to the the bank and right along to the Withins, where the whole of the coursing took place. At 10:15 the first brace were handed over to Wright, while it was only ten minutes later that Maid of Glenetive and Julia Nitrate Co. were slipped. The Waterloo Cup, as usual, stood last on the card, and at 11:14 Falconer and Fortuna Favente were slipped, 15 to 8 being betted on the former. A roar went up from the crowd as the red was seen to gradually forge in front, and, after making the turn, he held his own well and soon effected the kill. Gallant, with 2 to 1 against him, was, if anything, faster than Thoughtless Beauty, though the latter got the turn through favor, and afterward, when thoroughly warmed up, she showed herself much too smart for the brindled. In the deciding course, slipped at 12 o'clock, 2 to 1 was laid on Fortuna Favente, but Thoughtless Beauty was the better over the dyke, and after leading she was decidedly smarter than Fortuna Favente, and was a decided winner when she killed. Forum fully deserved his win in the Plate, while the Purse resulted in a division between the Irish puppy Word of Honour and Fertile Field, both of these running extremely well. The hares stood up wonderfully and the going was very good. A commencement was made with the Waterloo Plate.—Second Round: Maid of Glenetive immediately began to show in front of Julia Nitrate Co., the latter dwelling at the first dyke; the black was seven lengths ahead when the hare was reached, but failing to come round well, the brindled was placed for a couple before Maid of Glenetive again took possession, and, always having the best of the finish, won well; the pair killed together up close to the gate. After running very level in the run up, Forum just drew out a length for the turn, and then, in a fairly long, well-contested trial, was a decided winner when they shared the kill. Cloudy Night soon began to show in front of Chinese White, and, after leading a couple of lengths, held her place cleverly for the second and third turns; then, after an exchange, puss was killed in the dyke. Gweeda being drawn, after her long spin the previous evening, Ruby Red ran a short bye, which he won.—Third Round: Maid of Glenetive quickly drew away from Forum, and was quite two lengths in front when the hare was reached; but she failed to come round with her game, and Forum did enough with the kill to bring the hat off. Next time Maid of Glenetive led for a long distance, but Forum forged past with a length's lead, and in a well-run trial scored every point except the kill. Cloudy Night led three lengths, but, as the hare went round, Ruby Red shot up and killed—undecided. Next time, Cloudy Night reached her game two lengths in front, but Ruby Red took possession as the hare came round, and wrenched strongly three times before killing, and winning in a close thing.—Deciding Course: Forum gained the turn from Ruby Red by two lengths, and held his place for the next three or four points; then, after a couple of exchanges, he had another short sequence, when Ruby Red got placed for a couple before Forum again resumed possession, wrenched once or twice, and then flecked his game before putting it round to Ruby Red to kill.

Waterloo Purse.—Third Round: Quite Right led Featherwood [illegible] hard-run Featherwood an occasional spin, which he finished with [illegible] long run, Word of Honour drew [illegible] from Waterside, and scored two [illegible] chopped puss between them. Fertile Field reached his game a long two lengths in front of Clyde Daisy, and made a short sequence before the brindled took possession for a couple of wrenches and the kill. After running level for a long distance, Real Point began to draw out slightly from Huanaco, and then leading a long length, went around smartly with her game, wrenching twice before killing.—Fourth Round: Word of Honour was fully three lengths in front of Quite Right, but the latter was placed off the turn for a couple of short points, before Word of Honour drew past, wrenched, and killed. Fertile Field was two lengths faster than Real Point, and, driving his hare well before him, scored four or five times before killing. A division was then agreed upon between the owners of Word of Honour and Fertile Field.

Waterloo Cup.—Fifth Round: After a grand race to the into first dyke, about half of the run up, Fortuna Favente took it well in his stride, gradually increasing his lead into a length and a half for the turn, and though Falconer then dashed across for possession, he only made a weak point before the red again had possession, and scored a couple more prior to wrenching and killing. Thoughtless Beauty was the quickest away, and at one time led by nearly a length, but, in spite of the hare inclining slightly to her side, Gallant drew level as puss was reached; Thoughtless Beauty, however, came round in possession, and again scored before Gallant drew past for one; immediately the hare again broke round the fawn was instantly there, and held her place well for some three or four good points before bringing the game round to Gallant to kill.—Deciding Course: Fortuna Favente, on the red collar, got rather the quicker away, and was a length in front when the dyke was reached, but Thoughtless Beauty, taking it beautifully in her stride, then drew level, and, eventually forging to the front, came round from the turn a length and a half ahead; puss now breaking back to Fortuna Favente, the puppy was well placed for the second and another half point; then the white collar, as the hare once more broke away, shot up for possession, and quickly wrenched twice before shooting out to kill, thereby losing her place; but, almost before Fortuna Favente could score, the bitch again went to the front position, and this time she effected the kill, after a couple of wrenches.

At last the Waterloo Cup has been run off, and glad, indeed, must Mr. Hartley Bibby be to be able to have everything in connection with it finished. Postponement after postponement must have tried the management to its utmost, and the committee are entitled to all praise for their decision in putting off the meeting from week to week, instead of, as many would have had them do, only adjourn from day to day. A very trying time it has been for Mr. Bibby in this his first year of office, and yet, from the very first to the ultimate finish, he has been a pattern secretary, and at all times furnished every information that was in his power. Even to the very last moment he was disappointed in the arrangements, as Bootiman, the appointed slipper, was down with influenza, and, of course, was unable to discharge his duties. Illness has on the present occasion kept many well-known coursers from being present, the three coming quickest to the mind being Mr. Fletcher, Mr. Pilkington (the owner of the winner), and Mr. Carruthers (the nominator). The winner, Thoughtless Beauty, most thoroughly deserved her position, and, although she went to slips on the final morning slightly lame, she threw off all signs of this when properly warmed up, and left neither of her spins on Friday in doubt. Looking back at her trials throughout the Cup, she first made a most brilliant display against The Quorn, only to show a still better performance in the second round against Cloudy Night. Then on Thursday, against Kilrosa, she led a long way; but perhaps hardly ran so well subsequently, Kilrosa really making the best show against her of any of her five opponents. Thoughtless Beauty's trial, later on in the day, against Fabulous Fortune was another brilliant performance, and then when lame on Friday she made two very smart displays against Gallant and Fortuna Favente. This season Thoughtless Beauty has not suffered defeat, winning at Purdysburn and Lytham, and now the ambition of every courser has been achieved by her. She is a most beautifully made fawn bitch, only 45 lb. in weight, and some might say a trifle light of bone; but "handsome is as handsome does," and hard, indeed, would it be for anyone to really pick her to pieces. Appended will be found a full pedigree of Mr. Pilkington's bitch;

The final course was undoubtedly a record in its way, as two Wrights (brothers) took the dog and bitch to slips, while a third brother officiated with the slips. By the way, this is the second time Mr. Carruthers has nominated the winner, the first being fifteen years ago with Honeywood. Wright's purchases for Mr. Pilkington have decidedly been of the judicious sort, as I remember his buying Burnaby, after winning a stake at Haydock Park; while he gave only 36 guineas for Thoughtless Beauty at the Barbican, and both won the Waterloo Cup.

Once more have I to chronicle the fact of Messrs Fawcett running second. Certainly their luck is most aggravating, they having now, in five years, run three times second for the Cup—that is to say, with Faster and Faster in 1891, with Fitz Fife in 1892, and now with Fortuna Favente. The litter by Herschel out of Fair Future has proved to be a most extraordinary one, as in addition to wins this season, Fair Floralie and Fabulous Fortune made their way into the last eight in the Cup, and then one was put out by the ultimate winner, and the other by her brother, the runner up. Falconer, who was in the final last year, and this time got into the last four, was, I think, hardly up to his best form, and once again I must record my opinion that it does not improve a dog to keep him over from one Waterloo Cup to another. Of course, it may be said that this was so in the case of Fullerton, but he was an exceptional example. Difficult, indeed, is it to get the inside fat from a dog who does not take part in a meeting at least once in the season before the Cup is run. A course now and then is not enough to clean them thoroughly out. The fourth this year was Gallant, who has shown himself to be an uncommonly good puppy, with more than a fair amount of pace. In fact, if the hare had gone straight, he would most likely have led Thoughtless Beauty; but it must be remembered that her lameness was more probable to affect her in the first course on the last morning than when she met Fortuna Favente; still Gallant is a puppy of great promise, and will undoubtedly hold his own in almost any company. Of those that did not get into the last round but one, I should give the palm to Fabulous Fortune, Fair Floralie, and Kilrosa. All these ran well, while a meed of praise is also due to that good all-round fourth-season dog, Ivan the Great. I understand that he will now be put to the stud, and he should certainly not lack patronage. Forum carried off the Plate for Mr. Fletcher, and the Purse resulted in a division between a really good puppy of Mr. Watson's, Word of Honour, and that useful dog belonging to the Messrs. Fawcett, Fertile Field. What a wonderful sire Herschel has again shown himself, as five of his progeny were in the last eight, three in the last four, and two of these ran off the deciding course! Not content with this record Forum, the winner of the Plate, and Word of Honour, of the dividers of the Purse, were both by Herschel. Looking down the list it was noticed that in the last sixteen in the Cup there were ten all-aged and six puppies, while in the last eight the ages were evenly divided; also in the last four and again in the final round. The old dogs had the best of it in the Plate, but the Purse was divided between an all-aged and a puppy.

The flagging of the meeting was excellently well done by Mr. Alfred Brisco and Mr. Harold Brocklebank; and again, I have nothing but praise for the decisions of Mr. Hedley, the only case in which it was possible to differ with him being on the first day, when Falconer got the verdict against Flamma. Wright I have never seen slip better, and on the first day it was under difficulties, as the flanking of the hares to him was very badly done. Another year there is the possibility of seeing two slippers appointed, and this, I think, will be a decided advantage, as it is almost impossible for one slipper to do himself justice or to satisfy all the nominators throughout the three days.—From our English cotemporary, The Field.

COURSING NEAR EMPORIA

For the third time this season the coursers in and around Emporia, Kan., got together on Friday, March 16, and ran off a small stake, of which we have received the following brief account: "Inclosed please find a card of a small meeting that was held at Cottonwood Falls yesterday and proved a success, being the third meeting there this Winter. They have formed a club under the name of the Coyote Coursing Club of Chase, Lyon and Morris counties, with a membership of fifteen, which looks promising for a thirty-two-dog stake next Fall, as the president, Mr. G. W. Heintz, of Cottonwood Falls, is starting out in the right kind of shape to make it a success.

"The coursing yesterday was very good, getting some good hares and some very nice courses.

"The bitch Beauty (winner) is owned by Mr. Dix of Herington, Kan., the runner-up by Mr. Bowman of Council Grove, and Fanny Fly by O. M. Wilhite of Emporia, and first money was $15, second $10, and third $5; entrance $2.50.

"Dick T and Cast Off drawing in the first round put King and Colonel together.

"Mr. M. P. Newton has judged the three meetings held this Winter around here and G. W. Heintz has slipped; the latter having dogs entered, but no other satisfactory slipper could be got."

These little local meetings do a great deal toward spreading an interest in coursing, and they are worthy of encouragement. We should like to see them instituted throughout the Western states. The following were the results at Cottonwood Falls:

SUMMARY

COTTONWOOD FALLS, KAN., February 15. THE COUNTIES STAKES, for 16 greyhounds of all ages, owned in Chase, Lyon and Morris counties, at $2 50 each. To the winner $15, second $10, third $5. 14 entries.

FINAL

Mr. R. H. Dix's Beauty, by imp. Trales—Tenee, was declared the winner, Mr. S. A. Bowman's King, by imp. Trales—Nellie, being drawn.

Here is one more instance where it is necessary to point out an error in the order of running. It will be observed by looking carefully at the above summary that Mr. Jas. Murphy's Colonel, which was entitled to an accidental bye the first time through the card, on account of his opponent having been withdrawn, disappears entirely from the running. Mr. Bowman's King got a similar bye; but from our correspondent's remark and from the way in which the card he incloses is marked it is evident that these dogs derived no benefit from their accidental byes, for they were put in slips to compete against one another and King gained the verdict. They would have met, anyhow, in the second round, so the error really did not make much difference to Colonel; but it was the cause of Scotch Lass being deprived of a natural bye in the second round, which ultimately would have placed her on equality with Fannie Fly as regards getting a share of the money. In other words King and Colonel met in the first round instead of in the second, and Scotch Lass was beaten by King in the second round instead of in the third. The running, after the first time through the card, should have been:

II

Fannie Fly beat Blue.	King beat Colonel.
Beauty beat Short Order.	Scotch Lass, a bye.

III

Beauty beat Fannie Fly.	King beat Scotch Lass.

It will be observed that both the winner and the runner-up are by imported Trales.

SAN FRANCISCO'S NEW PARK

The inaugural meeting on February 17 at Mr. M. Kerrigan's new Golden Gate Coursing Park seems to have been quite a success, judging from all accounts. Mr. Kerrigan had got in a lot of hares from Merced, and, as they ran very well and the coursing inclosure is very large, most of the trials were of a genuine character. Messrs. Grace and Wren having been engaged, Mr. Kerrigan found no difficulty in obtaining forty-eight entries at $3 each; they came from San Jose, Merced, Oakland, Sacramento and San Francisco. J. R. Dickson was slip steward, J. Trade flag steward, and J. Perigo, J. J. Edmonds and P. Carney field stewards.

Concerning the attendance, the park itself and its accommodations the California Turf says: "The immense crowd—at least 1,200—witnessed a splendid day's sport. Mr. Kerrigan has erected a fine and roomy stand all of which is covered in, from which a perfect view all over the coursing field is obtained. There is also a commodious bar and restaurant, but if the crowds continue anything like those of Sunday last this portion of the building at least, must be doubled in size.

The running ground is most ample, but when Mr. Kerrigan took possession of the land it was partially covered with a stunted brush which must have cost considerable for its removal. This has been almost all cleared away, but we noticed that there is a little too much of it yet in the southwest corner, but of course everything cannot be done in a day, and when this is cleared off it may be said that the grounds will be perfect for coursing purposes, as it is of a fine, springy nature.

"Coursing commenced at 11:30, and, with the exception of the half hour allowed for lunch after the first round, the sport went on until 5:30 p. m., when the last brace in the second round was finished.

"There were many visitors noticed in the stand and grounds that were never before seen at any of the coursing parks around San Francisco. The turnout of carriages and vehicles too was good, and the grand stand was literally crammed with ladies and escorts. Such an assemblage was never seen here before at a coursing meeting. From start to finish there was not the slightest hitch, and it was evident that one and all enjoyed themselves thoroughly."

The card was run through twice, making thirty-six courses, and the balance of the running was left until the following Sunday, February 24, when the day was fine and between four and five hundred people were present; the hares, however, did not run so well as on the previous occasion, and the sport was rather poor.

The winner, Stamboul, is a brindled and white dog owned by Mr. Payton, of Santa Cruz, but nominated by his trainer, William D. Murphy. Valley Queen, the runner-up, is a well-known fifth-season bitch belonging to Mr. J. J. Edmonds.

The twelve dogs left in at the end of the park's opening day were: J. H. Perigo's Longfellow, J. O'Shea's Salvator, T. O'Brien's Lamplighter, P. Curtis' Ruby, D. Leonard's Will o' the Wisp, M Earle (ns. A. Merrill's) Jennie G, W. D. Murphy (ns. Mr. Payton's) Stamboul, J. McBride (ns. J. Dowling's) Queen of the Valley, T. J. Cronin's Best Trump, J. J. Edmonds' Valley Queen, J. H. Perigo's Wee Lassie and W. D. Murphy (ns. Mr. Payton's) Stamboul Queen.

The second day brought the following results: Longfellow beat Salvator, Ruby beat Lamplighter, Will o' the Wisp beat Jennie G, Stamboul beat Queen of the Valley, Valley Queen ran a bye and Stamboul Queen beat Wee Lassie. In the following round Longfellow won from Ruby, Stamboul disposed of Will o' the Wisp and Valley Queen proved too much for Stamboul Queen. In the semi finals Stamboul beat Longfellow after an undecided, and Valley Queen, of course, ran a bye. The final course is described by the California Turf as follows:

"On the dogs being slipped Stamboul went to the front and led the bitch by two lengths in a comparatively short run. He got the turn, when Valley Queen ran in, killed and lost."

W. D. Murphy (ns. Mr. Payton's) Stamboul won $60; J. J. Edmonds' Valley Queen $40; J. H. Perigo's Longfellow $20; P. Curtis' Ruby, W. D. Murphy (ns. Mr. Payton's) Stamboul Queen and P. Leonard's Will o' the Wisp $15 each.

OCEAN VIEW PARK UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

On February 10, Ocean View Coursing Park, near San Francisco, was reopened under the management of that well-known courser, Mr. T. J. Cronin. A large crowd was present and witnessed some good coursing, a thirty-two being run off between 11:30 a. m. and 5 p. m., and the hares as a rule running well. Mr. Grace judged, Mr. Wren slipped and Mr. Dickson was slip-steward. The thirty-two entries came from San Francisco, Santa Clara and Oakland. The winner turned up in Magpie, by Scalper—Kitty Moore; he is owned by Mr. P. Ryan of San Francisco, but was bred in Sacramento. Jennie G, the runner-up, is a six-year-old bitch by Killarney—Gentle Annie.

SUMMARY

OCEAN VIEW PARK, CAL., February 10. THE REOPENING STAKES, for 32 greyhounds of all ages. To the winner, $60; to the runner-up, $10; next two dogs, $20 each; next four dogs, $10 each.

FINAL COURSE

Mr. P. Ryan's Magpie beat Mr. A. Merrill's Jennie G, and won.

AMERICAN COURSING BOARD'S CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—A majority of the members of the American Coursing Board having voted in favor of the adoption of the revised constitution and by-laws, as published in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 2—with the exceptions that in Sec. VI "evidence of the qualifications" should read "evidence of their qualifications," and that in Sec. VII the words "by club rules" have been changed to read "by clubs"—and none against, the president has instructed me to notify you of the result. The same are now the constitution and by-laws of the American Coursing Board.

Also, the proposal to add to Rule 14 of the Code of Rules for Coursing the words "no dog entered in the name of a kennel or partnership shall be guarded unless it shall have been registered as the property of said kennel or partnership thirty days prior to entry" has been carried; no votes against and a majority in favor.

T. W. BARTELS,
Secy. American Coursing Board.

NOTES

IN the report of the open meeting at St. Louis a year ago we commented on the wretched class of local greyhounds; the criticism, though severe, was just and well-meant, and we are glad to see that St. Louis coursers gave heed to it, and are steadily acquiring some good blood. Chartist, last Saturday's winner, ran in the American Coursing Derby at Huron, last Fall, but was drawn against the speedy Master Glenkirk, who beat him very easily. Lady Alko made her first appearance in the Kansas Stakes, at the Altcar Club's meeting, and after winning easily from Blister was well beaten by the Butterfiles in a good trial. The St. Louis meeting held last Saturday, and of which we have received a report, was the first of the new St. Louis Coursing Club, which it was wrongly stated last week would assume the name of the "Original Coursing Club." Two of its members' names figure in the list of sportsmen who made entries for the Altcar Produce Stakes, and its officers are: President, Mr. Chas. A. Robinson; vice-president, Mr. John Bambrick; secretary, Mr. D. J. O'Callaghan; treasurer, Mr. A. McElrath; executive committee, Messrs. Chas. Boyd, E. J. Brown and John Egan. We are informed that the new organization has adopted a constitution and by-laws of considerable stringency, and has decided to apply for membership in the American Coursing Board. The club has leased Brentwood Park and will, we are assured, lift coursing at St. Louis out of the quagmire into which it was rapidly sinking.

THREE weeks ago we drew attention to a circular letter, sent out from Huron, S. D., and intimating that the Altcar Produce Stakes would be run off at that place. We are informed that the letter was sent out by Mr. F. B. Coyne and was entirely unauthorized. The executive committee of the Altcar Club request us to announce that the Produce Stakes will not be run at Huron or any other point in Dakota, and that such an arrangement has never for a moment been contemplated.

IN the Waterloo Cup long-odds betting Gallant was backed freely at 125 to 1, and his backers must have been on velvet when, after having won four courses, the odds against him shortened to 8 to 1. What better hedging could anyone want than that?

GREYHOUNDS are offered for sale by Mr. L. F. Bartels, Denver, Colo.

RIFLES FOR BIG GAME

DE BEQUE, COLO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In speaking of the rifle and ammunition for big game I am inclined to agree with Mr. A. B. Witcher, whose communication appeared in the AMERICAN FIELD March 16; at least I believe him to be right when he says "penetration is the desideratum in a cartridge intended for a bear or other fierce or very heavy game."

A bullet weighing from 450 to 500 grains and propelled by from 70 to 80 grains of powder will pass through a bear's shoulder and reach a vital spot. It may also crush both shoulders and instantly end the disturbance. It is certainly as affective as a lighter bullet when striking any part of an animal, if we except the intestines when torn with a heavy express ball. Such a wound, while ultimately fatal, only momentarily shocks. It misleads the hunter and often with terrible results.

Between the ball which shocks and the one that penetrates deeply there can be but one choice, and just here comes in the factor referred to by Mr. Witcher, the absence of which renders void the shocking power. The item referred to is the size of the bullet, which, of course, should be large. The only perfect combination is that of weight, speed and large striking surface.

I have given the .45-90-300 cartridge a fair trial on the big game of the Rocky Mountains and have replaced it with the .45-82-350, which possesses the advantages of greater accuracy, range and penetration. The trajectory suffers but little loss and the striking force none.

NOTES

THE Lee Rifle Co., through its English representative is now pushing infringement suits against two large gun manufacturers of Belgium and Germany, and if sustained in its claims it is possible action may be taken against a dozen European powers for the recovery of royalties amounting in the aggregate to millions of dollars. In 1890 the English government adopted the Lee rifle for the English army. Subsequent to this the Mannlichers of Austria procured patents in Belgium and Germany under which they infringed directly, it is claimed, on the magazine used in the Lee gun. The Mannlicher guns are made in Germany and Belgium. Mauser, a large gunmaker of Liege, Belgium, also secured patents in Belgium and Germany and he began to manufacture at Liege, it is also held, an absolute copy of the Lee magazine. With this gun Mauser supplied the armies of Belgium, Italy, Spain, Turkey, and several South American powers. He also made large shipments to China. The cases are for royalties of $2.50 on each gun and will amount to over $1,000,000 in each instance.

THE tournament of the National Sharpshooters' Union, to be held at Glendale, L. I., from June 30 to July 8, will probably be the greatest rifle shooting tournament ever held in this country or England. For the last two years the clubs composing the union have been formulating plans for this tournament, and so successfully has the work been done that at the present time all of the more important details of the tournament are complete. The association has raised a guaranteed fund of $125,000 to defray expenses of the tournament and attendant festivities, and that too without going outside of its membership to solicit a dollar. While most of the men in the ranks of the promoters of this grand tournament are Germans, it will nevertheless be a cosmopolitan affair, and many purely American rifle clubs will join the German-American schuetzen societies in the festivities. With the single exception of the Honor Target competition, all contests will be open to all comers, no club or marksman from any part of the United States being barred.

AMONG the rifle organizations which have already signified their intention to participate in the annual tournament of the Western Sharpshooters' Association, to be held in Milwaukee, Wis., in June next, are the Chicago Sharpshooters' Association, North Chicago Sharpshooters' Society, Excelsior Rifles of Davenport, Ia., Winona Sharpshooters' Society of Winona, Minn., Omaha Sharpshooters, Peru Sharpshooters' Association of Peru, Ill., Cincinnati Rifles, Elgin National Rifle Company and Joliet Sharpshooters' Club. Wisconsin will be represented by teams from La Crosse, Oshkosh, Wausau, Green Bay, Independence, Kewaunee, Alma, Chilton, Monroe, Neenah, and other towns.

LONG—STEELE

LAFAYETTE, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Mr. J. E. Loog and Mr. Wm. Steele on the evening of March 23 sho. off their tie of March 16, Mr. Long coming out victorious. The scores.

Long	242	243	242	236	247—1,210
Stee e	234	239	236	246	238—1,193

Mr. Steele insists that they must shoot again, so you will probably hear from them in the near future.

CHET.

CINCINNATI, O.—The following scores were made by members of the Cincinnati Rifle Association at their range, on March 24. Conditions: 200 yards, off hand, at the Standard target. The first eight men on the list shot in competition with eight men of the Central Sharpshooters' Association to-day, beginning with the eleventh shot and ending with the thirty-fifth, an account of which will be sent to the sportingmen's papers later on. Weather conditions: Light good, unsteady 3 to 5 o'clock wind blowing in gusts. The scores published are the four best out of eight.

NEW YORK STATE TRAP SHOOTING RULES

UTICA, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—At a recent meeting of the Committee on Rules of the New York State Association for the Protection of Fish and Game, the American Shooting Association rules, both target and live bird, were adopted to govern the 1895 tournament at Saratoga, together with certain special rules made necessary by local conditions. This does away with the cumbersome and out of date rules heretofore governing live bird events in this state. The following represents the work of the committee and if sportsmen will paste it in their copy of American Shooting Association rules they will have the complete New York rules for 1895.

TARGET SHOOTING

American Shooting Association rules shall govern where they do not conflict with the following special rules:

RULE 1.—The rapid firing system shall be used, targets being thrown from known traps at unknown angles, and the angles to be changed after each target is thrown.

RULE 2.—In ordinary sweepstake events the management may permit 10 gauge guns to stand at 16 yards score, but in all state events 10-gauge guns must stand at 18 yards and shoot in separate squads.

RULE 3.—No person shall be eligible to shoot on any team contesting for the team championship at inanimate targets unless he shall be,

First. An actual bona fide citizen of the state of New York.

Second. He shall have been at least thirty days a member of the club which he shall represent.

Third. He shall be an actual bona fide resident of the county in which said club has its principal headquarters.

If any club shall allow any person to shoot on a team not able to comply with all of the above requisites, such team shall forfeit its entrance money and all rights in the match, and be subject to such penalties as the association may prescribe.

No moneys shall be paid over or any trophy be awarded if a protest shall be made by any team contesting until the same shall be decided and the tournament president shall determine how the protest shall be considered and decided.

LIVE BIRD SHOOTING

American Shooting Association rules shall govern when they do not conflict with the following special rules:

RULE 1.—If any member of a team contesting for the Dean Richmond trophy shall be disqualified from shooting for any cause under the rules after he shall have fired at one or more birds in the contest, the team of which he is a member shall forfeit all rights and privileges in the match, and also their entrance money.

RULE 2.—Conduct. No person who acts in an unsportsmanlike manner or who is intoxicated or who persists in making himself disagreeable to contestants and management, or who willfully persists in using profane or vulgar language, or willfully insists upon violating the rules of this association, shall be permitted on the grounds of this association, or participate in any contests on its grounds.

RULE 3.—Birds Alighting. Any bird shot at (with either one or both barrels) with sufficient life to light on a fence, tree or outbuilding, and closing its wings, shall be declared a lost bird.

RULE 4.—No person shall be eligible to shoot on any team contesting for the Dean Richmond trophy unless he shall be,

First. An actual bona fide citizen of the state of New York.

Second. He shall have been at least thirty days a member of the club which he shall represent.

Third. He shall be an actual bona fide resident of the town or city in which said club has its principal headquarters or of a town or city in the same county immediately adjoining thereto.

If any club shall allow any person to shoot on a team not able to comply with all of the above requisites, such team shall forfeit its entrance money and all rights in the match, and be subject to such other penalties as the association may prescribe.

No moneys shall be paid over or any trophy be awarded if a protest shall be made by any team contesting until the same shall be decided and the tournament president shall determine how the protest shall be considered and decided.

RULE 5.—The Dean Richmond trophy, value $1,150, shall be held by the winning club each year in trust, to be accounted for to the state association, to be shot for by three members of a club belonging to the association, such members to be residents of the town or city in which the club is located, or in a town or city in the same county immediately adjoining thereto as provided in Rule 4. Fifteen single live bird to each contestant. Entrance fee $20 per team. The team making the highest score shall win the "Trophy" and 60 per cent. of the entrance money, and the team making the next highest score will receive the remaining 40 per cent.

HANDICAPPING THE EXPERT

ELWOOD, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I have read with much interest the many articles on handicapping the expert, and have come to the conclusion that there is no handicap that will give perfect satisfaction to the expert and amateur. A handicap that is satisfactory to the expert will not be so to the amateur, and vice versa. Some time ago I saw in the AMERICAN FIELD that the catalog for the Cleveland shoot was ready and would be sent to anyone applying for same. I had intended going to that shoot and sent for the program, but after reading it, and taking the handicap into consideration, I changed my mind and concluded that as I did not have $50 or $75 to throw away I had better stay at home. I think it will be the amateur who will be handicapped. The handicap events are the 15-bird races, and the expert must break thirteen, fourteen or fifteen to be in for money. That is, the expert must be first, second or third or he is shut out of the money. An awful handicap, isn't it? Now, suppose the amateur has the good luck to make a good score. He is also compelled to shoot as an expert in the following event. It may be possible for him to do it, but hardly probable. Why, the amateur would be better off with no handicap, and yet the management think it will prove satisfactory to all. I do not think so, and time will prove it.

In the 20-bird races there is no handicap. Every trap-shooter knows that the longer the race, the chances are lessened of the poorer shot getting a place. It is such events that give the experts the opportunity of dropping for place. They do it; always have done it, and always will. An overheard conversation and scheming of four experts, which occurred behind the Elwood Gun Club house at the shoot given by the Interstate Association last June is sufficient proof of this.

If a handicap is to be placed on the expert there is only one way of doing it that will compel them to shoot to win, and that is a handicap of birds, say one bird in fifteen. Let the expert shoot at fourteen and the amateur at fifteen. This would put them on more equal terms than any handicap I know of; but I do not think it would suit the expert, as he would be unable to walk off with all the money, yet I am sure he would be the biggest winner of the day at that.

Unless something is done to shut off the few from getting all, I am afraid that our great sport will be injured beyond redemption. Notice the many different devices now used to enhance trap shooting, yet none of them have put the expert and amateur on anything like equal terms. Distance handicapping amounts to nothing, as the expert is from five to eight yards the quicker shot; besides he uses a gun which is the best his firm can make, is furnished with the best ammunition procurable, and is shooting nearly every day in the season. Why should he not be a good shot? And why should he not be handicapped? The amateur gets but little practice, owing to business or financial matters. If we are going to have a handicap let it be one that will compel the experts to do their best to win, and the dropping of a bird be their loss.

If we should wake up on the morning of the Cleveland shoot and find a certain few experts with no amateurs in attendance, I am afraid they would have to adjourn to headquarters and get a handicap that will have some magnetic power over the amateur. Allow me to quote from the best article I ever read on trap shooting:

"Trap shooting never was so popular as it is to-day; but there is danger lurking in the air. The sport is threatened. There are a class of men who make a living at trap shooting who do more in a single day to ruin this glorious sport than its promoters can accomplish in weeks, yea, months. I refer to a class of professionals who attend shoots with a view of making out of them all they possibly can. Through goodfellowship they are welcomed. The ethics of courtesy render such an action compulsory, and while the presence of these 'wolves,' or 'sharks,' as this class of professionals is termed behind their backs, is dreaded, they are made to feel at home. The presence of these 'wolves' is tolerated; everybody turns out the first day; money is spent freely. There is a noticeable falling off in the participants the second day, while on the third day the entry list dwindles down to a certain few. The reason is quite apparent. The amateur has become disgusted. The real supporters refuse to go against a sure thing. Do you longer wonder where this danger lies? These wolves are simply assassins. They are driving the keen-bladed knife into the vitals of a spleudid sport, and what is more their number is becoming largely augmented every year. These wolves are, of course, good shots. They are in constant practice and supplied with the best of ammunition. The amateur who shoots beside them is, in nine cases out of ten, a business man who shoots for pleasure. If trap shooting was confined to the 'wolves,' how long would it last? To-day the amateur is forced to the background because of his inability to keep pace with the 'wolf' on account of lack of practice. His desire is to appear at the trap oftener, but he refuses to be bunkoed."

AN AMATEUR.

AN OPEN CHALLENGE TO TRAP SHOOTERS

TORONTO, CAN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—As you are aware, during the recent trap shooting tournament at Hamilton, I shot a match against Capt. J. H. Brewer at 50 birds. When it was over he was one bird ahead, but I heard that he had been using a full ounce and a half of shot, whereas the Old Dominion rules, under which the match was arranged, only allowed an ounce and a quarter. Naturally I challenged the result, and the charge was clearly proven—in fact it was not denied by Capt. Brewer himself, who admitted that he used Dixon's measure heaping full, which would be well over an ounce and a half. As my opponent was well aware of the conditions, and had simply been trying to steal a match on me, the referee allowed the protest and awarded me the stakes.

Then the scandal-mongers, the men who see fraud in everything, the men who would be the first to try and get on the "inside," if there really was anything crooked on the board, gave free vent to their feelings. They charged that Capt. Brewer and I were in collusion, that I knew he was going to use the quantity of shot he did, and that we both drew the bettors on and divided the spoils. A more barefaced slander was never uttered. I had no suspicion until the match was well through that I was being cheated, and then I hesitated to believe it. On investigation, however, the information which had been conveyed to me proved beyond doubt to be correct. I then made the protest as any other man would have done under like circumstances. To the truth of this I am willing to make affidavit or to make oath in a court of law. I am also prepared to furnish substantial evidence in support of my position.

It may appear strange that I should take notice of the matter at this late date, and but for the fact that the charges continue to live, and found utterance only the other day, I should be disposed to let it drop. In reality I had so decided, but the men who originated the baseless statements are so emphatic in their reassertion that I feel the only course to be pursued is for me, in the first place to give them public and open denial; in the second to defy my accusers to substantiate their allegations, and, in the third, to offer to shoot the match over again on as nearly as possible similar terms. In order to disprove any lingering suspicion that may remain after my offer has been made that there was any cause on my part for collusion, I will go further and will shoot a match against Captain Brewer, J. A. R. Elliott of Kansas City, E. D. Fulford, Fred Erb, or any other man in the United States or Canada, at 100 live birds, 26 yards rise, for $250 a side, 80 yards boundary; Old Dominion rules to govern in all except the matter of the rise, the principal requirements being single barrel, gun below the elbow till the bird is on the wing, and 1¼ ounces shot. I much prefer, for certain reasons, that Mr. J. A. R. Elliott should take this challenge up. If he or any other man will come to Toronto and shoot me a match under the terms proposed I will guarantee him his expenses. My business will not, I regret to say, allow me to leave Canada at present or I would head my traducers in their own dens. For the same reason I cannot consent to keep this offer open indefinitely. I will, therefore, limit the time for acceptance to three weeks, the match to be shot within one month from the date on which is covered the forfeit of $50 which I have deposited with Mr. H. J. P. Good, editor of the Canadian Sporting News, as an evidence of my sincerity and the assurance that if Mr. Elliott, Mr. Erb, Capt. Brewer, Mr. Ful-ford, or any other man accepts this offer, they will not find me difficult to please in the matter of officials and preliminaries.

C. COCKBURN.

NOTES

THE program for the Interstate Association's tournament at Pittsburg, Pa., April 16, 17 and 18, announces a handicap target race at 100 birds per man, $5 entrance, targets extra, four moneys, for the first day, and ten events for each of the other two days, the entrance in the events of the last two days ranging from $1.50 to $2, with added money to most of the events by the Pittsburg Gun Club, for which organization the tournament is given. In the handicap race on the first day "scratch" men will shoot at 100 targets, known trap, unknown angles, while others less expert will be allowed to shoot at a number exceeding 100 as the handicapping committee may designate, up to 125, yet no man, even with his handicap, can score to exceed 100. The handicapping will be done by Elmer E. Shaner, "Jim Crow," "Old Hoss" and Louis Lauteuslager of the Pittsburg Gun Club. Entries may be made in this event up to the commencement of shooting by the last squad, each squad to shoot at 25 single targets before retiring. The Interstate Association's rules will govern this and all other tournaments held by this association this season. Shooters will be classified from the records made at their home clubs, or from best information obtainable, into two classes—expert and amateur. Shooters who are classified as experts must at all times shoot in accordance with the expert rule—which is targets from five unknown traps, known angles, rapid firing system. Shooters who are classified as amateurs must shoot at targets from known traps, unknown angles. Any shooter in the amateur class who wins or divides first money must shoot in the next event which he enters, in the expert class; if in this event he fails to win or divide any part of the purse, he will fall back to known traps, unknown angles in the next event he shoots in, and so continue to graduate. Shooters classified as experts do not receive the benefit of the sliding scale. All purses at this tournament will be divided 40, 30, 20 and 10 per cent.; all ties divide. The association to overcome the objectionable practice of some shooters of dropping for place makes the following commendable announcement: "Any shooter who intentionally misses a target in order to obtain a certain place shall forfeit all his interest in the purse, and will be debarred from taking part in any tournament given under the auspices of the Interstate Association." This tournament will be held at Exposition Park, Allegheny City, Pa., and Hotel Anderson in Pittsburg, which is only six minutes' ride by electric cars from the park will be headquarters for shooters. Further information regarding handicaps, programs, or the tournament may be had by addressing Elmer E. Shaner, Secretary, 122 Diamond Market, Pittsburg, Pa.

THE Colt Hammerless Gun Club has just finished a series of twenty-four shoots for cash and merchandise prizes. The conditions were, to shoot once every two weeks at 25 targets per man, and any member shooting ten times out of the twenty-four shoots qualified for the prizes. For the $50 donated by the club, a handicap of from one to seventy-five targets was allowed, to be added to the ten best scores. The merchandise prizes were drawn for by those who qualified. M. F. COOK, one of the scratch men, led the club again this year with a score of 241 out of a possible 250. His score last year was 242. The following were the winners of the cash prizes: J. J. Peard, S. T. Colt and C. Bailey divided first, second and third, amounting to $25; J. A Pitkin, fourth prize, $6; F. W. Green and P. E. Tucker divided fifth and sixth prizes, $9; J. A Pitkin, attending twenty-three out of the twenty-four shoots, secured $6, and M. F. Cook, attending twenty-one out of the twenty-four shoots, secured $4. The merchandise prizes were drawn as follows, most of the members who qualified securing two prizes: Owen Treat, 22-caliber Colt rifle and a 15 pound ham; J. J. Peard, mackintosh and pot of Easter lilies; Fred Olmstead, fishing rod and box of handkerchiefs; O. B. Treat, pants pattern and cyciometer; H. Nichols, revolver and cigar holder; C. Bailey, bottle wine and bottle champagne: M. F. Cook, five dollars cash and bottle whisky and cocktail; P. E. Tucker, box cigars and 6¼ pounds Wood powder; Fred Manross, umbrella and bottle whisky; E. O. Goodwin, case of claret; J. A. Pitkin, revolver and toilet bottle; S. T. Colt, three dollars cash and bottle Tom gin; F. W. Green, gallon hay rum and box cigars; Sexton, pipe and case and 200 Smokeless shells.

Hartford, Conn. G.

THE program for the twelfth annual tournament of the Atchison (Kan.) Gun Club has been received. The tournament is to be held on April 17, 18 and 19 and is to be under the personal supervision of Mr. John Parker, of Detroit, Mich., a gentleman well known to the trap shooters of the country and a man who has had great experience in the management of trap shooting tournaments, therefore there is not the least reason to doubt but what the tournament will be conducted on the latest and most approved methods. There are to be seventeen events in all during the three days, each event at 20 single targets, entrance price of targets at 2½ cents each, or 50 cents. With each event there will be a sweepstake, $1 entrance for those wishing to enter; the sweepstake purse in each instance, to be divided into four moneys. 40, 30, 20 and 10 per cent.; all ties divided. Both Empire targets and Blue Rocks will be used, thrown from three sets of electric traps. The tournament is strictly for amateurs, consequently professionals and manufacturers' agents will not be allowed to participate. All shooting will be from known traps, known angles, rapid fire and there will be no handicap, except no shooter will be allowed to win more than one first prize. In its arrangement the program is indeed a novel one, and the management thinks it is so arranged that it will draw together a very large number of amateur shooters.

IT may be well, as a warning to clubs and shooters to be more careful in arranging screens for the protection of trappers, to publish the following accident which happened to me recently while acting in the capacity of a trapper where the protection was insufficient in height. I was throwing straightaway birds, regular elevation, my head protruding a little above the screen, when a wad from one of the guns struck me on the top of the head, making an opening in my hat three-quarters of a inch wide by two and one-half inches long and cutting a gash in my scalp two inches long, from which I bled profusely. The wad came with such force as to cause me to duck my head, and had it struck lower down it might have caused a serious injury. I have shot over the traps for four years, and occasionally when the trappers were only protected by some flimsy barrels or planks. This should not be and I will not do it again. I cannot account for this in any other way than that a portion of the shot stuck to the wad until very close to me and the wad took a down shoot, or possibly the wad was one of the few found in nearly every box that are very hard. Screens should be made high enough and of sufficient thickness to protect the trappers from all danger from the guns of the shooters. If a shooter cannot hit a target over a four-foot screen he ought to lose it.

Pinckneyville, Ill. E. C. EATON.

IT is deemed advisable to refer to the matter of admission to the shooting grounds during the Grand American Handicap tournament, April 3, 4 and 5. In the past there has been more or less of an undesirable element present at all large tournaments, and in order to avoid a similar occurrence at Willard Park, the management desires to explicitly state that admittance to the grounds will be only by card of admission. Cards can be secured by both shooters and spectators, free of charge, by applying to the secretary-treasurer, the manager, or any of the subscribers to the Interstate Association. The management has not been slow in catering to the personal convenlences of the shooters. A new tent 36x22 feet, equipped with gun racks, shell tables, and suitable stands for coats, hats, etc., will be thrown open for the accommodation of the contestants. In a nutshell, every detail pertaining to proper arrangements has been attended to. Once again I would remind those shooters who contemplate entering the Grand American Handicap that this is the last week during which regular entries will be accepted. Entries, accompanied by $10 to feit, should be sent on or before March 30, to J. A. H. Dressel, secretary-treasurer, 313 Broadway, New York City.

Pittsburg, Pa. ELMER E. SHANER, Manager.

THE Osceola (Ia.) Gun Club announces a tournament for April 24, 25 and 26. It is the fifth annual tournament of the club and nothing will be left undone that will aid in making it a success or in any way add to the pleasure of those attending. Osceola is located on the main line of the C. B. & Q. Railway, sixty miles directly south of Des Moines and in one of the prettiest portions of the state, while the club is composed of the best business men of the city. The shooting will be at inanimate targets exclusively, and the club will add $200 cash to the purses. Professionals will be handicapped one bird in each event, and anyone known to drop a bird for place will be barred from receiving any portion of the purse. American Shooting Association's revised rules will govern; four moneys in all events; rapid firing system. Average prizes will be awarded as follows: Best average in all events, $10; second best, $8; third best, $7; fourth best, $6; fifth best, year's subscription to the AMERICAN FIELD; sixth best, $4.

THE fifth annual meeting and tournament of the Arkansas State Sportsmen's Association which was to be held at Hot Springs, April 8, 9 and 10, will be held at Little Rock, Ark., May 28, 29 and 30. The first and third annual tournaments of the state association were held at Little Rock, and were among the most successful ever given by the association. Every effort will be made to sustain the reputation already established, and, if possible, make this tournament even more successful than its predecessors. Col. J. A. Woodson, John W. Dickinson Jr. and Paul R. Litzke will compose the tournament committee. I hope to be able to announce the added money in a few days, which we confidently expect will not be less than $300. Programs will be out about April 20, and can be obtained by addressing the undersigned.

Little Rock, Ark. PAUL R. LITZKE.

IT is reported that the more up-to-date society women of Washington, D. C., tiring of bicycle riding, tennis, golf, baseball, etc., are now turning their attention to live bird shooting at the trap, and that it is now the "proper thing" for a party of them, chaperoned by an equally young and sportive matron, to take the train over to the shooting grounds at Alexandria and spend the morning shooting live pigeons, or trying to shoot them, for as yet none of them have become proficient in the art. A hamper of luncheon is also taken along and after sufficient time has been given to pigeon shooting to sharpen their appetites, lunch is partaken of in the open air. The ladies think it great sport and so do the pigeons, for it is seldom that one of the latter is seriously injured.

THE annual meeting of the Valley City Gun Club, on March 15, was well attended and the officers which were elected, as given herein, are all active, experienced workers: President, Col. E Crafton Fox; vice-president, R. C. Wharton; secretary, C. F. Rood: treasurer, W. S. Coleman. These gentlemen, with three to be by them elected, constitute the board of directors. The club is in excellent shape both socially and financially, a deficit carried over at the beginning of 1894, having been made up, and a good balance is on hand at the beginning of the season of 1895. It was decided to make the tournament a three days' affair, May 30, 31 and June 1, and to add $500 cash, one-half of same being pledged on the spot.

Grand Rapids, Mich. C. F. ROOD, Secy.

RECENTLY it was stated in a New York daily paper that Frank Class' backer was willing to match him (Class) against any shooter for money, intimating that a match with Mr. J. A. R. Elliott would suit quite well. Replying to the challenge, Mr. Elliott says he will shoot Mr. Class on any reputable ground near New York for any amount, and at the same time make a separate wager with Mr. Class that in the match with him he will score 92 or better of just such birds as were furnished Capt. Brewer, E. D. Fulford and others who attempted to kill 45 out of 50.

MR. GEO. C. LUTHER, a young sportsman well known throughout the Eastern states, died at his home in Syracuse, N. Y., on February 26. Mr. Luther and his father together have been readers of the AMERICAN FIELD almost constantly for the last twenty-five years, and regarded it as their lexicon on everything pertaining to field sports or trap shooting. Mr. Luther was very fond of trap shooting and will be greatly missed by the members of the Onondaga County Sportsmen's Club, of which he was a prominent member.

THE Blue Rock Gun Club of San Francisco, Cal., is making arrangements for a busy season at the traps. A new club house, equal to any on the Pacific Coast, is being erected, and the club's grounds, which are located north of the city and only separated from the grounds of the Pelican Live Pigeon Club by the width of a wagon road, are to be fitted up with the most approved traps and an electric pull. The club will shoot once a week all through the Summer.

MR. G. M. KURTZ of the Jolly Gun Club of Milwaukee and Mr. J. Lewis of the South Side Gun Club of the same city, are matched to shoot a race at 200 live birds per man at the National Gun Club's grounds on April 2. Both men are said to be good shots and quite evenly matched, and a close race is expected. Sweepstake shooting will be indulged in before and after the race, lunch being served in the dining hall on the grounds.

THE annual meeting of the Garfield Gun Club, for the election of officers for the current year and the transaction of other business of importance to the club members, will be held at the Sherman House club room, Chicago, on Saturday evening, April 6, at 8 o'clock. Members are requested to be on hand promptly so that the business can all be attended to in one evening.

CAPT. JOHN BREWER states that there is $500 in the hands of Mr J. Blanderman, 100 West St., New York City, ready for matches of $100 each on any grounds in the state of New York. Anyone can accept and not name the shooter. All he wants is someone to meet him on the day the match is arranged for. Forfeit required.

IN the return match between the Yantacaw Gun Club of Nutley, N. J., and the Garden City Gun Club of Hempstead Plains, Long Island, which was shot on the grounds of the first named club on Saturday of last week, the Garden City Club won with a score of 72 to 68 for the Yantacaws.

MR. JOHN KUPP of Birdsboro, Pa., recently defeated Mr. A. A. Felix of Philadelphia, in a 25-bird match for $50 a side. On the same day over the same traps, Mr. M. V. Gunso of Douglassville, Pa., defeated Mr. T. E. Miller of Monocacy, Pa., in a 10-bird contest for $10 a side.

THE J. F. SCHMELZER & SONS ARMS CO., of Kansas City, Mo., will hold a midsummer tournament in the above-named city, open to amateurs only, on July 9, 10, 11 and 12, at which $1,500 worth of prizes will be hung up for competition.

THE time for holding the Michigan state tournament, which is to be held at Battle Creek, has been changed from April 18 and 19 to April 23 and 24. Shooters expecting to attend this tournament should make a note of this.

THE Cobwebs of West Farms and the West Newburg club each having won a match in the series arranged, the third one will be decided on neutral grounds, at Marion, N. J., at an early date.

THE Ames Gun Club of Ames, Ia., will hold a tournament on April 10. Both live birds and inanimate targets will be used.

THE ROCHESTER ROD AND GUN CLUB

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—It is some time since you have heard from me, so I venture once again into your august presence to inform the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD that the Rochester Rod and Gun Club is not dead, although its historian is—very nearly.

The following circular was presented to each member of our club about January 10:

OFFICIAL CLASSIFICATION

Of the members of the Rochester Rod and Gun Club in the contest for the gold badge presented by President Wm. F. Brinsmaid.

The contest will be decided in six events, beginning January 16 and closing February 27, the shooting on Wednesday or Saturday of each week to constitute one event.

RULES.—American Shooting Association rules to govern; known traps, unknown angles; entrance free.

The classification committee is empowered to reclassify contestants.

Every member who enters the contest must announce his intentions before going to the score. Only one string may be shot each week, except in cases where one wants to fill his quota, when he may shoot two strings to catch up. On the last day all who have previously shot two strings may finish by shooting four. Ties to be shot off on last classification.

OFFICIAL CLASSIFICATION JANUARY 1, 1895

Twenty-five Blue Rocks—Glover, Brinsmald, C. A. Bruff, S. B. Williams.

Twenty-seven Blue Rocks—Hadley, Stewart, Lane.

Twenty-eight Blue Rocks—Byer, Miller, Babcock, [illegible] Tassell.

Twenty-nine Blue Rocks—Norton, Crouch, Hick[illegible]

Thirty Blue Rocks—C. Resenger, Nichols, Hill[illegible]

Thirty-one Blue Rocks—Mann, Borst, Ryckma[illegible]

Thirty-two Blue Rocks—J. Resenger, Mullen[illegible] Palmer, Redmond.

Thirty-three Blue Rocks—Quirk, Fulton, T[illegible]

Thirty-four Blue Rocks—Griffiths, Sumner [illegible]

Thirty-seven Blue Rocks—McCarthy, L. H[illegible] street, Macomber, Hutchinson, J. L. Braff, L[illegible]

Forty-six Blue Rocks—Schleyer, Clark, Bauer, Kleinhans, Wride, Houck, Catchpole, Barhite.

Fifty Blue Rocks—Gordon, Fraine, Ryckman, Willard, Roth.

Any member that has not been classified will be when he presents himself on the grounds to shoot.

E. D. HICKS,
E REDMOND,
R. GARDNER,
Committee.

The classification was based on the shooting of each member for the past three months, and the reclassification was based on the relative position each contestant bore to the other. I herewith give the scores as they occurred:

The reader will see by the above table that Norton won by four points, which shows that the classification was nearly correct or as nearly so as such things can be arranged.

The Winter months have been pretty severe here and the weather anything but favorable for trap shooting. At the last meeting of our executive board it was decided to offer a series of prizes, headed with a beautiful 12-gauge hammerless shotgun, of what make I am at present unable to state. All the prizes are valuable, and I am requested by the committee in charge to ask the AMERICAN FIELD to donate one year's subscription toward helping it on, with the promise if our gall bears fruit that we will add to our obligations by sending a weekly report of how the battle progresses.

We have been waiting to hear something in regard to a race, whispered about a few weeks ago, regarding a target match between one of our club and the gallant Capt. Brewer, but nothing has turned up yet. I am unable to state why.

Spring hangs back like a balky mule, and the weather kicks up as many didoes, but it must come presently, and with it a few snipes to whet our appetites for the sterner realities of life.

W. C. HADLEY.

BREWER VS. MORFEY

The afternoon of Saturday, March 23, was a beautiful one for the match between these two crack shots at Willard Park, Paterson, N. J., when they shot 50 birds each under Long Island rules. The match began promptly at 2:30. Mr. Brewer won the toss and went to the score first. There was little wind to help the birds. Mr. J. Donnelly was selected as judge for Mr. Morfey and Mr. L. B. Campbell for Mr. Brewer. Mr. John Ryan was selected as referee. The fence of the park was agreed upon as the boundary.

The birds did not seem hard for the first two or three. The third one of Morfey's was first to show much spirit and got well out to the boundary before it fell. Mr. Brewer's fourth was a clipper to the right and was well stopped. Mr. Morfey's fourth was not a clean kill, but dropped about fifty yards away. Morfey's fifth did not fly, seemingly had a wing broken. The substitute bird was well killed. Mr. Brewer challenged Mr. Morfey's gun on the wing-broken bird, but it was not allowed. Mr. Morfey's sixth bird was a screamer to the right and was cleanly missed. Brewer's seventh, a driver, was killed clean, as all had been up to this time. Morfey's seventh, a driver—not a hard one—was lightly hit Brewer's eighth, a white one and a right-quarterer, was only a fair bird, slightly feathered. Morfey followed with a clean kill of a right-quarterer. Brewer's ninth, a good one to right, was cleanly killed. Morfey's, a right incomer, the first one to come in, was a clean kill. Brewer's tenth, a slow one to left quarter, was easily killed. Morfey's was one in same direction, but farther out, seemingly a bad miss. Brewer made a clean kill of a left incomer. Morfey had a swift one to right that was hard hit. Brewer's twelfth, in same direction, was killed clean—a good bird. Morfey's, a left driver, was killed promptly. Brewer's thirteenth, a fast one driving to right, was hit pretty hard, but went out with colors flying. Morfey's, a swift one to right, was not harmed much and easily escaped. Brewer's fourteenth went directly to the right and was killed clean. Morfey's, a right driver, was not hurt much and went out in quick time. Brewer's fifteenth, a right-quarterer, was quickly killed, as was Morfey's, a left incomer. Brewer's sixteenth was killed promptly and clean. Morfey's, a driver turning to the right after shot at, lit on the shed at entrance to grounds and died quickly. Brewer killed his seventeenth easily. Morfey missed his to the left—not a hard one. Brewer on his eighteenth killed to right quick and clean. Morfey also made a good kill on his, a left driver. Brewer's nineteenth, a right-quarterer, cleanly killed. Morfey's, a left driver again, well killed. Brewer's twentieth, a hard driver, was killed clean and elicited applause deservedly. Morfey's, an easy driver, was promptly killed. Brewer's twenty-first bird started directly away, but didn't get far; killed clean as usual. Morfey's, a left-quarterer, starting high, was cleanly killed. Brewer's twenty-second started quickly, directly away, but was well stopped. Morfey's, an incomer circling to left, was well killed. Brewer's twenty-third was a scorching driver and Mr. Brewer was a little slow getting on him, and though hard hit it went as far as it wanted to Morfey's, a direct incomer, was a clean miss. Brewer's twenty-fifth, a left-quarterer, was an easy mark, promptly killed, scoring 22 out of first 25. Morfey's, a left-quarterer of same kind, killed readily, scoring 16 out of first 25.

The twenty-sixth of both were easy ones. Brewer was dead on his twenty-seventh and the bird got a full charge. Morfey killed his in same direction just as well. Brewer's next went in same direction and was killed in same manner. Morfey's in same direction got center of the charge. Brewer's twenty-ninth did not fly, and was refused. The next, a right driver, was well killed. Morfey's, a driver, seemingly had the full charge. Brewer's thirtieth, a blue driver, went to grass quickly, a clean kill. Morfey's, a driver also, was just as well killed. Brewer's thirty-first, a fast driver, was clean killed within fifteen yards. Morfey's, one of the same kind, fell on almost the same spot. Brewer made short work of his thirty-second, a left driver. Morfey's, a low left-quarterer, was promptly killed. Brewer's thirty-third, a high right-quarterer, was a good one, but it shared the fate of nearly all those before him, falling at the crack of the gun. Morfey's, to the left, was a clean kill. Brewer's thirty-fourth, a blue driver, was quickly and cleanly killed. Morfey's, at start a puzzling driver, was a clean kill. Brewer's thirty-fifth, a white bird to the right, was centered at once. Morfey's, a white one, too, a left driver, was well killed. Both men were now shooting well, Morfey seemingly back to his form. Brewer's thirty-sixth, a fast blue bird directly to the left, was well killed; it was a scorcher. Morfey's, a right incomer, was not hard, and was promptly killed. Brewer's next, quartering to left, was easily killed. Morfey's, a white driver, towered a little after the shot and fell near the trap. On the third [illegible] round Brewer killed a good driver. Morfey drew a fast [illegible] missed it pretty clean. Brewer killed a fast driver [illegible] losing his. On the fortieth Brewer killed his, a [illegible] made a good kill of left-quarterer. Brewer killed [illegible] nicely; Morfey centered his, a dun driver. Brewer [illegible] driver, was a clean kill. Morfey's, a left driver, was [illegible]

Brewer's shooting was the best and cleanest; besides, he provided the hardest birds for his opponent. Morfey's defeat was a bad one, the worst he has ever suffered. In this style of shooting he seemed clearly outclassed. Mr. Brewer shot with great confidence, good judgment and almost without exception he was dead on his birds. His victory was among his easiest. COBWEBS VS. WEST NEWBURG

The Cobweb Gun Club met their victorious opponents in a previous match, the West Newburgs, on their grounds at West Farms, N. Y., on March 21, and more than evened up with them. The first match, at Newburg, resulted Newburg 83, Cobwebs 80. This, the second contest, resulted in favor of the Cobwebs by a score of 77 to 71.

Good fellowship prevailed througbout the match. The social features of gun clubs were never shown to better advantage than in the treatment of the visiting cluo by the Cobwebs. Meeting them in the forenoon a delightful breakfast was tendered to the Newburgers, after which they were escorted to the shooting grounds. At 1:30 p. m. the match was on, and for a while it seemed anybody's match, as the result, after 30 birds had been shot at by each side, was a tie. But after this the Cobwebs enveloped the Newburg boys in their web and gradually ran awsy with them, leading with six birds at the conclusion of the match. Some excellent kills were made throughout the match. Mr. Train's first kill with the second barrel was an excellent one, but his third bird, a hard right-quarterer, got away. Mr. Heudricks had hard luck in losing his third bird dead just out of bounds. Mr. Knapp won the applause of the crowd in bringing hard ones down with his second barrel in the fourth and ninth rounds. Mr. Pilkington lost a hard driver in his third round and a swift right quarteier in his tenth and last. McKeon showed the boys an excellent secoud on his fifth bird. White's kill of his fourth wss good. Mr. O'Dell was applauded heartily when he dropped his sixth bird, a fast right-quarteri.g driver Mr. Likely made a bad start, losing his first two birds, but he nailed the rest, getting surprises in two that dropped dead, almost, after flying for a while as if untouched. His third one was a fast one, well killed. Mr. Leuone is too careless for a team shooter, aud his work is likely to affect others of the team, puttlng them to a disadvantsge. His score was the lowest made on either side. He should have scored more as some scored lost were "easy" ones. Mr. Wood had hard luck in having two drivers in succession—his second and third birds—fall dead out of bounds. His judgment in sending a dog for his fourth bird was not good. Namesake Taylor lost two. The first one, his fourth bird, was a hard driver, and excusable, but he should have captured his next, the fifth one, which was not difficult. Mr. Halstead was far below his form and seemed to lose interest after the match was half over. Five out of ten is not his usual gait. His ninth, a twisting driver, would worry anyone. Dr. Horton scored well. He attends to business and only lost bis ninth, a lively driver, straightaway. He made an excellent kill with the second barrel in the eighth round, and the best one in the match on either side with his second barrel on his sixth bird, a scorcher. Close to this was Mr Dain's kill of his sixth bird. "Capt." Taggart won the applause of the crowd lu the way he captured his eighth bird with the second barrel when it seemed safe. Captain Higginson carried off the honors for the Newburg boys with the only straight, Mr. Knapp of the Cobwebs being the only straight for their side.

Sweepstake shootiug followed the regular match untll it was time to leave. We regret not being able to give an account of the entertainment tendered the visiting club in the evening—not being one of the "expected"—an oversight I presume—but we have no doubt it was in accordance with the well-known character of the Cobwebs, as they are particularly well known and a strong feature is their reputation for sociability.

The conditions of the match were ten men to each team, 10 birds each man, 28 yards rise, 50 yards boundary. A cold northeast wind blew across the traps from left to right. Mr. Jacob Pentz was referee; Mr. Brown of Newburg, scorer. Scores.

BOGARDUS—IRWIN

Last Thanksgiving Day "Tramp" Irwin went down to Springfield and there met and defeated Capt. Bogardus at his owu game—shooting live birds with a ten-yard circle around the trap. gun below the elbow, use of one barrel. Well, that day was a dismsl one, a dark, cloudy, rainy day, and the background for the shootiug was poor. Few of those present believed that on a fair day Irwin could ever again equal the score he then made. The crowd was large and hard to control, especially as the location of the ground was not such as to admit of shooting in front of the grand stand, and when Capt. Bogardus stopped only one bird out of the first three he shot at and Irwin followed in a like manner, disgust was plainly apparent upon the faces of those present. Here the missing ceased for a time. Bogardus then made eight kills straight, while Irwin lost his ninth bird, and the exhibition of one barrel killing was beginning to get quite interesting. At some place duriug the shooting of the first ten birds, Irwin changed from the right barrel to the left—the latter being full choke—and then did the birds "wilt" at the report of his nitro shells. It seemed that no matter what their line of flight, he caught them in the center every time and made the remarkable run of thirty-six straight kills, losing his forty-sixth bird, an easy right-quarteriug taller. Quite an interest was manifested in the great killing power of the gun snd powder "Tramp" was using.

Capt. Bogardus was not killing his birds dead, several being wioged only, aud he lost birds frequently that were apparently hit with a few pellets.

Mr. Irwin being of a generous disposition and having an extra case or two of shells, passed them over and begged the Captain to use them. Reluctantly the veteran placed a long green shell in his gun and called "pull." He sighted his gun and piessed the trigger in a mechanical way, and when he recovered from his surprise at seeing the bird drop, he exclaimed that he did not know the "blamed old thing went off." When his turn to shoot came again it took some more coaxing to get him to use the proffered shells; but finally he concluded he could not do worse with them than he had with his own, and he finished the race—his last sixteen birds—with the nitro shells. A glance at his score will show that every nitro shell grassed a bird. His own shells were loaded with black powder, with two wads, etc. Captain Bogardus won all his honors with black powder but he will now probably lay it on the shelf, as he expressed a desire to use in the future the latest style of ammunition, and on his next appearance in Peoria we expect to find him with a gun bored for nitro powder, the best nitro shell and best nitro powder.

Before the veteran left the city he challenged Mr. Irwin to shoot another match under like conditions, with the understanding that Irwin is to load and furnish the shells, put them in a bag and each draw one out as it comes his turn to shoot. This he thinks will better test the shooting qualities of the contestants. Irwin, of course, agreed, and another match will be shot soon.

Hon. Tom Marshall was chosen referee, Mr. Hubbell of Roanoke scorer, and W. B. Linell of Pontiac, trap puller.

Capt. Bogardus used [illegible] Smith gun, black powder, cheap [illegible] 10-gaide hammerless gun, and his [illegible] smokeless powder in Rapid shells, [illegible] chilled shot.

[illegible] one refusing to fly. There was [illegible] tering incomers. Caut. Bogardus [illegible] birds went straight out. As the birds have ten yards to get under full headway they are not as easy to stop as some who have not tried it may imagine. The scores:

THE PEORIA TOURNAMENT

PEORIA, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—As "Tramp" Irwin of this city had a couple of matches to shoot he thought it the proper thing to give the boys an opportunity to smash some Blackbirds, and a two days' shoot was arranged.

The weather was not good; starting in with a drizzle and continuing cold throughout both days it made the attendance smaller than it otherwise would have been.

Some of the prominent shooters present were Hon. Tom Marshall of Keithsburg, G. T. Hall of Loami, Ill., Mr. Gilbert of Philadelphia, W. B. Linell of Pontiac, Ill., Capt. A. H. Bogardus and his son of Lincoln, Ill., Dr. C. C. Manning of Tripoli, Ill., Frank Barr of Sparland, Ill., and a number of others. The scores made are given below.

SHOOT No. 1.—10 single Blackbirds, entrance 50 cents: Linell first, with 10; Gilbert, Hall and Irwin tied for second and Gilbert won in the shoot off.

SHOOT No. 2.—10 singles, entrauce $1: Linell first; "Tramp" second.

SHOOT No. 3.—10 singles, entrance $1: Giles first with 10; Irwin and Marshall second; Hall and Gilbert third.

SHOOT No. 4.—10 singles, entrance $1.20: Linell and Hall first money; Marshall second; Gilbert third.

SHOOT No. 5 —10 singles, entrance $1.20: "Tramp" first; Marshall second; Gilbert third.

SHOOT No. 6.—15 siugles, entrance $1.50: Marshall first, with 14; Hall and Gilbert second; Bruce third.

SHOOT No. 7.—10 singles, entrance $1 25: Marshall 8, Linell 10, Hall 8, Gilbert 8, Giles 4, Portman 7, Ohl 7, Hallock 7, Johnson 6, Irwin 6.

HALL—IRWIN

Live birds are hard to get and expensive, and it is with a degree of pleasure that I call the attention of the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD to this match.

There was quite a large gathering of spectators and the interest taken was surprisiugly great. It proved to be anybody's race up to the twenty-fifth round, for at that time "Tramp" was only one bird in the lead. Mr. Hall has defeated Capt. Bogardus twice under the latter's rules for shooting live pigeons and is a very good shot. But he went astray on his first ten in the last 25 in this match, and neither "Tramp" nor his many friends were at all nervous as to the outcome, for the last named kept "pegging" away and finished the race with four to the good, having lost but three birds out of each twenty-five.

Henry Bogardus was chosen referee, and Mr. Pool scorer.

Mr. Hall used a fine 12-gauge Wilkesbarre gun, loaded with 3¼ drams of E. C. powder and No. 7 chilled shot. Mr. Irwin shot a Parker. His loads were Du Pont smokeless powder in Rapid shells and No. 8 chilled shot. The scores:

TERRY VS. BATSCH

A pigeon match between Plainfield and Elizabeth shooters invariably draws a large audience, owing to a good-natured rivalry that has existed for years between the shooters of these towns; and the match announced to take place at Elizabeth, N. J., on Saturday of last week was no exception, fully 200 spectators being on haud, who were rewarded for their time hy seeing a close aud exciting match. The principals were Dan Terry, of the Climax Gun Club of Plainfield, and Frank Batsch of Elizabeth. The birds were a good lot.

Mr. Batsch's run of 25 straight was a clever exhibition and under ordinary circumstances would have won, as it gave him a lead of three. Mr. Terry, after losiug two in his first five, steadied down, and with the "luck of the birds" dead against him, kept on killing good or bad—it seemed to make no difference, until he had tied the score. His superior work told on his opponent and he won an uphill race, which stamps him as a shooter of rare good nerve.

The match was at 50 live birds per man for $100 a side, American Shooting Association rules to govern. Mr. T. H. Keller was chosen referee, Mr. W. Parker scorer, Mr. W. Squire trap-puller. Scores:

Terry.....0121012121 2211121211 2211*21211 221222*211 1222222212—46
Batsch .....1112111212 1221212122 2222202122 0122*2*222 2*22210221—44

Mr. Terry shot an L. C. Smith hammerless gun, 48 grains of E. C. powder, 1¼ ounces No. 7 aud No. 6 chilled shot in Rapid cases.

Mr. Batsch used a Parker hammerless gun, 49 grains E. C. powder, 1¼ ounces No. 7 chilled shot in Smokeless cases.

At the conclusion of the above match miss and out sweepstakes were shot until the birds on hand were all used up, when crows were substituted. The scores made in the sweeps follow:

EVENT No. 1.—Miss and out at crows: T. H. Keller 5, N. Apgar 5.

EVENT No. 2.—Miss and out at crows, $2 entrance: Apgar 14, Hassinger 14, Keller 12, Trowbridge 9, Perment 5, W. Canou 4.

EVENT No. 3.—Miss and out at pigeons, $2 entrance: Keller 3, Apgar 3, Woodruff 3, C. M. Hedden 2, Canon 1, J. Lindzey 0, W. Hollis 0, Hassinger 0.

IDLE HOUR GUN CLUB

The anniversary shoot of this Brooklyn club and its annual meeting for the election of officers were held at Dexter Park, on March 18. An agreeable surprise was the presentation to the club of three beautiful medals. The gold one, presented by the president, Mr. Henry Hoffmann, was adopted as the club badge medal, to be worn for the month by any member winning it in the monthly competition. Another gold bsdge, presented by Mr. Elfers, the treasurer of the club, goes on similar conditious to the second best shot. Mr. Pyne, an honorary member, presented a handsome silver badge as third prize.

In the first competition, it being too late to finish the ties by shooting, it was decided by drawing, with following results: George H. Helmstedt first prize; C. Coors second; Chris Lakemsn third. A good dinner was enjoyed by all before the shooting began.

The followiug officers were elected: President, Henry Hoffmann; vice-president, Wm. H. Burrows; treasurer, J. F. C. Elfers; secretary, Christopher Lakeman; captain, John Bamberger.

The scores made were as follows:

EVENT No. 1.—Handicap sweepstake, 3 live birds: John Bamberger, 25 yards, 3; P. J. H. Meyers, 23 yards, 3; Henry Hoffmann, 25 yards, 2; J. F. C Elfers, 25 yards, 2; Christopher Lakeman, 25 yards, 1; George H. Helmstedt, 23 yards, 1.

EVENT No. 2.—Club competition, 7 live birds: Henry Hoffmann, 23 yards, 4; William H. Schmidt, 23 yards, 4; Henry A. Meyn, 23 yards, 3; Henry J. Boemerman, 25 yards, 4; William K. Burrows, 23 yards, 2; Christopher Lakeman, 25 yards, 5; George H. Helmstedt, 23 yards, 5; Herman Wilshusen, 23 yards, 3; C Coors, 25 yards, 5; John H. Bamberger, 25 yards, 2; J. F. C. SCOTT HAMMERLESS.

HOWERTH—DE MUTH

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—One of the most interesting matches shot in this section of the country lately took place on March 16 under the auspices of the Old Mill Rod and Gun Club at its grounds on the borders of Jamaica Bay.

The contestants were Samuel Howerth, formerly of Denton, Eug., and Colonel De Muth, of Dsnbury, Conn.

The match was for a purse of $25, put up by the admirers of these gentlemen. The terms of the contest were: Each man to shoot at 25 Blue Rock targets, to fire at five alternately, the man breaking the most birds to take the purse; in case of a tie to continue until a miss.

Mr. Howerth was coached by Mr. John Blake of Brooklyn, and Mr. De Muth by Mr. John Hardy of Norwalk, Conn. The shoot resulted in the following scores being made: Howerth 24, De Muth 18.

A large number of the friends of the contestants attended the shoot. They were conveyed from the railroad station in stages, and after the match repaired to Kaiser's Hotel, where mine host served a bountiful repast to the hungry and jolly crowd.

When the cigars were lighted Mr. Fred Brown rendered some of his bass solos, among them Brown October Ale and The Village Blacksmith. Mr. Gus Eck wound up the day aud evening jollification with a stirring address, with a mixture of wit and solidity, asking his hearers to encourage healthy and honest sports.

The stsges were in waiting, and the already tired sportsmen climbed into them and were soou on their way home, and as they rolled along Mr. Howerth was heard to say "this is not the last you will hear from me."

LIVE BIRD SHOOTING AT YARDVILLE

The handicap match at Yardville, N. J., March 21, under the management of that clever gentleman and good shot, Charlie Zwirlein, drew out a fair lot of sportsmen, among them such cracks as Elliot , Brewer, and Class. Elliott seemed in bard luck and Zwirlein, though killing all his birds, was unfortunate in losing two dead out of bounds. Brewer killed all his, losing one dead outside. The weather was charming overhead, but a chilly wind was blowiug. Excellent birds were provided. The conditions were 25 birds per man, $10 entrance, birds at 25 cents each, extra, three moneys. After the regular match two sweeps were shot. The result:

CALHOUN—WILKINSON

WEIR CITY, KAN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—A very interesting live bird match took place here recently between C. H. Calhoun and Joseph Wilkinson. The race was at 25 birds each, American Shooting Association rules—except that only one barrel was allowed—for $150 a side. Mr. Calhoun's shooting was of the phenomenal order, as the birds were all hard ones, having been trained especially for the match by Mr. Wilkinson, who is a fine bird handler. Mr. Wilkinson was the favorite before the match commenced, and as "Cal" lost his first bird, clean missed, its eemed almost a cluch for the Wilkinson side. Except his twentieth bird, which was also clean missed, Mr. Calhoun killed out straight, though he had the misfortuue to lose his seventh and fourteenth dead just over the flags. Mr. McIlhany, Mr. Calhoun's running mate, was an able second to the winner during the match, while the efforts of Mr. Wilkinson's brother in his behalf proved sufficient only to goad the loser to a 60 per cent. galt. Mr. Calhoun shot a Greener gun and E. C. powder. Below are the scores.

Calhoun	0111111*11 111*111110 11111—21

HOOK.

OUTWATER VS. JOHNSON

Mr. J. H. Outwater of Moonachie, N. J., an old-time shot, or one who likes to shoot under the old-time rules, gun below the elbow, had rather an easy time in defeating his opponent, Mr. Adrain Johnson of North Bergen, N. J., on the grounds of the Union Hill Gun Club at Guttenburg, on March 19 The conditions were 50 birds each, 26 yards rise, gun below the elbow until bird was on the wing, use of both barrels, for $100 a side. At the forty-third bird the match was over, as Mr. Johnson was shot out. A fair crowd assembled to see the match. The birds were a good lot and were assisted in their flight by a strong wind. A number of fine kills were made by both men. Several birds fell dead out of bounds. Mr. Outwater did the best work with the first barrel. The scores:

WILMERDING, PA.—Inclosed I send you the scores made by members of the Wilmerding Gun Club on March 16. The day was not a favorable one for shooting Blue Rocks as a snowstorm prevailed during the entire afternoon; but the storm did not prevent us shooting; neither did it spoil the scores of all the shooters. The events below show what was done.

EVENT No. 1.—Team contest, 50 single targets per man, three men to each team.

EVENT No. 4.—10 targets: J. McIntosh 4, W. Sharrard 8, F. McIntosh 6, D. Scott 6, S. Bishop 4, J. Gelm 10, D. Boyd 6.

EVENT No. 5.—Same again: D. Boyd 7, Scott 3, J. Gelm 7, F. McIntosh 6, F. Hepting 4.

The club has received an invitation from the Wilmerding Athletic Association to shoot at McKeesport grove on Decoration Day, and has accepted same. The Athletic Association will hold an all-day shoot on that day.

Four members of the Wilmerding Gun Club met on the private grounds of Mr. J. S. McIntosh, on Saturday, March 16, and shot a two-man team race at live birds, each man shooting at 25 birds. The birds were a very good lot, speedy and strong on wing. The work of Mr. John Brant's English setter, Art, was very fine, and was praised by all present. The scores follow:

A. A. M.

BURNSIDE, ILL.—Scores as given below have been made here since March 12, the members of the Chicago Shooting Club having their regular club shoot on that day, each man shooting at 15 single live pigeons with bird allowance to the weaker members. The scores:

	Birds allowed		Birds allowed
Hamline	3..221120222112200—15	Eich	2..102122012121101—14
Bingham	1..221120222222122—15	Ehlers	1..121110112122221—15
Stone	1..220211212221121—15

The four that tied on 15 agreed to shoot the tie off at the original number of birds and same allowance: Hamline and Ehlers each again scored 15. Bingham missed his twelfth and thirteenth birds and withdrew. Stone missed his fourth and fifth bird and he also withdrew. Hamline and Ehlers shot at 15 more each, the former holding a two-bird handicap over the latter. The second tie shot off resulted as follows: Hamline, with allowance, 14; Ehlers, with allowance, 12.

On March 13, Messrs. Geo. Sibley and A. W. Reeves, members of the South Chicago Gun Club, were the only ones present for the club contest. The first contest was at 20 live birds Reeves scored 17, Sibley 10. They then shot at 30 single Empire targets. Reeves scoring 22, Sibley 18.

On March 20 the Audubon Gun Club members were present in goodly number and shot the regular club event at 15 live birds per man, bird allowance, with the following results:

	Birds allowed		Birds allowed
Gray	4..020000001000220—8	Parker	2 200112121022112-14
Hamline	3..022001212212211-15	Wilcox	3..022210221010210-13

MARINETTE, WIS.—Inclosed please find scores made by members of the Marinette Gun Club at their last regular shoot. We had as visitors five members of the Menominee Club, lately organized in our sister city, and as the reader will see, they outshot our best men. But I think the ammunition used by them had much to do with the result, they using high grade smokeless powder while we used black powder entirely and medium loads at that. Some of our members have not attended more than two or three shoots since we organized, which accounts for the poor scores made. Each man shot at 25 single targets.

EVENT No. 5.—10 live birds, $5 entrance: Geoffroy 9, Apgar 8, Woodruff 8, Ross 7, Folsom 5.

UNKNOWN.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.—On March 13 four members of the San Antonio Gun Club held a very pleasant shoot at the club's grounds. The day was an elegant one, and everything worked to perfection. The live birds flew well, and the target traps worked to suit the largest kicker on the face of the earth. The scores are not as large as they should be, but it being the first time this season that the boys had had any of this kind of shooting they are pretty fair. Mr. Samuels was disgusted with his score on live birds and at the first ten targets and concluded it was time for him to pick up and try and do better, which the reader will notice he did. The scores:

Answers to Correspondents

We are willing always to answer any question that we can answer, and prescribe for dogs or other animals in these columns, but we cannot answer questions or prescribe by mail. In all instances where it is necessary that a sick animal should be prescribed for by mail, we refer the owner to Professor R. J. Withers, No. 627 South Main Street, Los Angeles, Cal., to whom one dollar must be inclosed to pay for his services.

KENNEL

R. T., Milwaukee, Wis.—Ans.—We regret that we cannot give you the information, but none of them are registered. We find some of them in the pedigrees of other dogs, that are registered, but in no instance are the particulars you desire given. Thus, in the pedigree of Highland Heather Nell (31314), the stud book says, "by Heather Grouse out of Heather Fly, by Heather Bonnie out of Rose, by Dash III—Liz; Heather Bonnie, by Heather Bounce out of Heather Gem," but no information is furnished concerning Liz, Heather Bounce and Heather Gem (three of the dogs in your list).

G. B. W., Lynn, Mass.—Ans.—(1) We cannot find any pointer bitch of that name in Vol. III; 4026 is the pointer dog Banjo. (2) Flake (1214), the sire of Beulah (1286), was by Dr. Strachan's Flash (Sir Frederick Bruce's George—Gen. Webb's Peg) out of Mr. Schiefelin's Juno, by the Marquis of Westminster's Ponto. (3) Lily (3067), the dam of Beulah, was by Sam (Morgan—Fanny) out of Lily. We have given you all the information furnished by the stud book about these two pointers. (4) Mr. Pilkington's Young Jilt (E. 11363) was by Mars (E. 914) out of Lord Sefton's Jilt.

H. L. JR., Columbus, O.—Ans.—Foxhounds vary a few inches in height. You do not say whether yours is of the English or American type. The standard adopted by the N. F. H. Association recommends that a dog hound should not be over 24 inches in height; nevertheless there is nothing to hinder you from showing a hound of 25 inches as an American foxhound. At most shows separate classes are provided for English and American hounds; but if only one class is provided, all that is necessary is to enter your hound simply as a foxhound.

E. H., Long Branch, N. J.—Ans.—Elkwood Kate (28218) is by King of Kent (6264) out of Spinaway IV (28217). King of Kent is by Priam (E. 8121) out of Kents' Baby, by Mr. Statter's Pax (Faust—Statter's Patch) out of Climax (Champion Bang—Juno). Spinaway IV is by Lad of Bow (7880) out of Spinaway III (8071); Lad of Bow, by Champion Graphic (E 13366) out of Climax (E. 20217); Spinaway III, by Champion Naso of Kippen (5552) out of Spinaway (5610).

A. M. P., Stakesdale, N. C.—Ans.—(1) He is owned by Mr. George Jarvis, 1015 Washington Avenue, New York. (2) He is by Bracket out of Renie. (3) You will find a full list of his winnings printed in the catalog of the Westminster Kennel Club's show held in New York just recently; you can get one (price 30 cents) from Mr. Jas. Mortimer, Hempstead Farm, Long Island, N. Y.

READER, Des Moines, Ia.—Ans.—(1) Scout (1777), by Rock (232) out of Kirby (419). (2) Tempest (1799), by Pontiac out of Fairy II (354); Pontiac, by Pride of the Border (191) out of Petrel (472). (3) Gazelle (1998), by Druid (95) out of Jolly May (2028). (4) Lilly (2070) by Carlowitz (45) out of Princess Nelly (no pedigree given). (5) May B and Lady S are not registered.

J. J. R., Battle Creek, Mich.—Ans.—Give three grains of iodide of potash three times daily, for six consecutive days; also, give four drops of Fowler's Solution three times daily, for four consecutive days; on the seventh day increase the dose one drop, increasing one drop daily until twenty drops are given, then decrease in the same ratio.

F., St. Louis, Mo.—Ans.—From your description we think it is chorea; for six consecutive days give five grains of the iodide of potash three times daily, and six drops of Fowler's Solution; after the sixth day increase the dose of Fowler's Solution one drop daily until thirty drops are given at each and every dose, then decrease in the same ratio.

CONSTANT READER, Des Moines, Ia.—Ans.—(1) Gazelle (1998), by Druid (98) out of Jolly May (2028). (2) Not registered. (3) Tempest (1799), by Pontiac out of Fairy II (354); Pontiac, by Pride of the Border (191) out of Petrel) (472). (4) Lilly (2070); by Carlowitz (45) out of Princess Nelly (no pedigree given).

G. W. W., New London, Wis.—Ans.—It is probably caused by internal parasites. After a fast of eighteen hours give her one and one half grains of powdered areca nut to the pound weight of the dog, following it in one hour with two ounces of castor-oil; repeat treatment in ten days.

W. W. G., Manistee, Mich.—Ans.—(1) Stipendiary (E. 33343). (2) Shindy, not registered in the English Kennel Club's Stud Book. (3) Dane Verity (E. 15866). (4) Fairy III (E. 15870). (5) Walkley Nettle is not registered, unless in Vol. XXI, which we have not received yet.

W. S. McC., Galva, Ill.—Ans.—By referring to the registration of Champion Brautford Red Jacket in Vol. VI we find that Toronto Jet was by Nigger out of Belle, and that Tippo's sire and dam were from the Earl of Morley's kennel. No further information is given about them.

H. O. B., Springfield, Mo.—Ans.—(1) Ruby Furness, Bramble, Felicity and Nixey are not registered. (2) As dogs are arranged alphabetically, and not in numerical rotation, we cannot locate her. (3) No, there is no breed of dog named Calmarine.

W. F. B. Co., Woodland, Pa.—Ans.—Feed raw eggs whipped in milk; do not allow any solid food to be eaten; after [illegible] give four grains of goldeuscale pepsin, also give three grains of [illegible] rate of iron and quinine three times daily.

G. P. H. R., Vicksburg, Miss.—Ans.—Glaucoma; [illegible] you much encouragement as to the result of treatment. [illegible] grains of physostigmine and four drams of distilled water [illegible] drop some into the eye five times daily.

E. B. A., North Yakima, Wash.—Ans.—Previous to her coming in season reduce her in flesh; do not breed her until she is ready to go [illegible] give two ounces of castor-oil for three consecutive [illegible] previous to breeding.

O. [illegible] Ans.—After a fast of eighteen hours give [illegible] powdered areca nut to the pound weight [illegible] one hour with one ounce of castor-oil; [illegible]

[illegible] Aus.—(1) Should have three hours a [illegible] at night. Feed no sweetmeats. (3) No. For six [illegible] mornings give ten drops of the fluid extract of pinkroot and senna.

H. E. McC., Chicago.—Ans.—Tie her where she can see horses and vehicles constantly passing; also do all you can by kindness and gentle coaxing; never speak harshly or impatiently while handling her on the street.

G. A. S., Altoona, Pa.—Ans.—Goiter; for six consecutive mornings give one ounce of castor-oil and thirty drops of cascara segrada; apply tincture of iodine to the swelling until it is reduced.

S. W. V., Colorado Springs.—Ans.—Clip off with sharp shears those that stand high enough, and then touch the spots with lunar caustic; apply strong acetic acid to the others once daily.

A. B. K., Cambridge, O.—Ans.—(1) Bob Gates (7127) is by Count Rapier (5007) out of Belle of Hatchie (3568). (2) Nannie Gladstone (3773) is by Gladstone (113) out of Sue (2222).

J. F. D., Sharpsburg, Pa.—Ans.—The catalog gives her breeding "by Berry—Ruby." As she is not registered we cannot give you any further information.

J. M., Jersey City, N. J.—Ans.—Apply the tincture of iodine, nothing more or less, either by dropping, pouring, or with a camel's hair brush.

E. L. K., Wilkesbarre, Pa.—Ans.—He used to live in Chicago, but dropped out of the fancy three or four years ago; we do not know his present address.

A. B., Boston, Mass.—Ans.—You have not pursued treatment long enough to get beneficial effects; apply soap liniment to the limb twice daily.

Climax, Lowell, Mass.—Ans.—Cleanse the ears with lukewarm water, and apply the tincture of iodine daily; continue your present treatment.

P. H. C., Union Springs, Ala.—Ans.—Take oil of tar four ounces, crude petroleum two ounces, fishoil one pint; mix and apply daily.

J. H., Denver, Colo.—Ans.—Repeat the treatment for worms and afterward give four drops of Fowler's Solution three times daily.

C. J. P., Scituate, Mass.—Ans.—(1) We would advise leaving one puppy until the mother weans it. (2) Three weeks.

W. C., Tiffin, O.—Ans.—Follow advice given in this issue to E. E. A., Canton, O., but give two ounces of castor-oil.

A. L. C., Clay Center, Kan.—Ans.—Spinaway IV (28217) is by Lad of Bow (7880) out of Spinaway III (8071).

J. M., Detroit, Mich.—Ans.—Cleanse the ears with lukewarm water and use tincture of iodine daily.

Hard Tack, St. Louis, Mo.—Ans.—We cannot devote the time necessary to compile such a list.

J. L., Victoria, Tex.—Ans.—Follow advice given in this issue to G. W. W., New London, Wis.

T. J. D., Providence, R. I.—Ans.—Dash B (15161) is by Premier (5047) out of Blaze (5702).

R. H. M., Tuskegee, Ala.—Ans.—Umbilical hernia; she will probably outgrow it.

S. O., Philadelphia.—Ans.—We cannot find any winnings to her credit.

D. C. D., Wheeling, W. Va.—Ans.—(1) Yes. (2) None whatever.

W. N., Paterson, N. J.—Ans.—Neither one is registered.

E. C., Seldeu, O.—Ans.—Not registered.

TRAP

Daniel Boone, Sandusky, O.—Ans.—(1) Your criticism is proper. We overlooked the section in the rules you refer to. (2) As there is no provision made in the American Shooting Association's rules for unknown angles, our reply was based solely on experience in club contests where unknown angles are used extensively, and where a target thrown at any angle except back of the screen (if of proper height) is regarded a fair target. The letter you quote is not particularly strong authority, as the organization the gentleman represents made no provision for unknown angles; and if the angles were confined to the radius mentioned (six feet in the extreme) they might as well be known angles so far as making difficult shooting is concerned. (3) At Knoxville any angle outside the base line of the traps will prevail. We cannot say what rule the Cleveland management will adopt.

A. B. M., Newark, N. J.—Shooting live birds a shooter went to the score, called "pull," the trap was opened, but the bird did not take wing. A man went out and flushed the bird, the shooter fired his first barrel and missed, the bird then swung round and flew in between the shooter and the man who had gone out to flush it, so that the shooter could not fire at the bird without endangering the man. The shooter therefore did not use his second barrel but declared "no bird," and the referee allowed him another bird and the use of both barrels. Was this right? Ans.—The decision of the referee was correct. Most rules make provision for such instances. Rule 27, American Shooting Association rules governing live bird shooting reads: "If a bird shall fly so that to shoot at it would endanger any person or property, it shall not be shot at, and the referee shall allow another bird."

MISCELLANEOUS

Reader, Muskegon, Mich.—Will you please give me a description of a sleeping-bag? Ans.—The outer bag is made of heavy, brown, waterproof canvas six feet long, two feet wide at the head, three feet wide in the center, and sixteen inches wide at the foot. From the center, or widest part, it should taper to the head and foot to the dimensions above given. This gives it very much the shape of the ordinary coffin. Above the head of the bag proper flaps should project a foot farther, with which the occupant's head can be covered entirely, if desired. These flaps should be provided with buttons and button holes, so that they can be buttoned clear across in very stormy weather. The bag should be left open from the head down, on one edge, at least two feet, and this opening provided with a flap, with button holes in it, to lap over and button onto the bag, buttons being placed on the bag for this purpose. Inside of this bag place another bag of the same shape, only a size smaller and minus the head and side flaps, made of sheepskin with the wool on, covered with ordinary domestic, to prevent the wool coming in direct contact with the clothing. With this one should have a couple of good woolen blankets for use in very cold weather. They can be folded and placed in the bag and used as needed, and when not needed for covering they can be placed on the inner bag and make one's bed that much pleasanter to lie on. A sleeping bag of this description will make one comfortable in the coldest or stormiest weather, as one can button himself up in it completely, with the exception of an opening large enough to permit him to get what air he requires. It is a great luxury in a camp in severe weather, and once used will never be left at home when an extensive hunt is to be taken in a cold climate.

Club Elections

Club Elections.—Secretaries and other officers of clubs not having previously done so will confer a favor by sending us the names of all such organizations, with a list of the officers elected for the current year.

At a recent meeting of the Carleton (Mich.) Rifle Association the following gentlemen were elected officers for the ensuing year: President, Edward E. Flint; first vice-president, John H. Cole; second vice president, George Post; secretary, Dr. O. J. Fay; treasurer, Thomas E. Allen; trustees, F. L. Edwards, Charles Edwards, Lewis Richards, Alvah Storey, Col. H. Information Wanted

In answer to A. H. W., Theresa, Wis., relative to the Ithaca 10-gauge gun, I will say that with one of them I won a silver badge and second average at Parsons, Kan., against a field of fifteen shooters, they using Lefever, L. C. Smith and many good foreign-made guns, and at Pryor Creek, Indian Territory, in the Autumn of 1890, I killed teal and mallard ducks at a distance of thirteen measured rods with a 7-pound 6-ounce 10-gauge Ithaca hammerless, using at no time more than 3¼ drams of black powder and at the trap only 3½ drams. There are to-day no poor American-made guns, but sportsmen have a right to have a favorite. The Ithaca Gun Co. is composed of gentlemen. I know the men personally, and their word or guarantee is above question.

Binghamton, N. Y. Frank E. Fuller.

Will not some fellow-reader of the American Field, who is familiar with the black bass fishing on the Potomac River, kindly answer through its columns the following questions? (1) What are the best locations for early bass fishing? (2) When can bass be legally taken in Maryland and Virginia? (3) If possible give name of a moderate priced hotel or private house where three or four ardent fishermen can spend a week or ten days in comfort at a moderate rate. The writer remembers several articles on fishing in this river for bass, which appeared several years ago, but not retaining a file, am now unable to refer to them. Any information regarding the best season, bait, routes, etc., will be greatly appreciated.

Cresson, Pa. Fisherman.

I shall be much obliged if any reader of the American Field having a knowledge of the subject would kindly inform me through these columns where really good woodcock shooting is to be had in the United States. I have enjoyed this most fascinating sport in many parts of the world, but hitherto have not been so fortunate as even to see a woodcock in the States. Any information as to the open season, hunting license required (if any), railway route and hotel accommodations, will be most welcome.

Kansas City, Mo. W. Hope.

Will some brother sportsman please inform me, through the columns of the American Field, what seed or food is best for enticing rallbirds and when to plant it along salt marsh ditches?

Philadelphia, Pa. F. G. W.

Rex, Grand Rapids, Mich.—Send us your full name and post office address. Letter in office for you.

Amusements

Schiller Theater.—Kellar, the man of marvels and mystery, is making an immensely popular hit. With the exception of two or three of his world renowned exploits, retained at the popular desire, his performance this season is entirely new and far surpasses anything he has ever given the public. Kellar not only amuses, he interests and instructs, and the principal features of his present entertainment are so extraordinary as to baffle the investigation and defy the explanation of even celebrated scientific experts like Professor Heinrich Hensoldt, who confessed that the Hindoo performances now given by Kellar completely confound all merely human theories of explanation. Kellar has for years made a special study of these celebrated Hindoo and Thibetean mysteries and illusions, and has traveled long and extensively in India and Thibet for the purpose. This season he gives them in a group: "The Mystic Light of Bala," "The Mystery of l'Hassa" and the "Shrine of Koomra Samt." The extraordinary public interest in the hypnotizing of Trilby has induced Kellar to reveal and illustrate the profound mysteries of hypnotism in an extraordinary performance called "The Levitation of the Human Body." Kellar is assisted by Mrs. Kellar, herself a proficient magician and one of most skillful and charming women of the time.

Columbia Theater.—Charles T. Dazey's new drama, "The War of Wealth."—which was produced first in Philadelphia—under the management of Jacob Litt, with elaborate scenery painted by John H. Young and E. G. Mint of New York. "The War of Wealth" has made a grand success, and bids fair to outrank in public favor Mr. Dazey's racing melodrama, "In Old Kentucky." Next week, direct from Palmer's Theater, New York, "The Fatal Card," by Haddon Chambers and B. C. Stephenson, with the original company, original scenery and effects.

Royal English Winter Circus and German Water Carnival.—The greatest show in Chicago; two performances daily; new features every week. See the great Severus Schaffer; first appearance of the young equilibrist Dadigo, from Europe; first week of the Braatz Sisters; see the Akimoto troupe of Japanese acrobats, and all the other star specialists. Next week the unique and wonderful aerial ballet will be produced.

McVicker's Theater.—The German Lilliputians in "Humpty Dumpty Up to Date," first production in Chicago. A fanciful story interpreted by amusing and interesting little people.

Haymarket Theater.—"In Old Kentucky." Another great hit, the greatest of the season. Next week—Wm. Barry in "The Rising Generation."

Grand Opera House.—The favorite Bostonians in Smith & De Koven's charming opera, "Robin Hood." Next week—"Maid of Plymouth."

Chicago Opera House.—Mr. Francis Wilson, continued engagement in "The Devil's Deputy." Matinee Saturday only.

Madison Street Opera House.—"On the Midway"—"My Uncle." Two big shows daily.

Alhambra Theater.—"Duffy's Blunders." Next week—Morrison's "Faust."

The Lincoln.—"Men and Women." Next week—Hallen & Hart.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS

Advertisers are respectfully requested to observe the following rules governing the insertion of advertisements in these columns:

CLASSIFICATION.—Strictly kennel advertisements—those which relate exclusively to dogs and to nothing else—cannot be placed under headings of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange," but are subject to classification only under their proper kennel headings. When two or more breeds of dogs are mentioned in one advertisement, it destroys the possibility of giving it a distinctive heading and it is therefore classified under "Miscellaneous." For this reason it is well to advertise each breed separately.

If stud notices are included in advertisements of dogs for sale the classification given will be "Miscellaneous." Stud notices should be separate and distinct from other advertisements so as not to conflict with proper classification.

The departments of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" are reserved for advertisements relating in some way to sportsmen's goods or other articles of merchandise.

RATES.—The rate for advertisements under 'Wanted," "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" is 3 cents per word each insertion. The name, address, initials and abbreviations are included and count as words.

The rate for advertisements under kennel headings is 25 cents per line for the first insertion, and 15 cents for each additional consecutive insertion. Estimate seven words to a line unless the words are unusually long. If display type is used the rate is $3.50 per inch for the first insertion and $2.50 per inch for each additional consecutive insertion. Special rates are given for displayed advertisements running three months or longer. Schedule will be mailed on application.

Remittances to cover full cost should invariably accompany advertisements. If too much is remitted we will refund you what is overpaid.

Advertisers will favor us greatly by writing their advertisements plainly, using separate sheets of paper. Copy should reach us by Tuesday of each week to insure insertion in that week's issue.

COUNT BEAUFORT

Moss Wind'em—Primrose, bred by and recently imported from Mr. R. Ll. Purcell Llewellin, Shrewsbury, England. Here is a chance for setter breeders to obtain the pure Count Noble blood, Moss Wind'em being a litter brother to that noted sire of field trial winners. This is an opportunity that owners of Gladstone and Druid—Ruby bitches should not lose sight of. Fee $25. Count Beaufort is a handsome, well built blue belton and is thoroughly field broken, keen nose and wide range, having been well shot over by Mr. Llewellin. For pedigree, etc., address W. KENNEL SECRETS

How to Breed, Exhibit and Manage Dogs.

BY ASHMONT.

The dog from the time he is conceived to the time he curls himself up for the last long sleep is treated from every standpoint that could possibly occur to a man of wide experience with dogs.

Every important subject that has engaged attentiou has been fully discussed, generalities beiug held practically vaiueless and misleading.

Nature's apparent methods, effects and requirements have heen dwelt upon at considerable length with a purpose of protecting the kennel from druggiug, so far as may be, and displacing the common tendency to it by reliance on hygienic and dietetic agencies. The book contains numerous fine illustrations of dogs of all classes and portraits of well-known men in the kennel world. 344 pages.

GUN CLUB SCORE BOOK

Surpasses anything of its kind ever issued. It has, in addition to 150 score sheets, correct and complete copies of American Shooting Association Rules for Live Bird and Inanimate Target Shooting, also Hurlingham and Long Island Rules which will be found very convenient for ready reference. Further, it contains a proper form of Constitution and By-Laws (that may be used as a guide in organizing a club), also a set of Field and Club House Rules. Carbon paper for manifolding purposes is inclosed in each book. It is so bound that when in use the top cover may be thrown back and under the book, making a solid base on which to write.

Owing to the immense advantage we have in compiling and pushing the sale of this book we are able to offer it at only $1.00 per copy, but at this price our margin of profit is too small to admit of discounts on large lots or to dealers. Bear in mind it contains 150 score sheets, besides additional matter as detailed above. Size of book, 9x12 inches. Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

NEW EDITION.

Lancaster's Famous Book,

THE ART OF SHOOTING.

LONDON, FOURTH EDITION, 1892. PRICE $3.00.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

At the special request of many gentlemen who have placed themselves in my hands for instruction in the Art of Shooting, I have written this treatise. I have endeavored to meet the special requirements of those who are anxious to become proficient in the art, and who have hitherto been unable to obtain, in a precise form, the information necessary for studying the first principles of shooting at moving objects.

I have had the honor of coaching many gentlemen, and have carefully studied the points especially requiring attention that have cropped up from time to time while giving instruction. I hope that those who favor me by studying this treatise may quickly gain the knowledge so essential for the making of an average if not a brilliant shot.

I have purposely refrained from touching on the several merits of any class of gun—being a gunmaker myself; and, indeed, so many good works on the subject have been written, that it is really unnecessary.

I trust that authors from whose writings I have made extracts will pardon me when they recollect that I have at heart one object, viz., the advancement of a manly sport which gives pleasure, health and occupation to many, and to the patronage of whose followers I am indebted for many pleasant days.

A GRIZZLY BEAR HUNT

BY A. E. DE RICQLES

Did you ever kill a big bear? I do not mean the ordinary, little, runty, black fellows found in Michigan or Wisconsin pine woods, nor the small brown bear that a .38-caliber ball turns over and silences forever. There is a good deal of sport, no doubt, hunting them, but I speak more of the silver tip, and the king of America's wild animals, the Rocky Mountain grizzly, the only wild animal on the continent that will not give the road, or right of way, at the approach of a man, and an animal that can hunt you more successfully than you can hunt him.

I have always loved hunting from the time I was a small boy, when along the Little Miami River, in Ohio, there used to be some good quail shooting, a few ducks, and once in a while by great good fortune I was able to push my old muzzle-loader through the brush and bring down a wild goose.

Here in Utah there is a world of shooting, if one has the time to enjoy it, and knows where to go. All the water-fowls, mountain grouse, sagehens and rabbits. Then there is big game, antelopes, blacktail deer, bears, mountain lions, two of which were killed last Winter within the city limits of Salt Lake City, and the gray wolf and a mountain sheep once in a great while.

As I write, memory recalls some specially pleasant day passed up in the quaking aspen timber after deer, when we came back to camp with the horses laden with our trophies, or some red letter, stormy day passed at Provo Lake, when the ducks were moving and kept piling into the little creek, and my partner, George H. Tousey, of Chicago, and I, one on each side, kept banging away until the guns got too hot to use. I have not yet had any other experiences in life half so dear as my field days.

But it was about a big bear I was going to tell you, and I fear this story will seem at first like Hamlet without a Hamlet. In Emery County, Utah, there is a high plateau country, very wild and broken. On the north, the Uintah Indian reservation; on the east, the Green River, a main arm of the Colorado; on the west and south, a desert country. The Tavaputs Plateau is the particular location in question. The way to get there is from Price, or Sunnyside, little stations on the Rio Grande Western Railway, and from these points by saddle horses, fifty or sixty miles. This plateau is used as a Summer grazing ground for cattle by several companies. There are only three or four outfits up there and only the cowboys know the way down from the top of these plateaus.

Last Fall I had occasion to go over to one of these cattle camps on some business, and knowing the country, of course took my .50-95 express Winchester along. A couple of the boys met me at Sunnyside at midnight with horses, and at 3 o'clock in the morning we started on our fifty-mile ride. I might write a long account of how beautiful the stars and moon looked that night, how the broken cliffs and rocks assumed strange shapes, but I would rather leave you to imagine all of that, and how surpassingly lovely it all was, how mysterious and weird we three looked—all armed, and wearing leather jackets, riding single file through one of the wildest and roughest sections of the Rocky Mountain country. It took us eight hours to make the trip, and I tell you we were hungry when we reached camp.

That afternoon the foreman of the outfit, whom I well knew, and I rode over to one of the neighbor's camps—Lunt's place—about fifteen miles distant. The country, when one reaches the top of these plateaus, is rolling, covered with bunch grass, groves of tall pine and quaking aspen trees, and patches of oak brush and wild rose briers. The south exposure of the cañons is covered with thickets so dense as to seem almost impenetrable. I had left my own gun at camp, but carried one of the boys' guns, a .44 Winchester. Going over we did no hunting. On our return Billy, my companion, said:

"De, I think if we ride over this hill to that grove, we can get a deer, as they stay there."

It was only about a mile out of our way, and venison for supper was worth going after.

When nearing the timber in question I discovered a three-pronged buck quietly feeding among the trees. We had the wind in our favor and, dismounting, I told Billy to wait and I would line up with a big tree and try to get a closer shot, not being sure of my strange gun. When within about 200 yards I dropped on one knee and gave it to him, as I thought. The buck simply raised his head, looked around a couple of times and, instead of dropping dead, quietly went on feeding. I had shot over him and made a clean miss. With more confidence in the gun I then took point blank aim and fired. Head over heels the buck went, only to get up and bound away through the timber like the wind, I after him on foot. I must have followed that deer two miles, got four more shots, and at last came up with him suddenly, not fifteen yards away, lying down in a little clearing. I had to shoot him again through the head to kill him. To show the reader the great tenacity for life these deer have, I will say that I had shot him first back of the shoulder and through the body. In addition to that, a ball had passed entirely through him lengthwise, and his left hindleg had been broken below the second joint, and it hung simply by the flesh. In fact he was so badly shot to pieces that we decided to take only the hindquarters and the tenderloins. It was a small trick to do this and we were soon returning to camp.

On our way back, and about half a mile from where we left the deer, Billy found a bear track in the trail that we were following. There it was as plain as if in the snow, print after print, where the huge fellow had come down the mountain toward the spring. After following the trail sufficiently to satisfy us that he was not a chance visitor, but belonged in that neighborhood, we cantered back to camp as quickly as possible. Venison steak, potatoes baked in the ashes, and hot biscuits made a delicious supper. Perhaps it was because of our long ride and excitement, but that meal certainly was a delicious one. After supper the boys had some repairs to make to the pack saddles of the burro train, for three of them were going to the railway station next day after a load of rock salt for the cattle. I got out my gun, oiled and cleaned it, removing every particle of dust from the action and sights, picked out my cartridges, oiled them and wiped each one carefully. After this was done and the magazine filled, my .44 Colt's frontier six-shooter received similar attention; and after that the big knife had to be sharpened for possible close work, and other preliminaries gone through preparatory to meeting his lordship Bruin. These little preparations to a sportsman are one of his dearest joys, and are even shared by his dog.

That night there was not much sleep for me. When I did doze off there were bears all around me, all sizes and kinds, planning my downfall. But it was soon time to get up so as to enable the boys to get an early start with their pack train. We had breakfast by starlight, helped the boys round up their train and start, and it was not quite daylight when Billy and I commenced to make our own preparations. Simple enough they were, to be sure. The horses we were to ride were the best on the range, and we used the heavy cow saddles with a coil of rope on the left-hand side. We then put a couple of biscuits and some cold venison in our pockets and started. First of all there was some business to attend to; that is, some steers to be seen; so we started for a point where salt had been set out for the cattle, a likely place to find the cattle bunched. It was a beautiful morning. From our great height one could see over hundreds of miles of country. Away to the east, in Colorado, could be seen the silver line of the White River. In the southwest the lofty peaks of Mt. Ellen. To the west the Wasatch Mountains. The Henry Mountains, the Green River, Desolation Cañon, were all visible, and in the early morning sunlight with their caps of silver mist assuming magic hues and shades, were exceedingly beautiful. Even the little things around us added their share to the general delight. The frost on the grass, the delicate quaking aspen trees with their straight trunks and white bark, and then the sky, so blue and clear. When at an altitude of ten thousand feet, in the morning or evening, there is something about the atmosphere that cannot be explained, a something that, when it touches a mountain or cañon, changes it, softens it, and makes one feel that fairy land is not far away.

But there were other things beside the beauties of the view that required our attention, for over to the right, not two hundred yards distant, were three magnificent bucks (in the Fall they run together), heads up, looking for danger. They had scented us, and almost before I was able to get off my horse they had started. Away they went, taking those long, graceful, bounding leaps which so often cause one to shoot behind. This was their first experience with a .50-95, and my first shot brought the middle and largest one to the ground, powerless to move. Billy gave me the laugh and said I missed, for he only saw two of them, and two were fast getting out of sight through the timber. We went over to where the one I fired at had fallen, and there, sure enough, laid my prize stretched out on the frosty grass, a great, fine five pronged blacktail. I had shot him through the shoulder, cut his heart, and he died instantly. We dressed him and, with one of our saddle ropes, tied him up in a pine tree to remain until we returned to camp. And just a word right here to the novice in deer shooting: Do not take for granted, when a deer is down, that he is dead; or when badly wounded that he is harmless. Experience has taught that their last effort may be a kick or blow from their heels or horns that will break one's legs or arms, and that if not too badly crippled, when cornered, they will fight one; and a wounded buck is a very dangerous animal; more so than most men suppose.

After hanging up our deer we started for the section in which we had tracked the bear. It was not very far over there. I was riding ahead, down the trail, where we had seen the tracks on the previous evening. Almost before we expected we were at the little opening in the thicket where we had left the deer carcass killed the night before; but no deer was there. Instead we found a little mound of leaves, stones, dirt and sticks, carefully collected from around the remains of the dead animal and completely covering it. Just as we reached this curious grave there was a crash in the brush near us, a growl, and we caught sight of a yellow object bounding through the undergrowth.

"Mountain lion," said Billy. "He has covered this carcass like a dog does a bone; but he won't leave it. We will take our horses away and hunt him."

Quickly acting upon his suggestion we commenced a search for our unexpected quarry. For almost an hour we hunted that piece of timber over and over, climbing over fallen trees, and through dense thickets where it would have been hard to either fight or get away. Finally we wandered back toward where the deer was buried and sat down. We had been sitting silently on an old tree trunk for some time, looking at every point where the stranger could be in hiding, when Billy suddenly pointed to a little clearing about a hundred yards away. There were, perhaps, half a dozen dead tree trunks lying between us and this spot; on all sides great somber pine trees, and, coming directly toward these fallen trees, was the panther, not paying the least attention to us, head down, tail dragging along behind him, softly stepping over little stones and pine cones, [illegible] you have seen a house cat start out through the grass for field mice, or to visit a neighbor's chicken yard. It was Billy's game, but I motioned to let him come closer. On he came unconscious of our presence, until he reached the dead timber, some of which was considerably off the ground, being still held by the tops at one end and tree roots [illegible]. He sprang up on the first of them, catching his claws on the trunk, not over [illegible] ar from us.

[illegible] I said, but he had spied us and made one great spring to the ground as if to run, but instead quickly turned back to the tree trunks and stopped immediately on the other side of one of them looking at us from under the log, his head almost touching the ground and his sinewy, tawny body showing on the other side of the tree. The hair on his back and tail was on end, his long claws working in and out of his large, soft hairy feet, his long tail slashing from side to side. What would I not have given for a kodak or camera? But that cat's life was suddenly brought to an end, for Billy rose up and planted a .45 ball between a pair of bright eyes and, with the most awful screech—almost half human, pathetic—the tawny fellow gave it all up. He was a one; we thought he would weigh at least 175 pounds. We quickly skinned him where he lay and started to find our horses. It was nearly noon and we had had pretty good sport for the few hours out. We went over to the spring, made a lunch out of what we had brought along in our pockets, and in almost the same breath said: "Now for the bear!"

I shall never forget that afternoon; how we hunted over every section of likely ground, through rose bushes, pine woods, quaking aspen thickets; over rocks, broken down, burned timber and treetops; how we would separate, one going on each side of some cañon, or climb some mountain to meet again at some prearranged point; riding, climbing, falling, leading our horses down steep cliffs, expecting every minute they would slip and fall upon us, in a country without trails, except where the cattle had made their way through from one feeding point to another, and no guides but our own woodcraft.

A GRIZZLY BEAR HUNT—THERE I WAS, FACE TO FACE WITH, AND NOT A HUNDRED YARDS FROM, A MONSTER GRIZZLY

About 4 o'clock we stopped in a little gully to rest. I had long ago taken off my revolver and cartridge belt and tied them to the horn of the saddle, as their weight tired me. We sat here for some time, and the worn out horses looked at us as much as to say: "You fools; there are no cattle here!" Plenty of bear tracks had been seen, and, strictly speaking, it was a grizzly country. Billy remarked.

"Well, De, let's separate and ride around this knob—a hill probably two hundred feet higher than the country immediately surrounding it—until we meet, and, if we do not see any fresh tracks, give it up and go home, as it will soon be dark."

I shall never forget that hill. It was perhaps a mile around it, with a dry wash on two sides, on the top quite a little grove of timber; the sides covered, like the rest of the country, with rose briers and small trees. I had hunted so long [illegible] I was tired and careless. My gun [illegible] of me, and I was buckling on my [illegible] I expected to meet Billy shortly and [illegible] sharp turn in the gully, or wash, my [illegible], snorted, and before I could rein [illegible] tely around. It was all done so quickly I knew that something was ahead; perhaps a bear, perhaps a dead steer. With a sharp prod I turned him round and rode back, every nerve keyed up to its highest tension. Not without cause did the horse shy and turn this time, for when we got farther around the hill, there, in plain sight, in a little grove of quaking aspen trees, quietly sitting, was the biggest bear I have ever seen, dead or alive. We saw each other at the same time, and as I dismounted he stood up on all fours and uttered a most remarkable combination of snort and growl. My horse did not wait to turn tail this time, but left that section of country in a hurry the way he was headed. There I was, face to face with, and not a hundred yards from, a monster grizzly. The bear seemed perfectly unconcerned in regard to my actions; he had always been master of everything in those old hills. As I stood there he quietly walked a few yards up the hill, then stopped and looked at me, twisted his nose from side to side and scented me, lifted his upper lip, showing his sharp teeth, and uttered a short, cross growl. What a monster he was! His Winter fur made him look larger than he actually was. Powerful shoulders; immense feet with thin, black toes and long cruel claws; short hindlegs; broad head, with little ears that made him look cunning; small eyes that watched me so closely that I was simply frightened beyond expression, and had not enough sense left to run. I forgot my gun, where I was, or what I came for. This was not my first bear, but others had been hunted down by horsemen, shot at while running, chased and finally captured and killed under exciting circumstances and with plenty of company. This was a different case. True, I was hunting this bear, but had come onto him unexpectedly and unprepared. I was alone; on foot, face to face with this brute, whose power I knew, and I knew also that he would fight to the death. I knew he could be shot through the heart, or brain, and then go a hundred yards and kill his man. I thought of the deer I had killed the day previous as I gradually commenced to remember what I was there for, and how it had been shot through and through so many times and yet was able to run. If I ran would the bear follow me? Where was Billy? Would he find me? All these things ran through my head, and a thousand others. I do not know how it happened, but my nerve, or call it what you will, came back as suddenly as it left me, and the sportsman instinct and love for the chase took possession of my shaking bones. It is curious how quickly one can recover his self-possession. I think that bear knew there was a change in my condition, for he uttered a couple of very cross growls and walked a couple of paces away. I looked in the chamber of my rifle, loosened my knife and tightened my belt. I think I would have fought that bear had I had only a club, for my previous fear had changed into real anger; a curious feeling that I never before or since have experienced. As we were located the bear must have been about one hundred yards distant from me, on ground possibly fifty feet higher, with a clear hillside, excepting some aspen trees, between us. As he turned his head a little I took, standing, aim at his ear and fired. The grade we were in threw me off and the ball struck him lower down in the neck, cutting the artery. When the ball struck him he uttered the most terrible roar—a noise terrifying beyond description—that went echoing through the forest for miles. No other animal can utter such a cry of pain and anger. He came right at me, I think, thirty yards before I could throw in another shell. I was not as much frightened then as I am now thinking about it, and I sent a ball crashing into his brain. This stopped him an instant and seemed to craze him. He reached up and seized a quaking aspen tree in his paws and broke it off like you would a bit of kindling, then he broke another tree. In his agony he was furiously wild. I shot him again in the head, but he turned and came directly for me in a zigzag course; not in a very attractive way either, but roaring, snarling and snapping at the trees, throwing up the dirt and stones, the most furious, terrible object one can possibly picture. It all happened so quickly, too, possibly in a couple of minutes from the time I first saw him; perhaps less. I thought if I lost my presence of mind he would kill me, I knew if I stayed and did not stop him, the first blow he gave me would end me, for the trees, six inches in diameter, were stronger and tougher than I. Then I remembered what an old hunter, perhaps the most famous shot in Utah, had told me, that "the backbone was the fatal place," and I sent a .50-caliber ball at that terrible object coming toward me that stopped him, broke his back, paralyzed his hindquarters, and yet he tried to get to me on his forelegs by dragging the rest of his body on the ground. The battle was won, for the first shot was doing its work, and the great beast was bleeding to death fast enough.

The excitement and strain were too much, and when I saw that the bear was done for, I cried like a baby. Billy had met my runaway horse and he hurried to me all the faster when he heard the several shots. He found me sitting near the dead bear crying like a child. And he was not much better off, for when he saw that the bear was killed and I was unhurt, he got crazy in his own way and we had a regular war dance over that dead bear, yelling like Indians, hugging each other, firing our revolvers, and doing all sorts of foolish things, and I believe had someone seen us and not known the cause of our behavior, he would have said we were the biggest pair of fools ever seen in the mountains.

I am not going to say how big that bear was, for of course there have been larger ones killed, and measurements do not give any idea of a grizzly's power and fierceness. We estimated that he weighed somewhere between a thousand and twelve hundred pounds. R. Stenzel of Salt Lake City mounted the skin and I gave it to Mr. Geo. R. Barse, of Kansas City, Mo., in whose library it lies in state.

The best lesson I learned from that hunt was, to maintain continuous vigilance at all times. Had I been more careful in this case, I do not believe that I would have been so badly frightened when I first saw the bear. Another good lesson was, to know what a 50-caliber explosive ball will do. Where the ball struck the spinal column of that bear there was a place, nearly three inches long, of crushed bones, almost as if done with an ax. So well had the ball done its work that the bear's hindquarters were totally paralyzed. The balls that struck his head crushed in pieces of the skull, but did not seem to stop him. I think these .50-95 shells better than the .50-110, even for long shooting. I believe it is the best gun for elk, bear or other big game shooting that is now sold. No one realizes what a comfort a strong-shooting, big-caliber gun is in the woods until he meets a big bear face to face at close quarters, and even then the chances are against one. I would advise would-be killers of grizzly or silver tips to let them alone and "hunt ducks," for no one can fully appreciate the terror incited by the presence of one of these wounded monsters in its wild, native state. Try to think how you would feel standing in the center of a railway track, on a bridge, with a fast express train approaching, knowing that you cannot get away and that the chances are against the engineer seeing you till too late; watch the smoke, dust and steam of the train as it comes roaring on, and hear the clatter on the rails. Do you not think it would frighten you pretty badly? I think a wounded grizzly incites as much terror, if not more. There are other things just as fatal to life perhaps, but nothing that I can call to mind that can incite so much real terror in a human being, or in an animal, wild or domestic, as one of these big grizzlies, a few of which are yet to be found in the far West.

SPRING SHOOTING SHOULD BE STOPPED

CHICAGO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—If we are to judge from reports received from nearly all parts of the country, it is doubtless true that more ducks have already been killed this Spring than in any Spring before for many seasons; and this being so it causes many duck shooters who have heretofore been in favor of Spring shooting to stop and ask: "How long, if this terrible slaughter is kept up, will it be before ducks, like some other species of game, will be practically extinct?" There is not any question in my mind but what Spring shooting is wrong, and that those who engage in it are, as the saying goes, "killing the goose that lays the golden egg." On the marsh of just one club that I know of, not less than 5,000 birds have been killed this Spring up to the present time, and the shooting still continues, from fifty to seventy-five birds falling to a single gun nearly every day, and from two to six or eight shooters banging away every day in the week, Sunday not excepted.

Now, supposing—which is fair enough—that one-half of the birds killed are females, then 2,500 or 3,000 birds that are capable of reproducing their species, that were on their way to the breeding grounds, have been slaughtered, and for what? Not for food for the gunners, for few ducks are good eating in the Spring, and if they were, one or two messes would satisfy almost any lover of wild fowl at this time of the year; not for the money they will bring in the market, for when the markets are overloaded prices are very low. Then why are they killed? Simply to gratify a love for shooting; nothing more, nothing less. If this be true—and we hold that it is to a large degree—are not Spring shooters paying very dearly for their sport; or will they not when, a few years hence, ducks are few and hard to find, realize that they paid dearly for their sport in assisting in bringing about such a condition of affairs by killing the birds in large numbers at a season of the year when it was the height of folly to do so?

Hundreds upon hundreds of sportsmen who shoot ducks in the Spring admit that they favor a law to prohibit Spring shooting, but, they argue, so long as there is no prohibitory law and others shoot in the Spring, they, too, will do likewise. The argument is not a good one, but it is made, and men who offer it as an excuse act upon it and feel justified in so doing.

As a remedy for the evil of Spring shooting, and in order to see what can be done to put a stop to it, I would suggest to the sportsmen of the different states that at their annual meetings this year they select one or two of their best and ablest counselors and appoint them as delegates to a national gathering of sportsmen to be held at some convenient point during the present year to discuss this question of Spring shooting and see if a concensus of opinion favorable to doing away with Spring shooting cannot be obtained. This done, then efforts that we believe would be successful could be made in every state to have a law enacted prohibiting the slaughter of ducks in the Spring of the year.

But, going back to the number of birds killed on the single marsh mentioned above. Suppose that each of the 2,500 or 3,000 females that were killed had been permitted to go to the breeding grounds undisturbed, it is not too high an estimate to say that the majority of those birds would have reared half a dozen young, and next Fall the flight south would have been from 12,000 to 18,000 stronger than it now possibly can be, for the number has been curtailed just that many by the shooting done on this particular marsh, to say nothing of the thousands upon thousands of birds that have been killed in other localities.

The belief that Spring shooting is, as I have maintained for years, suicidal, as it were, in its effects and should be legislated against, is growing rapidly, and I believe that a majority of the sportsmen in the country who have given the subject any thought are nearly all of the same opinion, and that is, if we continue to slaughter the birds as is now being done and has been done during the past fifteen years, it will not be many years before there will be no duck shooting of any account for anybody, either in the Spring or Fall. One of two things we, as sportsmen, must agree to: either to put a stop to Spring shooting or eventually do the most of our shooting at composition targets from the trap.

UNFRIENDLY LEGISLATION

CHICAGO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—As every sportsman in this state knows, I have always favored legislation and the enforcement of the laws affecting the propagation and preservation of game birds and animals. The present organization of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association was largely due to my efforts. But the tendency, of late, has been toward overdoing, and the result will be the exact reverse of the intention of the sportsmen. They have been, and should, if permitted, continue to be, the real friends of the cause. They only give of their time and money to legislation and its enforcement. Game wardens may, in some states, be partly paid by the state or by fines collected; but the source, primarily, and often exclusively, of the prosecution of offenders, is game protective organizations; and no other state organization has accomplished as much as has the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association. The only return which its members can receive, of selfish nature, is that of occasionally receiving courtesies from others than themselves, when passing a few days in the country, each year, in that most healthful of all sports, shooting in the field. True, that selfishness is not the only motive, as were it, they would not wish the enactment of game laws. The higher motive prevails, that of the preservation of game for those who are to follow us, not necessarily our children, because many of us have none, and few have those whose tastes are in the direction of field sports. Be that as it may, however, our fellow sportsmen, in our sister states, do not reciprocate our efforts to aid them in the preservation of their game birds, or, rather, do not extend to us reciprocal courtesies. They enact laws prohibiting the citizens of other states taking home with them the few birds they may kill. That is not fair, nor just, nor reciprocal for our effort to prevent the unlawful sale of game in our markets. Such legislation should be modified.

Lately, the legislature of North Dakota, your paper informs its readers, has passed a law, licensing residents of that state to kill game, and at the same time requires from a non-resident $25. It matters not whether the non-resident be the guest of a citizen, or a hunter for the market, it is the same. He may be the owner of a preserve or a member of a club, owning a preserve, it is $25, or no sport for the non-resident!

First, laws which prohibit the carrying from a state, by a sportsman, of game killed by himself, is unwise, unsportsmanlike, and merits retaliation. It is not just toward those in other states, where there are few if any game birds or animals.

Second, discriminating legislation like that referred to hereinbefore, fixing a tax of but fifty cents to a resident and $25 to a stranger, is ungenerous, discourteous, unfriendly and wrong. In equity, there is no justification. Continued legislation of like character, or the retention of those classes, will cause our sportsmen to lose interest in game preservation; and when they do so lose that interest, our Western friends will find our markets open in the broadest manner to the game illegally killed in our sister states. During the present Winter, almost herculean strength has been applied to prevent legislation in the direction of open markets for foreign game, and that strength has been applied solely by the members and friends of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association.

Do our Western friends want to so drive us to the wall that we neglect their interests altogether? The depletion of game in the West is not from the use of the guns of sportsmen. The most efficient methods of decrease have been, up to the present day, the killing of game by local citizens, prior to the open season—at times when grouse were mere chicklets; and the trapping of grouse after the season has closed. The almost invariable response to this state of facts is, "these lawbreakers are our neighbors, and we can't prosecute them." Very certain would it be otherwise, if the violators had been strangers.

Personally, I will not knowingly violate a just nor an unjust law. I retired from a club, in Wisconsin, because I could not lawfully bring ducks from that state, for use by my family and friends. I was told by people of the state—"Take them. No one minds that law." In all my shooting, I have killed but one bird when not in season, and that a woodcock, in Spring, years ago, before I knew what a woodcock was. Last year, I did not kill more than thirty field birds and not fifty ducks, and, so far, have not killed a game bird since August last; nor do I ever kill other than game birds and birds of prey; hence, this is not written in selfish spirit, but as a request for fairness.

Will our Western friends exert their influence toward the modification of the existing discriminating legislation? or will they continue it, to the end that they alone will work to the prevention of the killing and shipping of game? It is said that very many carloads of venison came here last season from states from which it was unlawful to ship it, and the shelves or freezers of Eastern cities are filled with game, and will be, unless local sportsmen prevent its being killed, or their sportsmen friends in our city and in Eastern cities aid such local sportsmen by preventing the use of the illegally shipped game.

Unfriendly legislation should be repealed. Let sportsmen's associations in other states, by resolutions, and by personal effort, extend aid to that end.

CHAS. E. FELTON.

CALIFORNIA'S NEW GAME AND FISH LAWS

It will be pleasing news to the sportsmen of California to hear that the game law suggested at a convention of the sportsmen of that state has passed both houses of the legislature and now only needs the signature of the governor to become a law, and furthermore that the governor will undoubtedly approve the bill. The bill is undoubtedly a good one for the protection of game and fish and is directly in the interest of legitimate sportsmanship; and if those in authority will assist the sportsmen in enforcing it its value as a measure of game protection will be demonstrated very easily.

The bill creating the office of county game warden also passed both houses without the slight[illegible] and it too will undoubtedly meet wit[illegible] of the governor. It gives the sup[illegible] county the privilege of selecting t[illegible] warden and of naming the salary he s[illegible] vided the amount named does not exce[illegible] month.

The old clause of the county government bill which allowed the supervisors of the county to nullify the game laws of the state and make the open season for the killing of game to suit the convenience of those who were in the political swim has been repealed, and in its stead a sensible clause adopted. The new clause gives the boards the power, when in their judgment the existing condition of the country demands it, to shorten the open season to such time as they wish, so as to prevent the sale of game or its shipment out of the county, or its killing beyond a certain number. But whatever changes in dates that are made must be within the dates set by the state law.

Section 627 was the only one which met with any opposition, but when the legislators learned that the object of the section was to give the poor class of sportsmen an opportunity of shooting ducks upon land that was uncultivated, they quickly acquiesced to the wishes of the Committee on Fish and Game and their many friends. The section reads:

"Every person who, upon any inclosed or cultivated grounds which are private property, and where signs are displayed forbidding such shooting, except saltwater marsh land, shall shoot any quail, Bob White, pheasant, partridge, grouse, dove, deer or wild duck, without permission first obtained from the owner or person in possession of such grounds, or who shall maliciously tear down, mutilate or destroy any sign, signboard or other notice forbidding shooting on private property, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

The gathering or destroying of the eggs of quails, pheasants, grouse, doves, robins or any kind of wild duck is a misdemeanor.

The closed season for the killing of doves is from February 15 to July 1.

The following section will prove interesting to deer hunters. It reads:

"Every person in the state who shall hunt, kill or destroy any male deer between the 15th day of October and the 15th day of July of the following year shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Female deer and spotteds fawns must not be killed at any time."

Sections which will cut off the market-hunters read:

"Every person in this state who shall at any time buy, sell or offer for sale, the hide or meat of any deer, elk, antelope or mountain sheep, whether taken or killed in the state of California or shipped into the state from any other state or territory, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, provided that nothing in this section shall be held to apply to the hide of any of said animals taken or killed in Alaska or any foreign country."

"The use of shotguns of larger caliber than No. 10-gauge is unlawful and the proof of the possession of such guns in the field, or marsh, bay, lake or stream shall be prima facie evidence of their illegal use."

Anglers will be interested in the following changes made for the protection of fish. Any person having striped bass of less than three pounds in weight can be punished. Black bass is protected between January 1 and July 1. Trout of any kind must not be taken between the first day of November and the first day of April, excepting steel head trout taken with rod and line at any time in tidewater. Trout under six inches in length must not be sold. Another section which is important reads:

"Every person who by seine or other means shall catch the young fish of any species and who shall not return the same to the water immediately and alive, or who shall sell or offer for sale any such fish, fresh or dried, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

THE SPORTSMEN'S EXPOSITION

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The week of May 13 to 18 will chronicle an event in the history of field sports in this country worthy of consideration. How far-reaching the influence of such an exhibition, devoted to the sportsmen of this country, will be will depend greatly upon the general support given it by the persons for whom it is held, as well as the public generally. It is not expected to work wonders in an hour or a day, but it is more than consistent to believe that the holding of an exposition in which all the paraphernalia used by the sportsman is exhibited, and the gathering of the sportsmen themselves at the same time, cannot fail to accomplish great good. The board of trustees of the association has shown a commendable devotion to the work in their hands, and a resource of energy and originality deserving of emulation. The quality required to push to a successful issue an enterprise so entirely new and extensive, speaks well for the business tact and judgment of the gentlemen who have developed and promoted the exposition.

The task of getting together such exhibits as will be representative and cover all the departments is well [illegible] mpleted. The list of exhibitors has been extended ... past week, and includes such firms as Chas. ...son's Son, Burgess Gun Co., Hulbert Bros. & Co., ... W. Hart, L. E. Morris, the Ideal Manufacturing Co., ... Pioneer Gun Co., Obrig Camera Co. and Corn- ...

The trustees have been offered for exhibition a very valuable collection of old firearms and weapons, the property of N. Spering, Esq., of Philadelphia, Pa., containing forty or more pieces, and including a Moorish flintlock gun, very old; flintlock hunting rifle over 100 years old, barrel 49 inches long; three flintlock guns from the Revelutionary period; flintlock carbine and powder horn used during Revolutionary war; double-barrel flintlock fowling piece; muzzle-loading double-barrel hammerless shotgun; breech-loading rifle, Hall patent, 1831, altered from flint to percussion lock; revolver captured from British during Crimean war; Maynard revolver, 1845, muzzle-loading, uses tape caps; muzzle-loading pistol, hammer on underside of barrel; twelve Indian arrows, seven with steel heads, five with grease-wood points, three bows; stone ax-head used by early Indians.

Charles Scribner's Sons will also make a very large exhibit of beautiful tinted plates of sporting scenes. Also their collection of game fishes of America, and their sporting publications. Another large collection will consist of sixty oil paintings of game fishes of this country of a very high artistic merit, and are loaned by the artist. Other loans of a more or less important nature are also coming in from time to time, which will serve to make the display very attractive.

FRANK W. SANGER, Manager.

NOTES

GAME has wintered well in this section, notwithstanding the severe weather. We have put out grain in considerable quantities which may have helped the quails through; in fact we are positive that such is the case. I have personal knowledge of one bevy of over twenty birds and quite a number of smaller bevies that have been saved in this way. I have heard from sportsmen and farmer friends of a goodly number of birds, one bevy in particular numbering nearly forty birds. Partridges, of course, came through all right. There is only a small chance of the conditions being just right in this locality to catch them under the snow crust, and even should this happen they will break out through quite a heavy freeze. Woodcocks have not arrived here yet; at least I have been unable to fine traces of them, although they are frequently here at this date. On the morning of March 17 I was out giving my dog a run and, working through some low bushes on the south slope of a hill, he found and pointed. In working around to get the sun back of me so as to get a "snap" with my camera, I flushed. Well, Dick did not go on (he is trained not to waste time holding after the game has gone), only stralghtened up from his point; so I ordered him on and he moved up into the brush and came in bringing a quail that some poor, mean, miserable fellow had shot at and broken its wing close to the body. It had also been hit in the body with several shot. I put the bird out of misery, knowing it had no chance to live, and being unable to fly might lead by its trail some fox or skunk to the roosting place of the whole bevy. We are after the party who is doing the shooting and hope to secure evidence enough to convict.

Amesbury, Mass. CHOKE BORE.

IF the sportsmen of Illinois want the game bill now before the legislature to become a law during this session their active coöperation is necessary. Mr. W. L. Shepard, president of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association, who is keeping his eye on the bill which he and Game Warden Blow presented jointly to the legislative committee on game and fish, is in receipt of a letter from Chairman A. B. Hallock, of the House committee, setting forth the necessity for prompt action, from which we quote: "If the bill is to have any show of becoming a law there is a great deal of work to be done by yourself and friends, as well as the mutual support of the press of the state. You can rely upon me to do everything I can for the bill in the House." Mr. Shepard has spent much time at Springfield urging the passage of this bill, and he says if the sportsmen in the districts represented by Senators Aspinwall, Berry, Bogardus, Coon, Evans, Hunter and Leeper, and Representatives Crafts, D. Berry, Cochran, J. W. White, McKenzie and Armstrong will urge upon these legislators to pass the bill, using what influence they can to cause them to act, he believes the bill will become a law. Without concerted effort it will fail. The measure is known as House Bill No. 715. The sportsmen of Cook ... us their influence with the entire Cook ... ation of both branches. The session of the ... is drawing to a close and it is the desire of the ... State Sportsmen's Association to see ... before adjournment.

THE essential features of the game and fish law bill which has passed the Senate of the Texas legislature and been reported favorably to the House by the committee to which it was referred, are as follows: Fishing in any lake, stream or pool of water in the state, except in private ponds by owners of same, with anything except the ordinary pole and line and hook, is forbidden between February 1 and July 1 of each and every year, and at no time of the year is fishing in such waters with net or seine permitted. Traps or other contrivances for catching fish in the public waters of the state are also prohibited. Taking fish by the use of poisons or explosives is illegal, and parties erecting mill dams are required to construct and keep in repair fish ways or fish ladders. Deer are protected from January 15 to August 1. It is made unlawful to kill, trap or otherwise destroy any wild turkey between April 15 and October 1. Prairie chickens are protected from November 1 to August 1; quails from April 1 to October 1. Netting of quails is prohibited, but trapping, with the ordinary trap, permitted. Antelopes are protected from January 1 to August 1. Shipment out of the state of all kinds of game prohibited. The bill was introduced by Mr. Robbins, and will probably become a law. We are pleased to note the great interest taken by the sportsmen of Texas, at whose instance the bill was drafted and presented, in getting better laws for the protection of game.

ANOTHER strong organization, the Arkansas State Sportsmen's Association, has been added to the membership roll of the National Game, Bird and Fish Protective Association, and any individual member of the National Sportsmen's League who may chance to become an "Arkansaw traveler" will be welcomed as a man and a brother by Secretary John J. Sumpter, Jr., of Hot Springs, or by any other of the officers and members of the first named society. The good work of game protection on the co-operative basis is steadily gaining ground, and it should be borne in mind that much of the success attained by game and fish protective associations of to-day is due to the well directed efforts of a few pioneers in that line of labor—notably Dr. N. Rowe, Hon. Robert B. Roosevelt, Chas. Hallock, Hon. Thomas A. Logan ("Gloan") and the late Wilbur F. Parker. With pen and voice these men worked vigorously and valiantly for a period now rounding out into a quarter of a century, and if the sportsmen and anglers of the present time are becoming better game protectors, it is largely through the influence of the "old 'uns" in elevating the tone of sportsmanship and educating public sentiment to a higher standard.

Westfield, Wis. WILL WILDWOOD.

WHILE hunting ducks on the Kankakee Marsh east of Lowell, Ind., two or three weeks ago, I had the good fortune to kill a couple of very large swans. I was in the blind (an old haystack bottom) watching for ducks, when the birds were seen coming from the north. They were so near the blind when first noticed that I did not have time to change my duck loads for larger shot. I at once saw what they were and although I was shooting No. 6 shot I determined to try and get one—more if I could, as there were three—thinking that to do so I would have to hit them in the head. They were about fifty yards high, and when about ten yards from me I led the foremost one about three inches and pressed the trigger. At the crack of the gun the leader doubled up in beautiful shape and came down with a splash. I then held at the point of the second one's bill and fired and down it came, both striking within a few feet of me. Had I not been so interested in the birds I had killed, I could easily have scored the third one, for it turned, after passing me, and came back within good gunshot.

THE new game law of Oregon which has passed both branches of the legislature and will, without doubt, receive the signature of the Governor, makes the open season on game in that state as follows: Deer, October 1 to January 1; deer under one year of age not to be killed at any time and does protected for five years. Wild turkeys, prairie chickens, pheasants and quails, November 1 to January 1. Woodcocks, turtle doves, meadowlarks and plovers, August 1 to January 1. Wild ducks, October 1 to April 1. Unlawful at all times to trap or net game birds of any kind. The fish law prohibits the placing of nets at the mouth of streams. In fact fish nets and traps are prohibited, except a minnow net not exceeding fifteen feet in length, such as is commonly used for catching small fish for bait. Provision is made for a game and fish warden, to be appointed by the governor, whose term of office shall be for two years. The warden is given power to appoint deputies wherever he believes the preservation of game or fish demands them. The chief warden is to serve without compensation.

MR. JAMES MCCROSSEN JR. of St. Paul, Minn., while out duck shooting on March 26, was instantly killed by the accidental discharge of his own gun. He and a friend named Griswold had gone out on the C. B. & Q Railroad as far as Grey Cloud Island, and in the afternoon crossed the river to the Dakota County side, where they had the good luck to kill some birds that fell into water too deep to recover without a boat, so the unfortunate man started back to where their boat had been left to get it. He had not been separated from Mr. Griswold very long when the latter heard a shot from the direction of the boat, but supposing that his companion had found more game thought nothing of it until some minutes later, when a couple of men passing him asked if he knew the dead man lying on the bank up the river. Mr. Griswold hastened to his friend and found him lying on his back with a large wound in his breast. It seems that in handling the boat he had turned the muzzle of his gun toward him, but how the gun was discharged no one can possibly know, only conjecture. Deceased was 38 years old, a man of good business ability and a prominent member of the St. Paul Gun Club.

So far as Rhode Island is concerned game laws do not seem to amount to much. Speaking about the matter a Pawtucket enthusiast says: "There is nothing left in the way of game for the sportsman who has to work for a living. I hunted three days the past season over what, ten years ago, was as good quail ground as there was in the state, and never started a quail. The cause of the decrease of game in this state is not hard to explain. The writer met four Italians in one squad last Fall, each armed with an old musket, blazing away at everything, from a grasshopper to the side of a barn. Saturday afternoons and Sundays the woods fairly swarm with them in the sections of the state where manufacturing establishments are located. Another thing. I am informed that parties in the southern part of the state supplied thousands of "August partridges" to the hotels. It seems to me that if the game of this country is to be saved, the rich and poor sportsmen must pull together."

REPRESENTATIVE DOUGLASS, of Minnesota, recently introduced a bill in the lower house of the Minnesota legislature requiring non-residents to pay a license of $25 for hunting in that state, and asked that the bill be passed under suspension of the rules, saying that North Dakota had passed a law requiring Minnesota sportsmen to pay a $25 license for hunting in that state, but that North Dakota sportsmen were in Clay County, Minn., by 3 o'clock on the morning of the opening day on prairie chickens, and there was nothing to prevent them from coming. The bill was amended to apply to residents of states that have restrictive laws on non-residents and passed.

THE game and fish laws of New Jersey which have been approved by the governor are in many respects different from those originally introduced, and the state has again been divided into northern and southern sections. In the northern division the season for shooting quails, rabbits and grouse opens on October 25 and closes December 15. Woodcocks come under the same law, and Summer woodcock shooting is thus prohibited. The extension of the season was made for the benefit of Fall woodcock shooters. Sunday shooting is prohibited under a penalty of $25, and the new act practically repeals the law against fishing on Sunday.

IOWA sportsmen are also doing their part toward reducing the supply of ducks for next Fall's shooting. A dispatch from Clinton says that from Bellevue to the Docia the river is lined on both sides with hunting boats and camps, and that within a distance of three miles, just north of Savanna, there were at one time twenty-three camps on one side of the river alone. If ducks are not plentiful next Fall the men who have helped to lessen the number by killing birds this Spring will have no right to complain, for they, in a measure, will be to blame for the shortage.

A VERY strong and much needed bill for the protection of game, particularly quails, will be introduced at the present session of the legislature. It is very necessary that each and every Tennessee sportsman write both the representative and senator of his district at once, recommending and urging its passage, as there will be strong opposition to it from certain sections where heretofore the people have derived considerable revenue by trapping and netting quails for the market.

Jackson, Tenn. J. N. SEALE.

AT the January meeting of the Locust Point Shooting Club, which controls as fine a duck-shooting marsh as there is in the state of Ohio, a resolution was passed prohibiting the shooting of ducks on the club's preserve from January 1 to August 31. On these grounds, last Fall, the day after election, the writer hereof killed 54 ducks in two hours. All honor to the Locust Point Club, and speed the time when all clubs and every sportsman in the country will do as this club has done, favor the prohibition of Spring duck shooting.

Ravenna, O. JOHN A. FLICK.

I WAS out one day last week with my pointer bitch, prospecting for quails, and in half a day, within two miles of town, she pointed four bevies—one of eight, one of ten, another of thirteen and the last had fourteen; in all forty-five birds. This surely is a good showing after so severe a Winter. Ducks passed north about the second week in March in very meager numbers. Only a few were killed around here. They were very fat for Spring birds.

Mechanicsburg, O. S. M. HARPER.

ON Saturday, March 30, a dozen wild pigeons passed over our town going in a northeasterly direction. Sunday last I saw four very large, fat jacksnipes near here. Doves have arrived and are nesting. Rabbits are almost exterminated, by the use of ferrets. The barefooted boy with pole and pinhook, making tracks in mud and sand, proclaims that Spring is here.

Mechanicsburg, O. S. M. HARPER.

A CORRESPONDENT writing from Marengo, Ia., says that people in his section of the state pay little or no attention to the game and fish laws, but shoot and trap game and spear fish whenever they want to. Commissioner Delevan of Esterville should visit Marengo and give the violators a rounding up; and should he decide to do so and wish our informant's name we shall be only to glad to assist him in his work by giving it.

THE new game law of Oklahoma went into effect on March 25, and on that day, near Chickasaw, on a train on the Rock Island Railroad, officers discovered about 5,000 quails en route for St. Louis. The crates containing the birds were broken open, the doors of the car opened and the birds given their liberty. The birds had been trapped and were being shipped to the St. Louis market alive.

GEORGE COOK of Rahway, N. J., a young man twenty years old, thought he could drop a spark of fire into a flask of powder and then throw the flask into the river before the powder exploded. He therefore tried the experiment and as a result lost one eye and burned his face badly. He is now doubtless convinced that double-geared lightning is just a notch or two quicker than a real quick young man.

FARMERS in this section report that there are plenty of quails left over to furnish birds enough for good sport next Fall. This is somewhat remarkable, for the past Winter was a particularly severe one on these birds.

Loogootee, Ind. R. R. BRAXTAN.

QUAILS were plentiful in this section last season, and although we had severe freezing weather for six weeks during the Winter just passed, and many birds were frozen to death, there are plenty left for propagating purposes.

THEIR FIRST FIND

BY DR. A. C HEFFENGER

One of the chief pleasures in hunting is the entering of young hounds, and when they take quickly and smartly to their fox the huntsman may be excused for taking a pride in them. A simple narrative of an entering chase which took place in the old Granite State on Monday, October 22, 1894, will, no doubt, prove interesting reading for your hunting patrons.

To begin with, a brief description of the youngsters who did the work must be given. There were two, Tempest and Primrose, fine physical types of the new American foxhound standard, and only eleven months old. Their sire, Duke, is a Kentucky hound owned by Mr. N. Q. Pope, and their dam, Rosemary, was imported from the Heythrop Hunt, England, and was owned by Mr. H. A P. Smith, Digby, Nova Scotia. Both sire and dam were models in form and had perfect black, white and tan markings.

And now for the chase. The morning was overcast, with a damp southerly wind of mild force; just such a morning when scent lies strong and holds well. At 7 a. m. the start from home was made, with the veteran July hound Hendricks and the two puppies capering about the horse's head in gleeful expectation. At 7.30 Winchester Woods were reached, five miles from the city, and hounds were at once cast into a small swamp bordering the woods. In a few moments Hendricks challenged an old scent, and Tempest promptly spoke to it. It is just to state that Tempest had been in one chase, and therefore knew what he was out for; but Primrose had never scented a fox, and consequently rushed wildly to and fro to ascertain why the others gave tongue. For nearly two miles through woods, old fields, and swamps Hendricks and Tempest carried the trail; the puppy doing his full share of work and in his trailing over hard places, such as over brush piles and ledges and on top of stone walls, showing an exceptionally fine nose coupled with level-headed perseverance.

After an hour and a half had been spent at this kind of work, and as the trail seemed to be leading toward an unfavorable hunting region, hounds were lifted and taken a quarter of a mile to a swamp well known to be a regular fox walk. After penetrating a short distance into the swamp Hendricks was missed, and was soon heard rejoicing on the cold trail from which he had been lifted. The puppies, however, were still in hand, and when the middle of the swamp was reached Primrose, some distance ahead, began to fly around in an excited manner, sniffing the air. Tempest just then put his nose down in a path ahead and spoke to a hot scent. The trail seemed to lead straight, and off he went on it at a rattling clip, Primrose packing in and singing for dear life. After running about half a mile the fox turned and circled back, the puppies sending him along in great form. Tempest held the drag all the time, but Primrose was right at him and trying hard to get it away. They were soon out of hearing on this circle, and a start was made to catch Hendricks (still on the old trail) and put him in with the puppies. He was found half a mile away, and taken back toward the chase until the puppies could be heard driving, when he went to them.

With the aid of an old, experienced hound new life was infused into the run, and Master Reynard, finding it altogether too hot for him in the swamp, enlarged his circles by taking in a mile length of upland woods. Around this increased area the little pack hustled the wily red-jacket, the faults being few and the cry ringing eager and almost constant. The puppies worked like Trojans, and vied with their old coadjutor in carrying the trail.

Having slipped away from city and practice, with a promise to return at 11 a. m., it was imperative that a move homeward should be made; yet to be in the thick of a red-hot fox chase and leave it in cold blood was a difficult thing to do. Minute after minute slipped by in indecision, until high noon was close at hand before a positive to the city was made, at which time the little pack passed through a swamp not a thousand yards away in full cry, singing a farewell salute.

How long the chase lasted is not known, but Hendricks and Tempest did not return home till nearly 5 p. m.; and Primrose returned sometime during the night.

SWAM THE RAPIDS

PINCKNEY, MICH.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I want to tell you of a grand run we have had. About 7:30 a. m. a sleigh bearing G. W. H— (a man who used to hunt deer where now stands the pleasant little village of Pinckney, but who enjoys a fox chase as well as the youngest of us, and who, in fact, can now outwind most any of 'em in a long chase), B. H— and F. H—, with their foxhounds Sport and Ben, drove up to the door of the writer, where they found willing company in R. E. F— and your humble servant, who brought along his "little runty black and tans," Grover and Ring, and a ten-months old puppy named Sport, by Grover—Ring, making five in all, and each one's nose and voice right with him.

Driving to a place six miles west of town hounds were cast into a dense swamp, and the anxious audience did not have long to wait before Grover's baritone announced that a fox had been there. He was soon joined by the others, adding their tenor and base to the grand chorus that echoed between the hills. Up the side of the hill they went in a bunch, and away across the table land toward a cranberry marsh, where Reynard was found at home. But he started at once for parts unknown, going straight south across Fox Hill and crossing on the ice the Half-Moon and Patterson lakes, making a run of about six miles. But the wily red found he could not shake them off, so back they came with the noble Grover in the van, followed closely by Ring, who was straining every nerve to pass him; the rest were a good third, and the music should have been heard to be appreciated. It was simply grand.

Reynard here made up his mind to travel, so away he went eastward across the township of Putnam, crossing Portage and Bass lakes, and up the Huron River to Strawberry Lake; where, in order to save his brush, he went to ground, with Grovre and the bitch so close after him that he did not have time to go up to the [illegible] cross, but jumped into the water and sw[illegible] the Strawberry Rapids! Thus ended one of [illegible] ever participated in by the writer, it b[illegible] miles in a direct line from the starting [illegible] where the fox went to earth. Spades [illegible] soon procured, and an old ax to chop through the frost. His foxship was soon unearthed and a finer or larger one none of us ever saw; although some said his legs were altogether too long.

But as I am going to have him mounted I shall leave that for others to say.

E. M. FAHEY.

NOTES

THE American foxhound Argonaut, which did a fair amount of winning at the shows for Mr. Roger D. Williams before he sold him to Messrs. Foster & Sullivan, of Brockton, Mass., died on March 17 at the Harvard Veterinary Hospital, in Boston. Death was caused by an abscess in the throat. The dead hound was thought a deal of by its owners, who write: "He was as game a hound as anybody ever owned. We hunted him in Maine last year and the days were none too long for him; a great trailer and very fast, he always was in the lead. He was the most intelligent and had the best disposition of any foxhound we ever owned."

MR J. GIBBS of Columbia Heights, Ill., writes to say that we erred last week in giving Mr. G. M. Gibbs the credit of winning with the English foxhound bitch Vexation, and we cheerfully make the correction. It was Mr. J. Gibbs himself that showed Vexation so successfully, and it was he that lowered her colors at Toronto in 1890 with Vanity, which was poisoned shortly afterward.

THE Meadowbrook drag hounds will meet as follows: April 4, 3 p. m., at Mineola Fair Grounds; April 6, 3:45 p. m., at Wheatley Pond; April 9, 3:45 p. m., at Jericho Tollgate; April 11, 3:45 p. m., at the club house; April 13, 4 p. m., at Jericho; April 16, 4:30 p. m., at Mineola Fair Grounds; April 18, 4 p. m., at the club house.

FOXHOUNDS are offered for sale this week by Mr. H. Oldenhage, Kahoka, Mo.; Mr. F. A. Lockwood, Leopard, Pa.; and Mr. C. W. Travis, Lafayette, Ind.

THE SALMON OF THE PACIFIC COAST

(Illustrated)

BY GEORGE G. CANTWELL

Probably most people hear fish stories at least once a year, if not oftener, and not a few are quite apt in spinning such yarns themselves. It is generally conceded a "good" fish story is the one farthest from the truth, and while everyone, from Jonah down, apparently, has been given to telling fish stories, in the respect of a "good" one the ancient Jonah probably has outdone us all. But aside from his the next best ones doubtless come from the people of the Pacific Coast and are their wonderful salmon tales, yes and talls too. However incredible these stories may appear to Eastern people, "the half has not been told," and what follows is a true fish story, incidents and observations of the writer's novel experiences at his first salmon run.

The salmon, as we know, is a fish of the ocean that periodically runs up the freshwater rivers to spawn. This is the time when the salmon makes himself most conspicuous; before or after the run people seem to care little about him. In fact, where the salmon keep themselves in the meantime seems to be quite a mystery, for they are a scarce fish at all other times. Perhaps they lose themselves in the endless volume of the ocean, to reappear in the freshwater streams during the spawning season. At other times what few are noticed are found along the coast, in the numerous bays and sounds, and only at this time will they allow themselves to be tempted with the angler's alluring baits. In the vicinity of Puget Sound few seem to be taken with the fly; but they strike quite eagerly at a suitable spoon hook, making as exciting sport as can be asked for, and those taken there are considered a finer-flavored fish than salmon from any other waters.

But it is in the Fall of the year, as they travel from the ocean, up the rivers, to the spawning beds at the headwaters, that their presence in enormous [illegible] brings them to the notice of the people. It is [illegible] they rush up the narrow streams in great [illegible] Nothing seems to bar their way, but all crowd along [illegible] a seemingly insane desire to get farther up the river [illegible] the larger streams their progress is comparatively easy. In deep water and where there is plenty of room they [illegible] hurry less and do not show themselves so often [illegible] as.

As [illegible] he swim near the surface, the uppermost [illegible] ei[illegible]ins cutting through the water. [illegible] shallow water ahead, or the banks narrow down, then the fun begins, provided the school is of sufficient size. On approaching a shallow place, the under strata crowd the upper fishes clear out of the water two or three deep. Those that are fortunate enough to remain in the water lash it into a foam in their frantic efforts to get somewhere, while those bringing up the rear attempt to burrow their way underneath but only increase the commotion; and others leap forward only to land upon the backs of the wriggling mass of fishes. They never turn back. Prompted by instinct the salmon are ever crowding forward regardless of consequences. It is at such places that so many meet their fate; men, boys and Indians line the banks, and with pitchforks, rakes, or any convenient device, sail into the slaughter, and soon the grass and bushes in the vicinity are flattened down with the great slippery mass of salmon.

After the first bulk of the school has gotten over the bar, the sport (?) seems to pall the desires of the catchers on the banks, but during the entire run the salmon will be going by in greater or less numbers, and with a gaff they can be hooked out, one at a time, almost without number, all day long. But this is not fast enough for those that come down for a few wagon loads to use as a fertilizer. Think of it! To use the beautiful pink salmon to strew on the ground as so much manure! But such is the fact. I have seen them so plentiful on the banks in a favorite place that twenty-five wagon-boxes-ful were taken away in a single morning, and still plenty were left about for anyone that cared to haul them away.

For a time every household enjoys fresh salmon on the table, but a little of it goes a great way, and shortly one gets deathly tired of salmon! salmon! everywhere. Dogs eat it, cats fight over it, chickens drag it about the back yard, and the boys string the eggs along the sidewalks and throw them about; the creek bottoms smell to the heavens of fish. Whatever salmon the people do not eat, salt down for Winter or fertillze with are turned over to the crows, at the end of the game—and what a racket they make—until nothing remains of the horrible butchery but a few scales in the mud and a lingering odor.

This is what happens every Fall in this country. Sometimes the run is slim, at other times enormous. There may be several varieties in a single school, but they will mainly be of one species as each kind seems to have its own running time. Some say that a certain kind will run only every other year or every third year, but that does not seem to be the case, for each species evidently appears once a year. The date may vary considerably, so may the quantity, but I think all will be found to run each year.

The humpbacked salmon is generally the first to come up stream. They are medium-sized fishes with dark olive upper parts, shading into white on the belly, with a very decided hump in the middle of the back. Their flesh is slightly pink and of good quality. About the last of August a few of the foremost runners may be seen darting up the stream with their razor-like fins cutting smoothly through the water. By the time fishes are noticed in the Puyallup River one may be sure the market fishermen have their gill-nets and various traps set out in the bay, around Tacoma and the mouth of the river. Early salmon are, like early vegetables, delicacies that bring good prices, but in a short time the novelty wears off and they are a drug on the market, fine salmon which weigh five pounds selling for but five cents.

The silver salmon may be looked for next. They will also be found with the humpbacks, or likely may be the first to run; but however this may be the two groups will hold their own individuality when the main band of each species runs.

The silver salmon holds the first place of his kind for beauty, and for the excellent flavor of his firm pink flesh; and is, also, one of the most plentiful. During the run they all seem to be remarkably even in size, about two feet long and of about five pounds' weight. We do not get the monstrous twenty-five-pound salmon that occur in Alaska and the Columbia River; one of over ten or fifteen pounds is not often taken here.

The run of one species will be completed in about two weeks. There are stragglers at first, but the numbers increase until the main body arrives. This horde takes two or three days in passing a given point, and goes by in schools each an hour or so apart. At such times the salmon fairly push the water back in the small brooks or cause temporary dams in good-sized streams. In traveling up the rivers they keep near the shore, and when they [illegible] waters of a tributary stream upon [illegible] effort to rush up. If the stream [illegible] choked up at the mouth with the [illegible] hers pass on, up the river, while [illegible] creek. It is a lucky fish that is able to run the gantlet of spears, gaffs, pitchforks and guns to the headwaters and lay its eggs.

To the Siwash Indians of this country and, in fact, all the coast tribes, the coming of the salmon is one of the great features of the year. It also happens just in the height of the hop-picking season, and the Puyallup Valley is a great rendezvous for Indians about that time. They come from all along the coast, some in great war canoes from Alaska holding a hundred persons or more, the bow of each canoe being prolonged and turned up at the end, and carved in imitation of some animal, fish or reptile. They camp for a month or more in some convenient spot and pick hops, and, incidentally, cure salmon, which is their principal food while here, and a generous load goes back with them. The Indians use no salt in curing fishes. They merely open and clean them and lay them upon a loose framework of sticks, covered at the top, with a smoky fire underneath. It takes three or four days to cure a lot of fishes in this way, and I think they are sometimes exposed to the sun's rays to hasten the process.

The Puyallup River runs through the Puyallup Indian reservation near here, and two Summers ago the Indians built a fish dam across the river to catch the early run of salmon that in point of architecture was decidedly unique, not a nail being used in the entire construction of a fence-like dam 200 feet or more long. It was made of logs, poles and sticks, all firmly bound together with willow switches. The lattice work affair allows the water to flow freely through it, but at the same time does not allow salmon coming up-stream to pass.

This dam was a direct violation of the law, which says: "It is unlawful to build or maintain a dam across any stream in this state without providing a suitable fish ladder on same." On the down-stream side of the dam were arranged half a dozen platforms, that would accommodate two or three men each. Thereon sat a patient "Cumtuck," as the Siwash are generally called from the expression, "Halloo Cumtucks;" which, I suppose means about the same as the "How" of other Indians.

The Indian who sits on one of these holds in his hands a dip-net about four feet across, attached to a long pole to the meshes of the net are tied four strings, at different places, which lead up a yard or so and are connected to a continuous string the other end of which is tied to his forefinger. The net is then lowered into the water, snug up against the dam, the string on his finger is tightened, and "Cumtuck" awaits results.

A salmon coming up-stream will eventually bump his nose against the dam, and being unable to get through starts to swimming up and down looking for an opening. In doing so he is sure to swim over one of the nets and wiggles the string. The old "Cumtuck" realizes he has a bite, quickly draws up the net, and rarely misses his fish, sometimes getting several at once. It is a pretty sure case for the salmon, at any rate; for if one Indian misses him he will persistently swim back and forth until finally caught by one of the nets in use.

This mode of fishing is kept up until salmon get plentiful, and the Indians realize quite a sum of cash by their sales during the first of the season. But in due time the salmon become very plentiful and are almost common property.

During the latter part of October, 1893, the salmon were said to be running plentifully in Clear Creek, a tributary to the Puyallup River that joins it a few miles below this city, and my several visits to the locality will not soon be forgotten. On the road to the creek we passed six or eight heavy wagon loads of fishes, and when within a half mile of the place we could detect the fishy smell very easily. When finally there a man with no nose at all might have known that there were dead fishes about. The scene was all bustle and confusion. The narrow little road beside the creek bottom was crowded with teams. Some people were in light buggies sightseeing, others with big wagons were getting into favorable positions to load up with salmon. A few ladies were attracted to the place, and a couple of them armed with gaffs took a hand in the catch.

On either side of the creek and in it was a mixed crowd of men, boys and Indians, all yelling at the tops of their voices, and every one wet to the skin and salmon splashing about everywhere. The banks, and almost every dry spot in the creek bottom, were literally strewn with salmon, stacked up in great piles in places ready to be carted away. Where the creek passed under the wagon bridge it was deep and badly roiled up by the fishes, but it was not necessary to see them to catch them. The boys on the bank would thrust their long gaffs into the muddy pool, and with a violent jerk draw them toward them almost invariably with a fish on the hook. There they stood by the hour, jabbing back and forth with their sharp-pointed gaffs among the helpless fishes, throwing them off the hooks behind them, where they would flop about for a while and finally die.

For a change we moved up the creek to where it branches out into many lateral streams and winds in and out among the bushes, under logs and over rocks. In these narrow places it is swift-running, and for the most part not over six inches in depth. There one could see the fishes to his entire satisfaction, for their great flopping bodies were all about. They made no effort to conceal themselves but boldly squirmed their way over the shallow sandbars with two-thirds of their bodies out of water. In fact, they seemed quite stupid for fishes that are usually so wild and wary; even when the creek was full of noisy men they splashed right by, singly, in pairs, and in schools. Occasionally a salmon would stop in a quiet nook and balance on its fins, and seem utterly oblivious to its surroundings, and anyone could reach down and catch it easily in his hands, and if his grip was good could throw it out upon the bank.

We were soon cautiously making our way along the underbrush to avoid getting wet, when we came to a pool about twenty-five feet across with only a few inches of water in it, but just packed full of fishes for all the world like so many sardines. We stood for a moment looking at them, not noticing that the water spaniel we had along and who had been having a glorious time all the morning was down at the edge of the water curiously watching the tail of a big salmon that was waving half out of water just in front of him. Presently he jumped at it, and getting hold of it near the base of the tail, evidently intended to drag it out. But what a commotion it produced. It startled the entire school and the spray began to fly all over us, and before we could beat a retreat all hands were pretty wet. We did not watch the dog, but when we did look for him he was decidedly "in the swim," snapping right and left at the floundering fishes. He would no sooner get a good hold of one than he would see a better one (I suppose he thought) and chase after that. If he could hold the one that suited his fancy he would pull it out on the shore and chew it or bark at it when it flopped about, then he would jump back into the water while we sat on the bank and laughed at his frantic efforts to get several at once. He must have dragged out half a dozen or more when he finally gave it up and lay down in the weeds, panting and thoroughly used up, but his eyes still glowing with excitement.

After the salmon had quieted down I thought this would be a good subject on which to try the camera that we had brought along with us. After a few preliminary arrangements I finally "pressed the button," changed the plates and got ready for the next "snap" with all the conscientious exactness of most amateurs. But alas! "the best laid plans" etc. By the ruby light, as the developer washes back and forth over the precious plates we so often fall to have our expectations realized. Oh no, we do not admit our shortcomings to others. A friend asks:

"Well, how did the pictures turn out?"

"Not very well," we say; "the light was not very good under those trees; the sun wasn't right; the plates were bad," and a thousand and one other excuses one can make to the uninitiated, for if he does not know he will not attempt to argue the point or dispute one's word. But when this mysterious person is alone in his dark room you might hear remarks something like this:

"Wish it wasn't so muddy looking; that's overtimed sure."

"I guess I didn't give this one time enough. I can't make things out; there is Herb's white hat, but I guess there isn't much else," and he saves it for a print, anyway. The next plate he picks up seems terribly mixed up, trees growing out of the sky, houses upside down and ghost-like girls with parasols that you can look clear through and see the steps of a summer cottage behind them. But he does not get alarmed at suoh strange things; he is quite used to it; he has only made two exposures on the same plate, that is all. His last plate don't seem to come up at all. After figuring on it a while, he finally concludes that: "Darned if I didn't forget to draw the slide!" and he mechanically puts his plates in the hypo, turns down the red light and walks off in a brown study.

In my case I came across all sorts of interesting scenes and made ten exposures but got only half a dozen poor pictures. I tried in vain to photograph the fishes in the water, but the only part that showed at all was their backs and those were so much the color of the water as to be almost indistinguishable, and to try and take a snap shot of them jumping about under the shady bushes proved to be useless; and to attempt a time exposure on a moving subject would be worse yet; so try as I would the pictures I wanted the most were the most difficult to get.

We were soon started again working our way through the underbrush. One who has never "run up" against the brush of this country can know nothing of its almost impenetrable character. The bushes and ferns grow thick and rank, the whole is firmly laced together with various sorts of climbing vines, and everything seems to have prickers on it, blackberries, gooseberries, nettles, fir needles, and devil's clubs. This latter is a new creature to me. I met it, all of a sudden, one day, while after a blue grouse, by slipping off a log right into a bunch of it. It is a vigorous sort of weed that grows to the height of a man's head, about an inch in diameter at the base of the stalk, with branches sprawling out in all directions, the entire surface of the plant covered with fine needle-like points.

The stock that I grabbed as I fell shed a generous quantity of these points and left them in the palm of my hand. In attempting to pull them out I found the tip or barb still remained in the flesh and made it very painful. Those I could not dig out with a pin point festered out later, but my hand was useless for several days.

Tradition says that the prickers of the devil's club if not removed will eventually work to the heart, pierce it and cause death; but this story most likely was originated by the boy whose father declared that porcupines throw their quills at an enemy.

But one incident from life that is just as good happened while along the creek bottom where a fellow was shooting at the fishes with a .22-caliber rifle. He was using the ordinary U. M. C. shells and just after loading the gun he opened it again with the remark, "That won't do," and twisted the shell around a little in the breech. When asked why he did this he replied: "The cartridge would not go unless put in with the U right side up!"

My friend winked at me and we moved on, up the creek, to where we came upon an old "Cumtuck" lying on a log that spanned one of the narrow channels with a knife in his right hand, the blade of which was about eighteen inches long, sticking the salmon in the back as they swam by. He would occasionally throw one out onto the back, but he seemed principally to be thrusting the knife blade into their backs for mere devilishness. Those that got the knife fairly in the vertebra seemed to die instantly and would float down belly up; the others would swim on up-stream with great, gaping holes in their sides and were soon lost sight of in the crowds ahead of them. One caught the knife along the side which the Indian attempted to throw out onto the bank, but the sharp edge of the knife happened to be uppermost and it ripped up the salmon's belly almost the entire length, and the fish fell back into the stream; but no sooner had it struck the water than it darted up-stream leaving a trail of blood and eggs behind.

Again, as one big silver salmon came along, the Indian drove his knife into it so firmly that the fish wrenched it from his grasp and went rapidly up the stream with "Cumtucks" chasing after the knife that was bobbing around the rocks, until the fish attempted to go through some brush, where it caught and the knife was recovered.

And so it went on all day long. The run was a mixed lot—silver salmon, dog salmon and red salmon. The dog salmon is a yellowish, ugly looking fish with a mouth full of big teeth. No one eats them except the Siwash Indians. The red salmon is a handsome fish, something like a salmon trout; has a dark back with bright red underparts; and is excellent eating but of rather small size.

We went farther up the creek and came to a dam, with a sheet of water running over the top to a pool below where the water was fairly alive with fishes as they could get no further up-stream. There were several wagons backed up to the edge, and men with pitchforks were filling them with fish. Other wagons were waiting for places, and there seemed to be enough salmon for everyone. Others, still, drove their wagons down the shallow creeks where they could easily collect a load from the banks, upon which the fishes had been hooked out and left. A few of the best ones were laid aside for eating, but the greater part of them when they get this far inland are pretty badly bruised. Their sides are covered with black and blue blotches from striking objects in the water, and their noses and backs are generally badly skinned.

Along in the afternoon the run generally lets up considerably, and the greater part of the fishes which have not been taken out of the stream have spear holes in their bodies and are sure to die sooner or later. How the poor fishes get a chance to lay their eggs in such a place I cannot see unless it is during the night, for they are constantly kept on the move all day while they remain.

The people here say that the salmon which come up the river to spawn never return to the ocean; those that are not caught die anyway, they say. This seems unreasonable, but, nevertheless, the salmon are never noticed going back; if they do go, it must be very quietly or at night for no one ever seems to notice them.

All in all, the salmon is a great and mysterious fish, instinctively crowding its way up the freshwater streams once a year to spawn and propagate its kind only to meet its cruel and unwarranted fate. But considering the frightful slaughter that annually takes place it seems to have no effect in thinning out their numbers, for, in the words of the poet, we can justly say, "men may come and men may go, but I go on forever."

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE CHICAGO FLY CASTING CLUB—AN OPEN TOURNAMENT.

CHICAGO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The fourth annual meeting of the Chicago Fly Casting Club was held in the Grand Pacific Hotel, Monday evening, April 1, George W. Strell in the chair, F. B. Davidson, secretary. There were present Messrs. J. E. Strong, F. B. Orr, H. D. Osgood, W. H. Babcock, G. A. Murrell, R. B. Miller, Charles Antoine, and J. M. Clark. Letters of regret at not being able to be present, and offering suggestions, were read from several members who were out of the city, and others.

After the roll call and reading of minutes the Secretary-Treasurer read his report, which was concurred in. It showed a balance in the treasury of $64.57; also a lot of paraphernalia for the successful holding of tournaments; also an unpaid loan of $55, which was contracted to pay off bills due on the Columbian Exposition Izaak Walton House. The house has now become historic and is still standing on the banks of the lagoon where was given the most successful scientific angling tournament ever held.

The distribution of the gold and silver club medals won by those making the highest average in twelve contests during the past year was made, as follows: Dry fly casting, F. B. Davidson, 94%; distance and accuracy fly casting, C. Essig, 91%: long distance fly casting, Class A, B. W. Goodsell, average 84 feet; Class B, C. Essig; bait casting, for beating world's record, F. B. Davidson, average five casts, 167 1-5 feet; bait casting, Class B, R. B. Miller, average 102 feet; Columbian silver medal, longest amateur bait casting average, F. B. Davidson, 152 feet.

The election of officers for the ensuing year being in order nominations were called for. Mr. Strong nominated Mr. George W. Strell, which was seconded by several. Mr. Strell thanked the club for the honor it wished to confer, but, in a speech which would be effective at any other time, declined. Mr. Strong would notwithdraw his nomination, and urged it by saying that he "knew of no man who could have piloted the club so successfully through the most trying times of its existence and brought it to the front rank without blemish as well as our present president, and the club needs his executive ability for another year, as important innovations are to be undertaken, and for which I know and feel he is peculiarly well fitted." Mr. Strell again declined, promising to do all he could to further the interests of the club as a lay member, and nominated Mr. Orr for president, a gentleman of great executive ability and a right royal angler. There being no second Mr. Orr called for the balloting. Mr. Strell was about to decline for the third time, when Mr. Davidson said: "Mr. Strong could not have made a better nomination or for better reasons, which I know are shared by all here; but I will supplement his reasons by stating that from personal intercourse with Mr. Strell I know whatever he does is done with judgment, foresight, and for the good of any cause in which he is enlisted, and as I and others here know that he has been made the target for many unjust, scurrilous and unfounded charges by journalistic competitors of his, I for one do not propose to lose a good officer by allowing him to hide himself; and as he will not put the motion I do." Whereupon Mr. George W. Strell was unanimously elected to a third term, his protests being of no avail.

Mr. Strell feelingly expressed his thanks for the vote of confidence expressed, and outlined a policy he would pursue for the ensuing year, but desired time to formulate plans more fully, as his election was entirely unexpected, concluding by saying that when his successor was elected he hoped to turn over a club so strong and firmly established that its own momentum would carry it on forever.

Other nominations being in order Mr. J. Edmund Strong was nominated for vice-president, [illegible] secretary-treasurer, and J. E. Strong, [illegible] B. Goodsell, executive committee. [illegible] unanimously to the offices for which [illegible] inated.

Two weeks' notice having been given [illegible] ment would be offered at this meeting to reduce the initiation fee and dues, it was moved, seconded and carried that the initiation fee be made five dollars and annual dues three dollars.

Mr. Chas. Antoine moved that the club establish, as one of its features, an annual outing of two weeks, either before June 15 or after August 15, the same to be adjacent to trout and bass waters, and that the chair appoint a committee of two to arrange for transportation and select a site, and report at the next meeting. The motion met with cordial favor and was carried. The chair appointed Messrs. Antoine and Strong as the site and transportation committee.

Mr. Davidson moved that a commissary committee of two be appointed to ascertain the cost of and arrange for tents, beds, cooking utensils, boats, provisions, and everything necessary for the domestic comfort of members while on the outing. Carried. The chair appointed Messrs. Clark and Murrell.

The annual outing was then voted a fixture. Members will have the pleasure of staying from a day or two up to two weeks, just as business or time will permit, at a minimum cost, and the rollicking times of a jolly good club of anglers, with fish galore, is sure to increase the membership of the club.

The club also decided to give a second grand fly and bait casting tournament, open to the world, in August next, full particulars of which will be announced in ample time for all anglers to prepare for it. It is hoped clubs throughout the country will send representatives to compete for the prizes.

On motion of Mr. Babcock the club indebtedness of $55 was ordered paid.

It was decided to hold semi-monthly club contests for medals, commencing the second Saturday in May and every second and fourth Saturday of each month thereafter until the last of September, possibly, the matter being left in the hands of the executive committee to report with other committees at the next meeting.

On motion the meeting adjourned.

F. B. DAVIDSON, Secretary.

NOTES

THE same sad report of the destruction of fishes by the long-continued severe weather of the past Winter now comes from Michigan. A recent dispatch from Niles says: "The ice is now out of Barren Lake, near this city, and a peculiar sight is presented. The shore is lined with dead fishes, and they lie on the edge of the water by thousands. Great black bass, weighing from one to six pounds, are piled up by the wagon load. Evidently all the black bass in the lake are dead. There is no solution to the phenomenon, unless the thick and long-continued ice of the Winter shut out the air and killed the fishes." If the lack of air has killed all these fine game fishes we would suggest that it would be well, in the future, in all sections of our land where fishing through the ice is prohibited, if all fish and game protective associations would keep tab on the thermometer, and, whenever such a protracted and severe Winter endangers the fishes, see that a sufficient number of air holes are cut in all well-stocked waters within the association's jurisdiction to preserve the fishes.

DURING the first of this week a strange and sad sight was presented to persons standing upon the shores of East Ohabera Lake near Worthington, Minn. Along the shores of that beautiful body of water were thousands upon thousands of dead and decaying fishes, of all sizes and kinds. It is not a very deep lake, although it has a shore line nearly four miles in length, and last Winter the lake froze to the bottom, killing every fish in it. The ice in the lake broke up on March 31, and the fishes floated to shore and are fast decaying. The board of health has taken the matter in hand and a large force of men are burying the fishes in long trenches. The same thing happened there during the Spring of 1871.

A RECENT dispatch from Bay Shore, Long Island, says a fish net fifty feet square, equipped with wings 600 feet long, and weighing in all about 2,700 pounds, has been constructed for the proprietors of a big fish-canning factory on the bay at that place, and is to be set in the ocean off Fire Island. Instead of being set with stakes, it will be anchored. It is estimated that the daily catch will fill a good-sized boat. This will be the first attempt at ocean net fishing. The steamer Henry L. Brown will bring in the catches daily. Weakfish and bluefish will be the principal fishes caught.

ALTHOUGH sad destruction of game fishes has been reported from various sections, it seems the severe Winter weather did not prove so disastrous in all parts of our land. Dr. R. R. Braxtan, of Loogootee, Ind., writes us as follows: "Bass are beginning to show themselves in fairly good numbers within the last few days, [illegible] fishermen predict a successful fishing season. [illegible] gratifying to know the decimation of the finny [illegible] not prove general, else lovers of the gentle sport would have had a poor outlook for their favorite avocation for several years to come.

THE eastern brook trout open season commenced April [illegible] this week, in New York (excepting two or [illegible] New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Connecti[illegible] southward there is little likelihood [illegible] the supply to any great extent by ordinary angling methods. There is still much snow in sheltered spots in hilly sections, and troutsmen all know their favorite fish will not take bait or lures with any avidity until after the snow water has run off. Therefore trout will be protected by natural conditions for some little time to come.

UNDER the date of March 27, a dispatch from Laporte, Ind., says that Orr's Lake near that place, which has been a noted bass fishing ground, is ruined for sport for some time to come. The fishes are all dead, and line the shores and float upon the surface of the water by thousands. Some of the bass would weigh six pounds. The awful stench arising is dangerous to human health. It is supposed the fishes were suffocated by the thick ice excluding the air from them too long during the past severe Winter weather.

ON March 28, at Liverpool, N. Y., Special Game Protector Patten, of the Onondaga County Anglers' Association, arrested Harry Jackson, a former game protector for the same organization, upon the charge of fishing illegally with a seine, in Onondaga Lake, last October. Mr. Jackson was taken before Justice Hand, at Liverpool, where he pleaded not guilty and the case was set for Wednesday of this week. We shall await the outcome with some interest.

AT Swan Lake, Me., a number of good-sized fishes have been taken lately, says the Journal of Belfast; one caught by Augustine Colburn weighed five pounds and one ounce. The legislature has appropriated $25,000 for the use of the fish and game commission in the interior, and a suitable amount for the purposes of the commissioner of sea and shore fisheries. A much needed enactment was the protection of lobsters by making it illegal to take them when under ten and one-half inches in length.

IN California Governor Budd has appointed James M. Morrison, a prominent sportsman of Sacramento, state fish and game commissioner to succeed Joseph D. Redding, who has resigned. As the newly appointed official is much interested in fish and game matters, it is thought he will render the state efficient service.

ON March 13, the Wisconsin state fish car Badger left Madison with 360,000 trout fry, bound upon a trip through the northern part of the state for the purpose of liberating batches of fry in various waters. The car and its contents were in charge of Henry Sykes, a veteran in fish propagation matters.

AT Erie, Pa., the work of the state hatchery on whitefish has been finished and fry to the amount of 25,000,000 have been deposited in Lake Erie, making about 200,000 000 which have been placed in that lake at Erie,

IN New Jersey, Mr. John R. Riley, of Newark, who made an excellent record as a warden in that county, is a prominent candidate for the office of state fish and game protector.

Natural History

THE REPTILES OF MICHIGAN—NO. 11

BY MORRIS GIBBS

Garter-snake, striped-snake, common streaked-snake—Eutainia sirtalis (Linn.).—There are at least five or six varieties of this snake known in the Union and at different times some of them have been called species. The sirtalis, dorsalis, obscura, parietalis and ordinata are said to be found in Michigan, and I think it positive that the first three are taken in abundance. Sirtalis is the commoner variety, and without reference to the distinguishing marks of these serpents, a description will be given which will embrace the habits of all.

The common garter-snake is more often found in marshes or in fields bordering lakes or rivers; and, sometimes, the serpents are found in the water. I do not think they take to the water by preference, but are found in these situations while prosecuting their search for prey. This species is quite pugnacious at times and will strike savagely at one's hand or anything placed near it; but, in addition to the fact that it is a very poor marksman and rarely hits what it is driving at, the bite amounts to nothing, even from the largest specimens. As a rule, however, the streaked-snake is exceedingly docile, often does not attempt to defend itself in any way, and may be taken in the hands without a showing of the

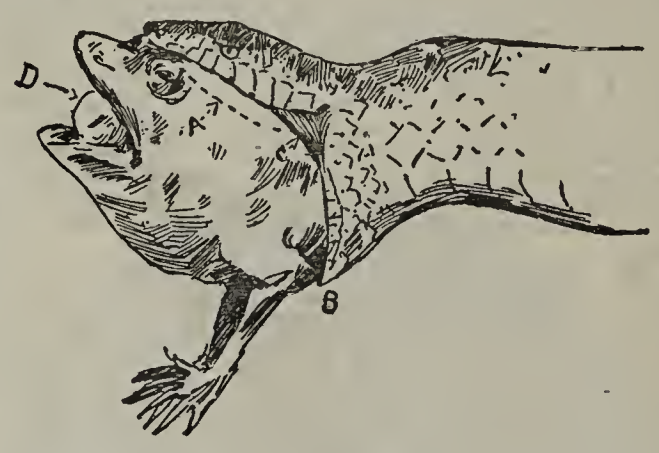
[illegible]ue a refractory snake, it may be [illegible]ng it by the tail and rapidly revolving [illegible] to secure a firm hold so that the tail [illegible] generally effectually subdue all of our [illegible] savage fellows comple'ely subjugated [illegible]se, it will not work with safety on

But if the numerous small, sharp teeth are unavailing against man and its greater enemies—the red-tailed, red-shouldered and marsh hawks—they are all-sufficient in the capture of its prey, which is mainly frogs and toads. I have often watched this streaked-snake at his slow process of dining, and think that a few notes will interest the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD.

When a frog or small mammal is seized, a struggle for life ensues, which rarely results in the escape of the victim, but usually the doomed captive disappears slowly and surely. First one hindleg, then the other, then the body, gradually, and last of all the head. This is the method generally followed, which I have witnessed repeatedly in several species, from the garter-snake of two feet to a boa of twelve feet, and the description will apply equally to all species of Michigan snakes with which I am acquainted. There are some peculiarities in the act of swallowing worth observing. When the prey is taken into the mouth as far as it will easily pass, that is, fills the mouth, the lower jaw becomes detached in its bony connection from the upper. It is pressed further and further from its usual connection as the mass to be engulfed progresses, but is still retained in its relation by a very extensible ligamentous connection, or tenacious, elastic hinge as we may call it. This elasticity is also shared in by the integument at the angle of the jaws. The distensibility is so great in these parts that an individual of this species, measuring seven-sixteenths of an inch from one side of its jaw to the other, can readily swallow a frog seven-eighths of an inch at the greatest width of bony frame work. In this instance taken from actual measurements of the creatures on May 25, 1885, the 'rog was about five inches long.

In addition to the partial dislocation in the act of swallowing the lower jaw is necessarily drawn down or retracted, and at the time of the greatest distension the jaws are at an angle of 110 degrees, the upper one presenting forward and slightly upward, while the lower jaw points downward and backward.

In descriptions of this act we read much to the effect that the snake could not live during the performance of the process, were it not for the power it possesses of throwing its glottis or upper part of its windpipe forward, thereby permitting the serpent to breathe during the strain. Articles have often stated that a serpent would die from stoppage of respiration were it not for this wise provision. It is just possible that a protrusion of the end of the trachea would prevent the danger, if danger there be, but it seems to me that the pressure further down would be sufficient to occlude the air passage. I think it fair to maintain that the reptile does not breathe while performing the act of engulfing its prey. All the cold-blooded animals can survive a considerable time without breathing and without inconvenience. A water-snake can remain under water for a full half hour, and the process of engulfing prey does not occupy over half of that length of time, while the time of greatest distension and strain will, I believe, average less than five minutes.



As will be seen by the accompanying cut representing a streaked-snake swallowing a live frog, A represents the exact size of the head when in normal position, as shown by dotted line; the efforts at swallowing have retracted the lower jaw till its point is at B; at C is seen the elastic integument at the angle of the jaws; D represents the tongue of the frog, showing how it is forced out of the mouth by the constrictions of the snake.

In Spring, when the snakes emerge from their Winter quarters, they soon look about for food, and will fasten onto almost anything that can be swallowed, and sometimes to creatures that cannot be devoured. Often a small snake will try to engulf a toad that is out of all proportion as a mouthful, and, apparently, far too large to swallow. Still, I am not prepared to say that a two-foot streaked-snake could not get outside of the biggest frog in the marsh, if given plenty of time. Often, in my rambles, a streaked-snake of twenty inches or so would be seen holding onto a toad of the largest size, in truth, in weight more than equal to its captor. The toad would struggle vainly to escape, and would occasionally tear away and make a hop or two, only to be seized again by the fine sharp teeth of its captor. Placing a heavy stone on the snake's tail to prevent escape I have gone my way, and only returned several hours later to find the unequal contest still going on and the poor toad's skin lacerated and bleeding, while the victim still escaped its tomb by vigorous kicks. One creature ravenous for prey, while the other was too weak to escape, yet too active and, perhaps, too large to be swallowed.

Toads are more difficult to swallow than frogs, whereas the latter from their greater activity are captured with more difficulty, and I have seen frogs which were mutilated and bleeding make their escape. It has always appeared to me that snakes must creep up on and capture frogs when they were unconscious of danger, for it i hardly possible that a snake could catch a strong-limbed frog of the marshes. I would like to witness a race between a blue-racer and a full-sized leopard frog. The toad has no chance to escape, and readily falls a prey to any prowling serpent, and I feel satisfied that these use ful animals are destroyed in great numbers by garter and other snakes.

This species, like the others of the genus, is ovoviviparous. The number of young at a birth is variable, and I cannot but think that stories are often exaggerated in regard to this matter as well as in all others pertaining to snake lore, or to the want of it. Professor F. W. Putnam informs* us that on July first he found, in a female thirty-five inches long, forty-two nearly developed young, each of which was five inches and one-half long. Dr. J. Schenck†, of Mt. Carmel, Ill., says that from a female thirty-five inches long he took seventy-eight young from three to seven inches in length. They were confined in egg cases, excepting twenty which were free. In the Reptiles of Indiana, by O. P. Hay, the author says he took thirty-nine young from an Indiana streaked-snake in August.

I was still more astonished at reading in Cope's‡ "A Critical Review of the Characters and Variations of the Snakes of North America," these words: "Professor Baird mentions a specimen of E. sirtalis which produced eighty young at a birth." In my experience I have never yet met with a specimen which held thirty embryos, while one contained but nine young and the average number of young of five individuals was but fourteen. These figures from Michigan are quite at variance with other notes which I have at hand, and I should like to inquire if the difference in locality is the cause of the variance?

The streaked-snake, like all others of the ovoviviparous species, and also some of the oviparous snakes, is credited with the habit (so-called) of swallowing its young. I have never yet observed this act, which, if an actual occurrence, is remarkable. The act is recorded by good authorities and by men in whom we have every confidence, but even with the best authority I will take exceptions, until it is proved that the young snakes pass into the stomach proper. Let us consider this interesting subject. Webster's unabridged dictionary, latest edition, defines the verb swallow, "To take into the stomach;" and many other authorities—cyclopedias and physiologies—describe swallowing as the act of deglutition; the performance is produced through the act of certain muscles of the throat, and particularly with the œsophagus. If, then, the young snakes seek a retreat in the stomach of their parent, by simply running down the gullet as she holds her mouth open, it must not be taken as the act of swallowing, and I do not think that a true naturalist and physiologist will use the word to describe this act. But allowing that the parent snake does thus conceal her offspring, does it follow that the young pass into the stomach proper? I think not, and feel that all who are thinkers, and especially those who have taken pains to carefully dissect a snake, will agree with me. I am sure that physiologists will support my opinion, although I am free to confess that I have no absolute proof to support my theory. Let us consider a snake's internal anatomy.

Holding a snake by the head and with a sharp knife cutting a slit through the under parts, from the neck to the lower portion of the abdomen, the internal structure can be nicely exposed and with very little work. The heart will be found well forward and at the front part of the single lung, which is long and lapped over the anterior portion of the equally long, narrow liver. Still back of this is an enlargement in the esophagus, which we might say corresponds to the crop in birds, and which undoubtedly is a storage place for food when the stomach is already filled. This receptacle possibly is connected with the process of digestion, and as an assistant we may say. But the the actual digestion takes place in another stomach still further back. Many a gorged specimen has been dissected by me, and the following condition has always been observed: Frogs, birds, or small mammals have been found in the enlargement, and they appeared well soaked with the secretions of the parts; while the body which had passed into the true stomach was found disintegrated, and fast undergoing the process of digestion.

If the alimentary canal is removed from the snake and tied at one end and inflated with air, it will be found that this enlargement in the gullet is larger and more distensible than the stomach proper. This first enlargement is to about one-third the length of the body from the head, while the true stomach is still beyond, and, say, at three inches in a good-sized snake, and at about half the total length of the creature. These measurements are not exact as the viscera vary in position as to the total length in different species. The enlargement, together with the stomach, is capable of holding at least a pound's weight in food and I have repeatedly discovered three or four bodies of birds, frogs, etc., and, in one case, five separate victims in the tract.

*American Naturalist II, 134. †American Naturalist XVI, 1008.

It does not seem unlikely that the young snakes may seek a refuge in this enlargement of the gullet in case of danger, but I will not admit that this act is in any sense secured by the process of swallowing. Neither is it acknowledged that the young enter the true stomach, for, if they did, the stomach juices would kill and digest them. If anyone can prove that I am wrong, the proofs will be examined with interest.

Some snakes devour other snakes, and the act has been observed where a thick-set individual has engulfed another which was longer than itself. These snake-eating snakes swallow their victims alive; and sometimes, a snake has been known to devour others of its own kind. Now if this is so, and we are assured of the truthfulness of the assertion by those who have studied the subject (though ifs are always consistent in all snake matters) then any live snakes, old or young, would die and be digested if taken into the true stomach of any other snake.

On the appearance of cold weather in late October or in November these snakes, as with all others of my acquaintance, seek a place of concealment and lie dormant. Certain seasons I have seen individuals as late as November 20, and, again, none were met with after the middle of October. They sometimes appear very early in the Spring. Professor Hay has observed them on March 7 in Indiana, and I have met with them on warm days by March 20 in Michigan, when snow was still on the ground.

In April the streaked-snakes begin to shed their skins, and it is just possible that this species exuviates twice during the year, as many shed their skins in May and June and as late as August.

NOTES

THE spirit of reform is becoming manifest, even in rural districts. A dispatch from Princeton, Ill., under date of March 28, says: "The bounty of ten dollars a head on wolf scalps, in force for twenty years in Bureau County, was repealed by the board of supervisors to-day. The payments for scalps have occasionally exceeded $1,200 in a single year, to obtain which it has been ascertained a number of persons have been breeding the animals on what are known as wolf farms. They had been raising the animals in as large quantities as the county was willing to buy." It seems the farmers of Illinois are not to be classed as residents of the "effete East," for they are fully up in the advanced zoölogical practices of the northwestern (Nebraskan, we believe) breeders of coyotes and wolves for scalp bounties.

SEVERAL years ago a gentleman of Philadelphia named Oscar Fow, who has a Summer residence in West Cape May Township, N. J., brought from Florida two alligators about as long as a man's hand. The little saurians were allowed to roam about the premises and during the Winters were kept in the cellar of the house. Last Fall, when about three feet in length, the alligators disappeared, and were lost for some time. But one day Nicholas Swain saw them sunning themselves on the banks of Cape May Creek, and since that time tokens of their vigor have been found lying upon the banks in the shape of the bones of defunct canines. The alligators are now supposed to be in the creek and when warm weather comes if they forage for food efforts will be made to capture them.

IN the magnificent granite mausoleum which has been erected in California for the final disposition of the remains of Mrs. Fair and her family will repose the petrified body of her father, Mr. Thomas Rooney. His remains were interred first at Angel's Camp, Calaveras County, where the ground is heavily charged with silica, the result being they were soon petrified and attained a weight of 600 pounds.

AT Buffalo, N. Y., two buffalo cows from Northern Texas have been added to the collection of animals at the North Park. Supt. McMillan made a trip to Texas, bought the animals and attended to their transportation in box cars. The buffaloes cost $500 each, and it is said the Texas owner has on hand several hundred of the animals.

AMONG the presents to Prince Bismarck, the veteran German statesman, which recently reached Friedrichsruhe, his home, were two American bisons from the Cincinnati Zoölogical Garden.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—NO. 11

(Illustrated)

BY A. K. DELANEY

The Gold Discoveries of Alaska

The great gold-bearing zone of North America has now been traced from the Sierra Madres to the St. Elias Alps and the Basin of the Yukon. When on that bright, sharp, January day of 1848 James W. Marshall picked up a few kernels of coarse gold from the tail-race of Sutter's sawmill, located on the American Fork, forty-five miles from where the city of Sacramento now stands, he little dreamed of the far-reaching consequences of his discovery.

Not the least remarkable of the many results that have transpired was the uprising of that army of pioneer miners and prospectors which sprang like magic into life. The vanguard of that army has never yet disbanded. When one has stepped from the ranks with his fortune made, or another has fallen beside the trail and his comrades have laid him to final rest amid the solitudes of the wilderness, new recruits have soon filled the vacant places and the guard has moved on until now its march has covered the great continental divide, from Mexico to the trackless wastes of Central Alaska. Along this line of march to-day repose in the majesty of great American states California, Nevada, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho and Washington. Territorial boundary lines, though established by international treaty bearing the illustrious names of Webster and Ashburton, have proved no barrier to the gold-hunting van, and British Columbia has long ago been invaded by the restless and ever-advancing prospector, and its streams and gulches have been swept clean of the yellow gold. The rattle of the prospector's gold pan, the click of the miner's pick and the scrape of his shovel had scarcely ceased in the Selkirks, the Cariboo and the Cassiar before the smoke of new campfires was curling amid she St. Elias Alps and in the Tannanah Hills of the Yukon Basin. But the end is not far off. Beyond Alaska there are no more lands for American pioneers to conquer. In all probability, with the close of the camps here, placer mining in North America will have passed away forever, and the guard will then be mustered out. Perhaps no better reason for the following chronicle need be given:

In 1862 the first work on the bars of the Stickeen River commenced, and the next season found Fort Wrangel somewhat awakened from the lethargy of an old Russian trading-post and garrison as the miners continued to push for the new diggings in spite of Russian op[illegible]. The deposits, however, proved to be small an[illegible] was short-lived, although a few of the [illegible] continued to operate there until th[illegible] Cassiar, by McCullough and Thibert [illegible] were rewarded by the rich output o[illegible] gings.

After these fields were exhausted [illegible] of veteran miners were attracted to Sitka, in 1879, by rumors of gold in the Silver Bay district, several miles from the old town. This proved to be an ignis fatuus, and in May, 1880, the first white party to cross the Chilkat Mountains —which are a spur of the Fairweather Range—from the head of the inland passage to the source of the Yukon was organized at Sitka. The party, through the courtesy of Capt. L. S. Beardslee, commanding the old frigate Jamestown, was furnished with transportation to the head of the Chilkoot Inlet, whence they crossed the divide by the trail of the Chilkat Indians. The summit was passed on June 8, 1880, and a few days later the headwaters of the Yukon were reached up Crater Lake. This route was followed subsequently by Lieut. Frederick Schwatka in his military reconnoissance of 1883.

The party of 1880 comprised eighteen men, of whom but three remain near their old-time haunts in Alaska. Four are dead and the others are scattered from the North Pacific Slope to the Andes and South Africa. After reaching the lakes the party separated into smaller companies and during that season gold was found on the Hootalinka and Lewis rivers, both tributaries of the Yukon. The next season diggings were struck on the Stewart River, which has furnished the largest yield of the precious metal from the Yukon country. In 1884 the camp was established on Forty-Mile Creek, seven hundred and fifty miles from the head of the Chilkoot Inlet by way of the trail and river and within two degrees of the Arctic Circle, the most hyperborean region of the globe at which gold mining by the hydraulic process has ever been conducted.

A few days after the first Yukon party left R. T. Harris and Joseph Juneau, both old miners from the camps of Colorado, Montana and the Cassiar, the latter a nephew of that old Wisconsin pioneer Solomon Juneau, who was the founder of Milwaukee, started from Sitka in a large Hydah canoe for a prospecting tour along the mainland of Southeastern Alaska. They were outfitted for a three months' trip, and their craft was manned by three natives. The party took the usual inland passage, reaching Chatham Strait by way of the Peril Strait and Rapids, turned southward along the easterly side of Baranof Island and on June 24 crossed Chatham Strait to the Indian village of Ellstooskin, situated on the westerly side of Admiralty Island; and on June 26 passed around Point Gardner, the southern extremity of the island, into Prince Frederick Sound, crossed this large estuary and struck the mainland at Cape Fanshaw, in 57° 10′ north and about fifty miles above Fort Wrangel.

From this point the party followed the trend of the mainland toward the northwest, along Stephens Passage, exploring the principal estuaries and prospecting the streams in some instances to their sources. In working up the coast they passed on the westerly or out side of the Douglas Island, on which the famous Treadwell quartz mill now stands, and on August 14 reached the Auk glacier, situated on the mainland, nearly abreast of Point Retreat, the north end of Admiralty Island, and in about 58° 30′ north latitude.

There the party commenced its return trip, passing this time between the mainland and Douglas Island, by way of the Gastineaux Channel. At almost every point where explorations were made gold was discovered by the panning process common among miners, but nothing that the party considered "pay." At Shuck River, near Cape Fanshaw, the first stream explored, a small party of miners were found at work. Further north, at Hoikham Bay, a party of ten were at work on Sumdum Creek; but the pay was small, yielding from three to four dollars per day to the man. At the Auk Glacier Harris and Juneau met a party of three who had attempted to reach the Yukon by the Chilkat trail, but not having succeeded they were returning to Wrangel.

The two parties left the Auk village together but separated at the north end of Douglass Island, the Wrangel party keeping its west shore while Juneau and Harris followed the mainland along the Gastineaux Channel. On August 17 the Harris party reached the mouth of Gold Creek, near where the town of Juneau now stands, and finding "float" quartz in the bed of the creek bearing both free gold and pyrites they ascended the stream some two miles and found placer deposits carrying about ten cents to the pan of dirt. Of this they secured about a dollar and one-half and they also gathered something near one hundred pounds of the quartz float which they found scattered along the stream, and on August 23 broke camp and started homeward, reaching Sitka on September 3.

The customary assays of the quartz gave such satisfactory results that on September 17 Harris and Juneau again fitted out and started for the ground of their new discovery. Passing out the Peril Strait they crossed Chatham Strait directly to Killisnoo, situated on the west shore of Admiralty and then a post of the Northwest Trading Company, and there engaged the company's steam launch Favorite to tow them around Point Retreat with the view to shorten the distance. On the night of September 19 heavy weather compelled them to cast off from the Favorite to avoid swamping their canoe. Point Retreat was not doubled until September 22, and on the the succeeding night the party camped on the north end of Douglas Island. Owing, however, to continuous southeasterly gales they did not reach the mouth of Gold Creek a second time until September 29. There a tent was pitched and camp established, and on October 3 Harris and Juneau, with one of the Indians to pack blankets and provisions, again commenced the ascent of the creek.

Just above the point where they had panned the first dirt on their previous trip they encountered the cañon and cataract now known as Webster's Falls, and being unable to further ascend by the bed of the stream [illegible] ed to scale the adjacent mountain. On [illegible] summit, beheld beneath them the basin [illegible] creek has its source, hemmed in by the [illegible] mountains, and having for its only outlet the [illegible] cañon down which the tream tumbles. Harris [illegible] the name of Silver Bow Basin, in honor of a Montana camp bearing that name.

The men descended into the basin by way of a gulch, [illegible] numerous quartz veins disclosed croppings [illegible] instances were literally spangled with [illegible] party camped in the basin that night, and [illegible] morning, while the native was kindling [illegible] fire. Harris and Juneau, with pan, pick and [illegible] washed down five or six pans of earth which showed from one dollar and twenty cents to one dollar and thirty cents to the pan. After breakfast claims—both quartz and placer—were measured, located and staked off. The only law in the country at that time was such as might be afforded by the presence of the naval vessel at Sitka, and Harris wrote out the rules governing the location and working of claims, following substantially that miner's code which has been the law of every camp from the Sacramento to the Yukon. He also made memoranda for the recording of the claims located.

The party continued its explorations in and about the basin until October 25, when the men ascended the Sheep Creek cañon, about three miles southeast of Gold Creek, on the mainland. There quartz but no placer was found, and after killing several of the mountain sheep from which the stream has taken its name they returned to camp at the mouth of Gold Creek. After blazing out the exterior boundaries of the present town site of Juneau, they broke camp on November 7 and commenced the return canoe voyage to Sitka.

In the meantime the natives had packed out from the Silver Bow Basin, over the mountain summit and down the bed of the creek, something near one thousand pounds of the richest quartz, and with this the party reached Sitka in safety on November 17, 1880.

The exhibitions of the quartz specimens produced the greatest excitement at Sitka, which is not surprising as it may be doubted if the same quantity of rock, anywhere, has ever been surpassed in richness. A few of the original specimens are still extant, and are marvels of natural beauty. Some of them show strings of gold winding amid the white quartz, and in others lumps of the yellow metal—varying in size from a kernel of wheat to a lima bean—are imbedded in the crystalline rock. Notwithstanding the season of inclement weather and almost incessant gales was at hand, the stampede for the new diggings commenced at once, many taking the risks of canoes and open boats to reach this, another Eldorado.

The Northwest Trading Company then maintained a port at Sitka, and quite a spirited contest to be the first to reach the new ground took place between the agents of that company, on board the launch Favorite, and the officers of the Jamestown, with one of that frigate's launches, resulting in favor of the latter, who under the command of Lieut. E. P. McClelland reached Gold Creek November 28, some thirty hours ahead of the Favorite, after barely escaping shipwreck in doubling Point Retreat in a gale of wind.

Claim after claim was located and cabins began to go up in quick succession along the beach. In January, 1881, the first miners' meeting was held, at which nearly two hundred assembled, and the mining district was organized and the rules of the camp revised and promulgated. The district took the name of Harris and the town that of Juneau. At the earliest moment of the succeeding Spri[illegible]ng commenced in the basin [illegible] prevailed, and by January, [illegible] two thousand souls.

[illegible]s its mining myth. Califor[illegible] apex of which was so impregnated with yellow metal that it glistened in the sunlight. Arizona has the story of the silver bullets used in early warfare by the natives. Montana has its "Lost Cabin," whose two occupants after gathering an amazing fortune went to "Frisco" for a jamboree, and returning were unable to find the diggings they had left. Idaho has her "Lost Cave," which was paved with gold, the discoverers of which were driven off by the Snake Indians and were never after able to locate the wondrous cave. The country of the Big Bend of the Columbia, over which the Great Northern Railway passes, has its "Sinker Creek," a name originating from the story that an old-time pioneer—who was pushing his way with an ox team and "prairie schooner" for the Pacific slope—camped one evening on the banks of the stream and attempted to secure his supper from its waters. Meeting with no success for want of a sinker upon his line, he chanced to notice a bit of yellow metal in the bed of the creek which he hammered out on the tire of his wagon wheel, then wound it around his line after the manner of boyhood's sheet-lead sinker, immediately began to take the fishes from the stream, and upon them he made his evening meal. Hence the sobriquets "Sinker Creek" and "Emigrant Gulch." Alaska's myth is the "Lost Rocker," and its story has been told around many and many a campfire, as follows:

In 1865 Thomas Garrett, and a partner whose name is now lost in the misty past, made a prospecting tour of several months along the Alaskan coast, and after many attempts to find "pay" at last discovered a small basin in the mountains which gave marvelous prospects. Although their provisions were short they determined to pass the remainder of the season in working the bed of the creek. With this end in view they hewed out a "rocker," a device quite common in primitive mining for washing dirt and gravel, and went to work. The result surpassed their wildest expectations, but on the third day they were ambushed by the Indians and the partner was shot. Garrett, however, made his way to the coast, was picked up by a canoe and reached Fort Wrangel in safety, and late in the Autumn arrived at Portland. The succeeding Summer, of 1866, he started north with a party of four in search of the basin; but, as one cañon and creek after another were explored and no traces of the place Garrett had left were to be found, the members of the expedition, one after another, abandoned the search. Garrett, however, kept up his explorations until his death in 1870. He died at Sitka, and during his last illness repeated the story of his lost discovery, insisting to the last that the old rocker would some day be found. There is scarcely a doubt that among the many hundreds of miners and prospectors who have scoured the Alaskan hills, from the Stickeen to the Chilkat divide, very few can be found who have not—in their wanderings—harbored the thought that they might yet be the lucky one to find the "lost rocker."

James Winn, a typical western "rustler," whose portrait appeared with my last letter, known far and wide as "Slim Jim," and who has lost and made several fortunes, has perpetuated this legend by a very handsome painting on the drop curtain of his opera house at Juneau. In the perspective is a snow-clad mountain range, along whose base rises the terrace of a glacier from which the stream has its source. Toward the foreground the stream winds through a cañon, and in its bed—in the shadow of uprising walls—are the rocker and the two miners, the latter dressed in the long hip-boots, red shirts and slouched hats so often met with on the Slope. Near by, from a bunch of dark evergreen timber, is seen the flash of the deadly rifle. The painting doubtless will not bear criticism as a work of art, but to those who have camped in the mountains of the Alaskan wilderness there is a wild and weird reality about the picture that never fails to cause a hush among the hardy patrons of the drama at "Slim's" whenever the curtain falls.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—JUNEAU, FROM THE BAY

The area covered by the Silver Bow Basin and its adjacent slopes containing auriferous deposits will not exceed five hundred acres, and the deposit of gravel and pulverized rock on its bottom—the product of glacial action and the detritus of countless ages from the neighboring mountain slopes—will average about twenty feet in depth, and carries gold deposits from surface to bedrock. A great many handsome fortunes have been taken from the ground, but, following what seems to be the irresistible rule of the age, consolidated capital has now absorbed all the placer ground with the appurtenant water rights. A tunnel three thousand feet in length has been driven through a huge butte which stands midway of the cañon, near its mouth, thus tapping the deposit at the bottom, and appliances for working the basin on a gigantic scale have been completed.

In 1884 the miners' code was supplemented by a mongrel act of Congress, known as the organic act, and in 1892 the settlement was fast losing the typical features of a mining camp.

The quartz lodes undoubtedly will follow the destiny of the placer claims, a syndicate will corral the group of lodes and drive an immense tunnel through the mountain, beneath the old trail of Harris and Juneau, cross-cutting the quartz belt and furnishing an outlet to the seashore, when quartz mills, railroads, electric lights and the paraphernalia of modern civilization will follow, the primitive character of the camp will disappear forever and its pioneer days will live only in memory.

NOTES

A vast electrical railway scheme was incorporated at Springfield, Ill., on March 30. A number of New York, Chicago, San Francisco and foreign capitalists are said to be interested in the company, known as the Inter-Ocean Electric Railway Company, capital $200,000,000, divided into 2,000,000 shares of $100 each. The intention is to construct an elevated electric freight railway between Chicago and New York for the transportation of coal and grain. The plans and specifications have been drawn by a Chicago engineer, and the company will own a number of patents on electrical devices used by the road. It is said the company expects to transport freight from Chicago to New York in one day; that building operations will be commenced soon on a line between New York and Chicago, and that the road ultimately will be extended to San Francisco.

It is claimed a big scheme is being considered by capitalists controlling the New York Central Railroad to purchase all the water powers along the Black River in that state, between Carthage and Dexter, for the purpose of utilizing them in the generation of electricity. The electricity is to be used as the motor power on the Vanderbilt railroads in northern New York. Should this scheme go through there will be one grand overhead trolley system, consisting of four wires over each track. Connection is to be made with Niagara Falls and the power at Waddington, on the St. Lawrence River. If the scheme should become a reality it will revolutionize the business interests of northern New York.

Among the corporation buildings to be erected on the grounds of the Cotton States and International Exposition, which opens Sept. 18, at Atlanta, Ga., is one of beautiful and artistic design to house the exhibit of the Florida Central & Peninsula Railroad. This railroad is preparing a very elaborate display of the resources of the rich Florida lands through which its course lies.

Through Service

The Nickel Plate Road (N. Y. C. & St. L. R. Miss Kate Field

Editor and owner of Kate Field's Washington, of Washington, D. C., a paper devoted to the cause of temperance, stated in a recent speech that the prohibition laws, as enforced in the several states, were not promoting the temperance cause, and her advice would be to make a moderate allowance of mild beverages. In her estimation this would help the temperance cause more than prohibition laws. Miss Kate's head is level, and as to mild drinks we recommend Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association's Beer. Adv.

THE COLUMBUS SHOW

(Special Reports.)

The show was certainly a great success, two hundred dogs being entered and plenty of quality in several classes, viz., pointers, English setters, fox terriers, cocker spaniels, St. Bernards, Great Danes, poodles and pugs. The weather was fine all through and the attendance very good, especially on the second and last days, when it reminded one of the last Chicago show, the crowds filling the hall until it was almost impossible to get to one's dogs, and there will be a nice net profit to be donated to the Humane Society. The ladies of the Humane Society were out in full force, and a new feature was having half a dozen pretty young ladies selling catalogs—a very neat one—which was out and for sale at the opening hour of the show. Most anybody would buy a catalog of a pretty miss, and I think I was struck for about six myself.

The benching was of new pine lumber, and the hall was kept clean and sweet by a very efficient lot of attendants, who were under Doc Short's direction. Supt. H. A. Bridge was on hand early and late; a hard worker and an obliging and capable man for the place. A new feature was having three "political nights." There are three tickets in the field—republican, democratic and independent—for mayor. Wednesday night was republican night, Thursday night democratic and Friday night independent. Each candidate was there, made a speech and paid a ten-dollar bill for his ticket as he came in.

The trick poodle Ponce de Leon gave a performance afternoon and evening. All in all it was a pleasant and well run show. The members of the Columbus Fanciers' Club are all pleasant and obliging gentlemen, all workers, too, and most of them were on hand every day. The judges were: H. A. Bridge, of Columbus, pointers, setters, beagles, collies and basset hounds; John Cummings, of Columbus, sporting and toy spaniels; A. G. Eberhart, Newfoundlands, Great Danes, Skye and Scottish terriers; S. A. Kenefick, of Columbus, all other breeds.

There was a trotting race each afternoon in front of the hall, by the dogs Ned, Sport and Dexter, driven to sulkies by three boys, which drew such crowds as to almost make it impossible for the dogs to trot to advantage. At last accounts the greyhound Dexter had a little the best of it.

I am indebted to Messrs. H. A. Bridge, John Cummings and S. A. Kenefick for reports of the classes they judged. Owing to Mr. D. H. Moore being unable to get here, English setters were judged by Mr. H. A. Bridge, who gave satisfaction. I heard of very little "kicking" as to any of the judging. Dr. C. E. Leist, as veterinarian, left nothing to be desired.

St. Bernards.—Had a total entry of fifteen in four classes, but rough-coated and smooth-coated were not divided, as they always should be. In open dogs eight came into the ring, all shown in good condition. Napoleon, first, rough-coated, is a grand-headed dog of beautiful color and markings; is a big fellow, just two years old and will yet stand to run in good company. Casper, second, smooth-coated, has a good head, markings and color; good in size, too, but is weak behind; deserved his award and is a handsome dog. Columbus Alton, third, a smooth, is a good one, too, and it is very close between him and Casper; beautiful color, good markings and stands on four good legs; coat good, but shown a bit too light in flesh. Scottish Chief, reserve, is of good size, good body, but white predominates in color; has a good head and was shown in fine condition. Bruce, V.H.C., is a good-bodied dog, with good head, but, barring tips of white on feet, he is a solid light orange in color. Mark I, H.C., deserves mention; he is only a year old and weighs 180 pounds; a massive fellow, with best of legs and body, a good head and was shown in superb condition; he is very dark in color. Five bitches were entered and four shown The beautiful Arline easily captured first place. There is hardly any fault to be found with Arline; she is going to the Pittsburg show and it will take a good one to down her. Neulena, second, is a beautiful bitch, too; good body and legs, a rich color and markings right, and shown in fine condition. Three fair dog puppies were shown; they were placed right and deserved their awards. Only one bitch puppy, a promising one that deserved her blue even without competition.

Mastiffs.—An entry of five and quite a lot of quality shown. In open dogs Gillivan deserved first; a fine bodied and colored dog in good coat, with good black markings and on four good legs. Not far behind him was Rex, not so large, but above the average in good points. Grand Duke, third, is a good youngster, and with more age will make into a large dog. Open bitches had two entries, Belle rightly winning over Queen, beating her in body, coat, markings and legs. She is a strong and large bitch, and was shown heavy in whelp. Queen is too light in color and is getting frosty in face, but shows to be a well-bred mastiff.

Great Danes.—Had an entry of eight (one absent) and showed high quality. In open dogs the well-known Earl of Wurtemberg, shown in fine condition, was an easy first; he was shown with a sound, healed tail for the first time in America. Senta's Brutus, the well-known son of the late grand old Senta, I placed second. His graceful movement and beautiful body is almost sufficient to make one overlook his slightly domed skull and gay carriage of tail. Demount, third, a black youngster, has a pointer muzzle, too broad in skull, but fair in body. His disposition is not to be commended; perhaps due to the excitement of the show, I think his first one. In open bitches three good ones were shown. Calphurnia I put first over Desdemona and Senta's Rheda. Calphurnia is a large golden brindled of good body, good feet, legs and tail and long arched neck. Her head and expression are slightly marred by an over supply of skull in width. Desdemona, second, has good head, long clean neck and a fair body; is faulty in hocks and movement. Senta's Rheda, third, fawn, colored, is a pleasing bitch, with a nice body and good movement, but with an eye too light, too plain a head and a badly cropped ear.

Newfoundlands.—In open dogs two quite promising young ones were shown. I gave them equal firsts, as it was a very close thing. Jack beats Ring in head, but coat is too curly. Ring has a fine smooth coat, but loses in head to Jack. Both are good in body and legs, and above the average shown nowadays. Bitches had but one entry, Flora; head could be larger, is good in body, just right in coat, stands on four good legs, and is a strong and active bitch; good expression and disposition Greyhounds.—Nero, a large blue brindled dog, won; Rebel Baker, second, gave him a close call, however. Rex was absent.

Foxhounds.—Three shown. Drum easily won; second going to Rip, quite a good one, too; while Band got third. All three of just fair quality.

Bloodhounds.—The Rookwood Kennels entered four, but as two came back from Denver show sick, they could only show one, the bitch Calliope; and a very good one she is, deserving her blue ribbon even without competition, which, however, she can stand. She attracted a lot of attention.

Bulldogs.—Lorna Doone was alone and won. She has a good head and front, good tail, was shown in fine condition; a bit too long in body.

Fox Terriers.—An entry of eight in open dogs and several good ones shown. Scioto King, a "dark horse," came out as a genuine surprise to the judge and all the dogmen at the show, winning in a canter. Here is a fox terrier all over; he weighs twenty pounds, but does not look to go eighteen. He will be shown at Pittsburg and will surprise some more dog men; is a stylish, compact dog of the true fox terrier type. Banbury Dodger, second, deserved his place. Frank, third, is quite a fair one; reserve going to Gyp, not far behind him. Balance were fair, but several showed age and were shown too fat. In the puppy class Hustler won from The Major; good in character, but a bit short in head. Hustler deserved first place.

Boston Terriers.—Only one shown, Miss Firestone's Psyche; quite a handsome specimen and shown in superb condition.

Bull Terriers.—Pat won alone in the dog class and Kittie in bitches; both are fair specimens, Pat not so much the type as Kittie. One puppy, Dixon, was entered; he is a son of Kittie, but twice her size and too coarse.

Pugs.—The well-known Patsy Bolivar won in open dogs from his kennel companion, Port Wine, quite a cobby and small one, with a good head and stern; also good color and eyes, good black markings, but faulty in legs. Third went to Jumbles, a good-headed dog, ears right and good stern; color too smutty, but has good pug quality. Fritz, reserve, is a grand-headed one, but his main fault is a very generous ear; good skull and eye. Queen Zitka, first in bitches, is a grand little bitch (only about ten pounds) and a hard one to beat. Fanchon, second, is quite a good one, of beautiful color, cobby and full of pug quality. In the puppy class was a right good one in Charity Nit; small, good skull and eyes; good stern and color and will be heard from later on.

Poodles.—An entry of ten in corded and curly, aside from six in toy poodle classes. The Eberhart Kennels made an entry of four and won the kennel prize. In corded dogs their well-known Ponce de Leon, the winner of the late Chicago show, deserved his blue ribbon; he is a grand specimen, heavy and long in coat, but not as tight in cord as might be. Second went to Curly Bernstein, a ten-months youngster, very promising, not a white hair on him; was not clipped, however, and coat needs attention; if shown in good shape he can stand hot company. In corded bitches a new one came out in Toodle Woodle and had a walkover; is only seven months old, good in head, eye, body and cord, and will make a fine bitch. In curly dogs Black Jack Jr had no trouble in getting first over Shag and Pet Alphonse, the latter taking second and Shag third. Black Jack Jr is good in legs, curl, head, eye and has a well made-up body. Pet Alphonse has good head and eye, not tight enough in curl and rather tucked up in body. Shag is only a fair specimen. Curly bitches had an entry of four; first going to Eberhart's Queen Zip, well known, a bitch of right size and build, fine head and curl and shown in good condition. Daisy, a brown and white, took second; is a good poodle, but shown too fat. Dido, third, was not in her stall, and I couldn't be sure as to Fanchon, V.H.C., as her tag was not on collar.

Skye Terriers.—Only one shown, Rags, who had a lucky win, as she is not quite a Skye, but yet a pretty dog.

Scotch Terriers.—Flip, the only entry, is another lucky winner, being nearer a Yorkshire, and should have been so entered.

Yorkshire Terriers.—Bess, a young bitch, deserved her blue ribbon even if no competition. She is of the true type, good in coat and head, and in time will be a good one.

Toy Terriers.—The Colonel had no trouble in winning over Topsy, second, and Cute, third. The Colonel is good in head, eye, skull, body, legs and tan, but was a bit off in coat. Cute should have changed places with Topsy.

Italian Greyhounds.—An entry of six. In open dogs the well-known winner Adonis easily won over Prince, who is fair but too large. Adonis was shown in his usual fine condition and is a good one, his main fault being that he is a bit too short coupled. Open bitches brought out a good new one in Tot, who won. She is of a lovely color, grand in body, fair head, a nice eye and ear, but the latter carried too gayly at times. I afterward saw her in her stall and her ears were down right. Dawn, second, is nice in color and quite a fair one, but too large and shown too fat. Princess Bonnie, with a litter of puppies, was for exhibition only. The puppy class had only one entry, but a very nice one in Miss Blanche Fickey's Fawn; she is of the right color, good in head, ears right, good tail, and will mature into a nice bitch. Fawn deserved her blue ribbon and will be heard from later if shown.

Toy Poodles.—Waddles, first, is a bit too large and too straight in coat, good in head and eye, and quite a poodle. Tot, second, is better in size and [illegible] in color. In bitches Queen deserved t[illegible] over Ruth, second, and Lady Pearl, t[illegible] really the best poodle of the lot, but [illegible] shown in poor condition, having [illegible] clipped, and also being in whelp. [illegible] r specimen.

Miscellaneous.—Tom, an American wolfhound (so entered), was first; second to another of same description named Jerry; while Lupus, an Irish wolfhound, had to be content with third place in this "wolfhound" class.

Pointers.—An entry of twenty-six, with but one absentee, and all shown in fairly good condition. Heavyweight dogs had three entries and none of them anything great. The winner, Pat, is a coarse dog all through, yet a good bodied fellow, with fairly good legs and feet. Three heavyweight bitches. Pride, the winner, is a good one; a clean-cut bitch, just a little thick at shoulder and a trifle light in thigh; aside from this but little fault can be found. Dell of Kent, another very good bitch; aside from her shortness of muzzle and being out at elbows, a fairly good bitch. Luck's Own Daughter, V.H.C., is a good-bodied bitch shown in rather poor condition. Two lightweight dogs: Brown Dick won; a good dog, a little light in muzzle and a trifle thick at shoulders, but aside from this a good one. Duke of Kent III is a fairly good dog, short in muzzle, a little throaty and just a trifle out at elbows; a good-bodied dog, full of pointer character. Lightweight bitches brought out several good ones, ten in all. Lady Rush, the winner, is a grand little bitch, short in muzzle and light in eye, but aside from this is a well-made one and will be heard from again. Trinket's Nell, second, is a bitch with good pointer character and was shown in fine condition. Speckle Gown, reserve, was so timid in the ring that her handler could do nothing with her; she tucked herself up so badly she destroyed all the symmetry she has, and was handicapped by never having had on a collar until just a few days before the show. Kate Naso, V.H.C., was nursing a litter of six puppies in the show room; a sweet little bitch all through. Doc's Tony, another nice one, is a little light in muzzle, light in eye and a little weak in thigh; aside from this a good little bitch. Pet S, V.H.C., still another fair bitch, but beginning to show her age, short in muzzle, light in eye and a little throaty. Pet is the dam of Brown Dick, Pride, Lady Rush and Doc's Tony, mentioned above. Dog puppies two entries, both very good ones. Comet's Ridge, the winner, is a good-bodied puppy, with fairly good head, legs and feet. Bitch puppies had Lady Rush and Doc's Tony, mentioned above, winning in the order named. Lady Swift, V.H.C., is a good puppy that stands too high on her legs, but shows strong indications of developing into a rattling good bitch.

English Setters.—An entry of 29, with two absent. Anto Gladstone, the winner, behind his head, and aside from being just a little out at elbows is a grandly made one, and good at every other point. Bud Noble, second, was the best headed dog in the show; a little wide in front and just a little narrow in lower thigh. Bud was shown entirely too fat and had it not been for this would have given the winner a much harder rub for the honors. Nige, V.H.C., is a dog of the heavy type, good in body, legs, feet and shoulders, weak in head, and badly off in coat. York, V.H.C., is a good bodied dog, light in bone, a trifle light in muzzle, well hung ear, clean neck, and good tail carried a little high. Gladstone, V.H.C., is a good bodied puppy, nice neck, good legs and feet, weak in head, and very badly off in coat. Clem Gladstone, V.H.C., was shown almost like a butter ball, destroying all chances of his going higher. Bitches brought out several good ones, notably Gladstone's Speck, the winner, grand in head, body, legs and feet, deep chested and well sprung ribs; a little out at elbows and carries her tail badly, but aside from this a fine bitch. Speckle Girl, second, fails to the winner in head and body, stands better on her legs than the winner, and has better carriage of tail; all in all a sweet little bitch. Nellie F, V.H.C., is a good little bitch in body and legs, light in bone, and off a little in head. Grange Lillian, V.H.C., a fairly good headed bitch, is flat at sides, out a little at elbows, light in thigh, and was shown in low condition, Colonel Jim, the winning dog puppy, is a fairly good headed puppy, good of chest and spring of ribs, and fairly good in body. Gladstone, the second puppy, was mentioned above. Mark Time, V.H.C., is a very good little puppy that will improve with age. Bitch puppies had two entries, Gladstone's Speck and Speckle Girl, mentioned above.

Irish Setters.—Don, the winner, is a clean cut and fine coated dog; aside from head a good one. Dan, second, is a good bodied dog with clean legs and good feet, weak in head and rather wavy in coat. Major, V.H.C., is badly off in coat and soft in condition, and carries himself badly. The bitch class had but one entry, also entered in the puppy class; a sweet little bitch of good color and fairly good in coat, with chances for much improvement with age.

Gordon Setters.—Only three. Jack, the winner, is a nice coated dog with fine deep tan markings; a fairly good dog. Rusty Boy, second, is weak in tan and off badly in coat. Turk, V.H.C., was shown much too fat and carried himself badly.

Collies.—Robert Bruce, the winner, is a good coated dog but in rather bad shape; a little coarse in head and badly carried ear. Ralph is off in coat and has a poorly carried tail; a nice headed dog, fairly good in body, legs and feet.

Beagles.—Of the dogs, Dash, the winner, is a well made one, fairly good at all points, but entirely too large. Jumbo, second, was nothing but an undersized foxhound, and a poor one at that. Two bitches. Topsy Turvy, the winner, is a sweet little bitch all through and a well made one. Nancy Hanks loses to the winner in body, being a little flat sided and high on legs; otherwise a nice little bitch. Only one puppy, Patsy; a very good puppy, but overgrown.

Field Spaniels.—Ben Franklin, a fair liver colored dog, rather too broad in head and slightly li[illegible] zle, was awarded first. Sport, second, has s[illegible] and coat too curly; in body and bone very fa[illegible] bitch class Lady, being heavy with whelp, [illegible] poor advantage; she scored well to standard, and would have done credit to any kennel had she been in c[illegible] Madge was a good second; she has a slightly dom[illegible] head and rather too fine a muzzle, with legs a trifle light in

COCKER SPANIELS.—In the open class for black [illegible] took first very easily. He was in poor [illegible] the good points were there. Rowdy, [illegible] e[illegible] the old international type than Ameri[illegible] has a highly domed head and a trifle snipey nose he is good; coat almost perfect, though a little light in feather. Duke, V.H.C., is fairly good in body and head, but too fat and coat much too curly; in good condition would show fairly well. Brantford Vic, the winning bitch, is a good specimen in all but stern; her head is about up to the mark, and coat very good. Gipsy Girl, second, was in poor condition, and her coat was very curly; just fair in head and bone. Lady W, V.H.C., is a fair bitch, but was out of condition; head considerably full and nose too pointed. There were no any-other-color dogs, but in three bitches Bessie Warner, first, is a beautiful red bitch that will score well in the best company in all points; good coat, strong in bone and muscle, and general lines are fine. Red Skirt stood a good solid second; she is not as strong generally as Bessie Warner, and leaving out her muzzle I consider her a very good specimen of the red order. Molly was V.H.C. and it was a question between Red Skirt and Molly for second place. Bob, the dog puppy, is a fine black puppy, three months old. Molly, noticed third in the bitch class, took first in bitch puppies. Winks, second, stands a trifle high, but is a very fair puppy, though not quite heavy enough in bone and muscle; coat very good.

CONDITION VS. QUALITY

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—There is so much wisdom well expressed in Mr. Washington's article on condition versus quality that I wish you could publish it in pamphlet form.

The issue between condition and quality ought to be sharply contested. If a dog is to be put at the head for condition only, as is done so often nowadays at our shows, the degeneration of the breeds will be even more rapid than is plainly evident now. Mr. Washington pleads for correct judging of Irish setters, and rightly says that the improvement of Irish setters must come from mating dogs of correct formation, and not of sleek grooming and fat condition.

I have a point to quote. At the late New York show Mr. Davidson, judge of Gordon setters, told me that he would have given my Champion Heather Bee first in the challenge bitch class if she were heavier; and he made the same objection to all my dogs, marking them down a grade because, as he repeated in each instance, "not fleshy enough." When he came to my Sally Beaumont, he repeated the remark, at which I laughed, for really the bitch was so fat as to have no waist, and I had almost left her home (although entered) for that reason.

If a protest could have been lodged against such judging I would have paid my $5 and entered my protest. I am no kicker and never have said anything, but have accepted my "bitters" quietly; but I protest against any judgment that decrees premiums for fat. Dogs do not transmit that or "condition" (under which head sleekness and good coat come, I suppose) but they do transmit correct form and anatomy. I represented my views to the judge and said what I thought, but the reply was: "Yes, but your think does not count, and mine does."

Now if sleekness and the grooming and condition which only professional handlers can get upon the animals in their charge are to win all the prizes at our dog shows and professional trainers are to win all the prizes at our field trials, it is time that an effort be made to rescue the dog cause from such degradation and decline, and I, for one, will not again submit my dogs to the decisions of judges who proceed upon those hypotheses.

While upon the subject of judges I wish to second most heartily some remarks of Mr. Muss-Arnolt in the AMERICAN FIELD, of maybe a year ago. Is it possible that we have no judges fit to pass upon the merits of dogs except the half-dozen that annually say how good or bad dogs we have? Given their names and we know just how they will decide between the animals likely to come before them, from New York to Denver and back to Boston. With new names for judges would come new entries and larger entries, and dog shows would show many new faces of new dogs and their owners. But everybody knows, after five or ten years of the same judging by the same judges, just how the decisions will be. I would send some setters to the Boston show, but the judges have so often expressed their opinion in print, as reporters and judges, that I already know their decisions.

Let us have new judges for 1895 and 1896. I feel so deeply the importance of the subject upon which I write that I sign my own name, hoping that it will draw out the views of others who so often have said the same thing to me, and who, I hope, will have sufficiently the "courage of their convictions" as to put them in print.

JAMES B. BLOSSOM.

BUYING AND SELLING

CAMDEN, ARK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I have noticed in your valuable and highly esteemed paper, of which I am a great admirer and constant reader, several articles treating upon the subject of buying and selling dogs. This is a subject of no little import, and it commands the serious and conscientious consideration of every wide-awake and broad-gauged fancier; for the widespread dissatisfaction among the masses of purchasers is becoming alarming, and, while I am not a pessimist, yet I prognosticate disastrous results in the canine profession unless some radical changes be made toward placing both buyer and seller on an equal footing. I, for one, contend that in the majority of cases purchasing dogs under the present system is nothing more nor less than a game of chance with the buyer, which is unjust and unfair, and the time has come when something must be done. I confess I know nothing about the trials and tribulations of the sellers, but profess to have had some little experience in buying, which has cost me no little and made me a sadder but wiser man.

Under the present system the buyers, in most instances, are compelled to purchase a dog or dogs depending entirely upon the representation and honesty of the seller, oftentimes being miserably deceived, which is unjust and which has retarded to no little extent the progress of the fancy, for there are many would-be fanciers who have had their inclinations and purchasing propensities blasted by such misrepresentations.

I noticed a few weeks ago an article in your paper suggesting a remedy which I heartily indorse. It was that the buyer should deposit with some bank the price of dog or dogs quoted, to be paid to the seller in ten days or any reasonable time after shipment, provided the dogs are as represented or are returned to buyer if they prove otherwise, both buyer and seller sharing equally the expenses of shipping when satisfactory. Now in my humble opinion, no honest man wishing to please and to give good value can object to this plan. For it would not only depress and shut out fraudulent dealers, but would add greatly to the sales of good breeders.

I have bought in the last twelve months eighteen foxhounds guaranteed to be thoroughbreds and thoroughly trained, paying all the way from $15 to $50 per hound, and out of the lot only five proved to be as represented. Is this just? Must we lovers of dogs continue to be defrauded thus? The eighteen hounds I bought represent six states—Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Missouri, Tennessee and Kentucky—and four were from the noted W. S. Walker, of Point Leavel, Ky., which, I am proud to say, were just as represented and proved to be grand and noble hounds. Would to heaven there were more such men and there would be less complaint. Now, what are we to do? Here are several hundred dollars spent on foxhounds guaranteed to be thoroughly trained, when in truth not one-third were as represented, the remainder proving to be a lot of worthless curs, rabbit dogs (and even sorry ones at that), and a conglomeration of what? Every hound was guaranteed to be a thoroughbred and thoroughly trained foxhound, and after kindly writing to the sellers, stating that they were mistaken about the hounds being trained, as they were untrained and unsatisfactory, and requesting that money be returned, as promised, what is the result? Well, we got what the little boy shot at—nothing; and not even an answer to our repeated requests, and they are as silent even to this present good day as though old Mother Earth had lovingly embraced them in that sleep that knows no waking. And no doubt a great many dog fanciers would be better off were it so, for I see week after week their brazen advertisements, as though they were saints and had never wronged anyone. They know whom I am alluding too. Am I getting uncomfortably close?

Most guarantees amount to nothing. Now I do not dare to insinuate that all dealers are thus. No, not by any means, for there are many, yea hundreds, as true and honest as the day is long; and still there are many others otherwise. And it has been my misfortune to deal mostly with the "otherwise," that's all. And so it is and will ever be until some change be made, and I shall hail with delight the day when both buyers and sellers are placed on equal footing. What say you?

GEO. W. BROWN.

A DAY WITH THE BEAGLES

BY BEAGLE

The stars were still shining bright on a November morning of the year just passed, when the writer and friend R— (who have been hunting companions for a number of years) found themselves on the way to the depot bound for a little town on the C. M. & St. P. R. R. only a little over an hour's journey from the Cream City, to spend the day with the beagles and the cottontails. At Merrill station we were joined by our friend M—, who met us as agreed upon beforehand, and with a smile as though he already heard his favorite beagle giving tongue on a warm trail. On the train were a number of local hunters, and in the baggage car one could find his choice in hounds, they varying from the 10-inch beagle to the 24-inch foxhound, all anxious for a day's outing.

We soon arrived at the town of O— and wended our way to the house of friend Fred, who was found to be still in bed; but as we had not forgotten the song about the dog, the rabbit and the hole (published in the report of the Northwestern Beagle Club's trials last Fall) we soon had him astir. He told us he had planned a hunt with his neighbor, a Mr. Young, and was glad we had come, as we could go out together. We proceeded to Mr. Young's place, and after a cordial greeting he said he would soon have his rig ready. In a short time he appeared with his team of blacks hitched to a three-seated spring wagon, and we picked up the eight beagles and were soon on our way to a nice piece of swamp, where Fred said we should be sure to find game.

The weather was delightful, clear and bright, and the inch of snow on the ground was frozen hard; but soon the sun began to thaw the snow, and good trailing was assured. As we drove along former hunts were talked over again, and the half-hour that we were driving was passed pleasantly. Soon the farmhouse where we were to stop was reached, and after the horses had been cared for we uncoupled the beagles and followed them across a plowed field to the swamp, each little hound eager to get there in advance of the other.

We had not yet reached the swamp when the voice of an old hound was heard, and the others harking to him, they soon had bunny a-going. They drove over a little hill, and then across an open field to woodland, where the rabbit took to a hole.

On going back to the swamp another one was soon started, and after a good run was soon bagged.

We moved on a little further into the swamp, and before many minutes had passed a rabbit was jumped and all eight beagles packed and gave bunny a chase for its life, going to a point almost out of hearing; then the rabbit turned and nearer and nearer we heard them coming, each one trying to outdo the other in speed and voice, when suddenly a bang! was heard, and the run ended.

Kind reader, did you ever go out with a pack of beagles when each and every one was a "worker from away back" and listen to their melodious voices when in full cry after the fleeing rabbit? If not, you have missed the grandest concert ever given.

Many more were the runs that we had that day, and more than once did we have two rabbits going at a time, the pack dividing and driving the game in different directions, only to be bagged after a good run.

The setting sun reminded us of the approach of night, and we called in the beagles and retraced our steps to the farmhouse where we had our team. On looking over our bag we found we had fourteen rabbits to our credit; but what was more we had spent one of the most pleasant days we ever had with the little hounds.

May we all live to enjoy many more such days and find the recreation so necessary to city folks.

HOW TO MAKE CONVERTS

BALTIMORE, MD.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—It was a pleasant morning when my friend and I started on our trip to the Beverwyck Kennels just out of Albany, N. Y. He was rather a skeptic on the merits of the fox terrier and I knew that the best argument of all was the sight of a merry lot of them playing and running together. A most delightful drive it was out the old plank road, up the hill past "Fritz" Emmett's old place—now the home of Senator David B. Hill of New York—the same spot where that grand old St. Bernard of Emmett's, which so many theater goers as well as dog lovers remember, now sleeps his last sleep. A little further on and we heard the merry barking of those lively little bodies of white, black and tan which is such sweet music to the ears of many.

After a hearty welcome from the proprietor, Mr. Rathbone, than whom no more genial host lives, we started for a walk around the yards, as our time was limited and there was lots to see. The buildings are admirably arranged, and light and airy as could be wished for. A large hall runs through its center, on both sides of which are numerous doors opening into the many rooms. From these rooms are other doors opening into the separate yards which are divided from its neighbors by high wire fences—a most simple and complete arrangement. Here many a good terrier first saw the light of day and here are many who have faced the judge in the hard fought fights of the show ring. After a walk around the outside of the yards we went back again to the kennel proper to have a closer look at some of the notables. Here we saw Beverwyck Royalist, who, despite his many honors on the bench, condescended to welcome us most cordially. Punster, too, another good one, was close at hand. At once the time and attention given to these beauties was apparent in their coat and condition. Among others were Blemton Victor II, a puppy showing his sire in every move, Beverwyck Trapper, by Blemton Rasper, with a good front and head and ears well nigh perfect, and some little ones by Royalist, not yet named, who give great promise and, if indications are worth anything, from this lot will come a champion upon whom Royalist will some day look with pride; also a couple of good ones by Starden's King out of that right good bitch Moonshine, who look winners all over. Besides the puppies we saw some dignified mothers who have brought home many a ribbon from the show and are now busy seeing that their youngsters are brought up in that path which the winning fox terrier should tread.

We had barely time to catch our train and were forced to take a hurried farewell of Mr. Rathbone, but as we drove down the long hill to town my friend asked me:

"What shall I name him?"

"Yes, truly, the unconverted have become converted," and he purchased a terrier. If, reader, you too are a skeptic, leave your business for just a few hours and visit some good kennel. The rest I leave to the dogs.

JUDGING BY POINTS AT BENCH SHOWS

DURANGO, COLO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I noticed several articles in your valuable AMERICAN FIELD in reference to the awards made at the different bench shows. I think our judges wish to be honest and do what is right in their decisions, but there is a vast difference of opinions. Exceptions have been taken, and quite rightly, in the collie awards at Denver, March 12. I believe it would be better and much more satisfactory to all concerned to have the American Kennel Club give certain rules, and have the dogs scored by points, thereby giving ourselves and the public the reasons for their awards. The poultry clubs judge chickens by such rules.

The idea among most, or at least some of our judges, is to give the head the 100 points, and, as one of your correspondents says in your issue of March 23: "The judge says he would have given the prize to a certain dachshund if he had no legs," etc. I will acknowledge that the head is the principal thing, but who would breed to any dog that had a good head but weak in hindquarters, legs, sway back and other things poor, in preference to one with the other qualities good and only a fair head? Take St. Bernards, for example. Ought not one with good orange and black color, the white markings almost perfectly even, be given some credit over one with one side of face white and the other all black, or a face all black with no white showing? Surely La Prince's markings are more pleasing to the eye than one like Saladin, with almost no white markings, and that little only reaching to the muzzle.

One of your correspondents speaks about the grooming and condition of dogs in show ring. There is an old saying: "Fine feathers make fine birds." If we had a score card, that matter would adjust itself to a proper place. This matter of grooming, as well as a dog being thoroughly collar broken and showing himself off to the best advantage, ought to have a certain count, but I do not say overlook all else and only think of these two things. I have seen dogs shown by collar and chain that would not lead, and would only stop on their haunches, or have their tails under their bodies their full length. Of course a number of our bench show clubs cannot afford half a dozen judges, and therefore have to depend upon one man. Where is there one person that can judge all classes, and do it correctly unless he has some rule to go by? I for one say: let us have a score card, and also a tape line, and not depend entirely on the eye. I think we would all be better pleased, as well as the public. What say you, breeders, exhibitors?

EASTERN F. T. CLUB'S MEETING

The Eastern Field Trial Club held its called meeting at 67 Wall Street on Tuesday, March 26, with Messrs. Pierre Lorillard, F. R. Hitchcock, F. B. Meares Jr., George H. Ewing, F. A. Hodgman, Orr and the secretary, W. A Coster, present. The minutes of several previous meetings were read and the club's affairs were put into good shape. Mr. Lorillard, the president, presided.

The principal matter before the club was to arrive at a decision as to which club, the United States or the Continental, should be given the use of the Eastern club's grounds for a meeting to follow the Eastern club's. A number of communications were read, and after full discussion the vote was unanimous in favor of the Continental club, that club to share the expense of the grounds, etc.

Mr. Pierre Lorillard and Mr. F. R. Hitchcock are the committee to select judges for the Eastern club's trials.

It was moved and seconded that the Eastern club's trials, to be held at Newton, N. C., shall be commenced on November 16 with the Members' Stakes, and that the open trials shall commence with the Derby on Monday, November 18.

PROPOSED METROPOLITAN KENNEL CLUB

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The committee appointed by Dr. Foote to assist in forming the proposed kennel club met at the office of Mr. Thos. H. Terry, 59 Liberty Street, New York, on March 28. Present, Dr. Foote, Messrs. Thos. H. Terry, James Mortimer, James Watson, A. C. Wilmerding and E. M. Oldham, Dr. Foote in the chair, E. M. Oldham secretary pro tem.

It was resolved that an announcement setting forth the object of the proposed club be sent to all those interested in canine matters who would make desirable members. With this end in view the names of about two hundred were taken from the lists available. The following announcement was agreed upon and ordered mailed:

On the last night of the recent bench show in Madison Square Garden, in response to a hurried call, a few exhibitors met for the purpose of starting a kennel club for the metropolitan district, with objects entirely social and the establishing of club rooms that may afford headquarters for kennel interests in this section. It being understood that it would in no sense be in opposition to the Westminster Kennel Club.

The sentiment is that such a club can be kept select, and at the same time be promoted from among the large number in and about New York who are interested in dogs, to a membership sufficient to meet all necessary expenses. The present proposition is to make the dues about ten or fifteen dollars per year.

Other special interests, many of them far less extensive, have succeeded in establishing homes—why should not we? This announcement will be sent to about one hundred carefully selected names, and a meeting for the purpose of permanent organization will be called at an early date. If you will lend it your support, please fill out the blank and send it to the secretary pro tem, Mr. E. M. Oldham 166 West 79th Street, on or before April 22, 1895.

Per order of the committee.

H. T. FOOTE, Chairman pro tem.

THE AMERICAN SCOTTISH TERRIER CLUB

This new specialty club has been organized with the object of encouraging the breeding of Scottish terriers, and offering special prizes at dog shows where the standard of points of the club is recognized and the prizes awarded by a judge approved by the club's executive committee.

The following officers have been elected for the current year: President, Mr Oliver Ames; secretary, Mr. Henry Brooks; treasurer, Mr. James Little; executive committee, the foregoing three gentlemen and Mr. S. H. Fessender Jr.

We have been favored with a copy of the club's constitution and by-laws, and from them learn that the standard of the Scottish Terrier Club of Great Britain has been adopted; also that the annual dues are $5.

We are asked to announce that the club will offer, for competition by its members, two challenge cups—one for the best American-bred dog and one for the best American-bred bitch. The cups are to be won five times before becoming the property of the winner, but not necessarily with the same dog or bitch. The club will also offer a cup, open to all exhibitors of Scottish terriers, for the best American-bred dog puppy; and another for best bitch puppy, same conditions. These cups will be competed for at the Boston show for the first time.

NOTES

UNDER the caption of "Round About the New York Show" Mr. Jas. Taylor has written in the English Stock-Keeper some things that Americans will like to read. After touching on many other matters, he says: "I must congratulate American fanciers on their grand exhibition of sporting dogs. We do not remember any show in England for many years past that has approached New York in numbers. Pointers, English, Irish and Gordon setters all well filled, the challenge classes averaging five per class and the other classes ten per class. The quality was very even, and not a bad one among the pointers. The best were not up to the best in England, and the same applies to English setters, the latter showing a little more quality in England. In Irish and Gordon setters the Americans would more than h[illegible] England might win for the absolute two [illegible] of the latter varieties, but ten of eac[illegible] American cousins scoring the most poi[illegible] were one of the features of the show. [illegible] numbered 147 entries, and among [illegible] class dogs. Sir Bedivere, although n[illegible] old, was looking stronger and bigger than when he left England, and rightly won the prize for the best of his variety. I think the lady who judged them did her work very well. I could find few faults. I must apologize to the Newfoundland exhibitors for having missed seeing their exhibits, and therefore I cannot write on them. If English lovers of cocker spaniels wish to see the finest specimens and in numbers, let them go to a New York show. Two challenge classes had three each in; open dogs, black, twelve; bitches, black, fourteen; red or liver dogs six, bitches eleven; any other color, mixed, eight; puppies, thirteen; novices, ten. There was not one with a wrong type of head. In this breed the fanciers in America can walk away from us; they were the grandest I ever saw. Yorkshires were also a large and grand lot, eighteen appearing in open dogs and ten in bitches; we never get that number at a big English show. One of Mrs. Foster's breeding, Bradford Rejected, won. Toy spaniels were very good, and would hold their own in England. Pugs were not great." But there is one paragraph which seems to need some explanation, namely: "Collies were judged and placed in the order as appears in our prize list. The executive afterward altered the awards in certain classes; a copy of the alterations is at the foot of the prize list." Reference to Mr. Taylor's report of the show in our cotemporary does not throw any light on this very extraordinary statement, and the prize list he speaks of is not published.

THE celebrated case of Lougest vs. Fallon came up before Judge Blodgett in the United States Court the week before last on a hearing for a new trial. Mr. Fales, for Dr. Lougest, argued that Mr. Fallon had not fully substantiated his claim in the first trial, having omitted special marks of identification; that the dog's behavior to the Fallon family, which had been a feature in the trial, was no more than could be expected of such an affectionate animal after even a brief sojourn at the house; and that the testimony of Mr. Winchell, the original owner of the dog, and of Dr. Glover on certain anatomical peculiarities, established the dog's identity from the moment of birth to the time of its seizure at the dog show in Dr. Lougest's possession. Mr. Kingman, for Mr. Fallon, claimed that Mr. Winchell's evidence on a dog only two months old was valueless as to a fully matured dog, and the same might be said of the other temporary owners; the conduct of the dog, he urged, could not be rejected. Of the many dog men conversant with this case probably not one entertains any doubt about the dog in dispute being Dr. Lougest's Beaufort Prince, and there is one very important point in the case upon which alone it ought to be possible to bring the court round to the same way of thinking. The fact that the Fallon dog had been castrated is alluded to; also the circumstance that Beaufort Prince looks as if he might have been, though in reality he has not. The question of identity can be established by any amount of expert testimony on this point. The judge said that it would be an important fact in the evidence, and his decision would be held until further light on the subject. Mr. Fales insisted that there was a great principle at stake, not hinging so much on the value of the dog as upon his client's reputation.

I AM sorry, and I think a very large number of exhibitors and owners of dogs in the United States and Canada will be when they learn that through personal feelings of certain parties on the dog show committee the energetic secretary and superintendent of so many dog shows, Mr. C. A. Stone of Toronto, has been deposed from the position he has held for so many years with the Industrial Exposition Association. We all know that it has been by his great energy and hard work that he has built up the Toronto show from a small local affair to an international show second to none. But I hear that the matter is not settled yet; as many claim that the dog show committee has no power to depose any official of the industrial exposition, and that the matter has now to come before the board of directors of the Industrial Exposition Association. I cannot see how they as business men, who look to the dog show only for the dollars and cents that are in it, can take the chances of changing secretaries and of appointing a man very little known and who has no practical experience outside of managing two small local shows of the Toronto Kennel Club in the place of a man of Mr. Stone's experience and personal acquaintance all over Canada and the United States. Any person who has been closely connected with a dog show is quite aware that it is the hard work and arrangements previous to the show that make the success of any show, as after the dogs are in the building it is only a matter of keeping them. The great trouble is to get them there.

London, Ont. T. G. DAVEY.

THE following amusing story is told by the Birmingham (England) Daily Mail of a dog developing a mania for nursing dolls: "The latest sensation in Birmingham is the doll-snatching dog. The animal is the property of a lady who resides at Small Heath, and some time ago one of her little girls was very fond of inducing the dog to carry her doll, and the animal acquired a passion for relieving the child of her precious charge. The dog would carry the doll about for hours, and oftentimes take it to his kennel and lie down beside it for a greater part of the day. He never harmed the doll, always gripping its clothes, and not defacing it in the slightest. Up to a certain point its tendencies were productive of unadulterated fun, and so popular did the dog become that the children of the neighborhood frequently came to its owner's house with the query, 'Please, Mrs. ——, can your dog come and take my doll for a walk?' But by [illegible] the animal's healthy affection for dolls developed [illegible] absolute passion, and now a more unpopular qua[illegible] does not exist in the whole suburb. Not content with carrying a doll when requested to do so, the animal commenced to prowl about the neighborhood and forcibly deprive stray children of their treasured pets. Whenever and wherever he saw a doll in a child's arms he would [illegible] walk up to her, seize the prize, and run off with [illegible]. On a single day he has been known to [illegible] captures home, and the maternal indignation [illegible] something terrible to contemplate."

A GREAT many people think that imported dogs always represent the investment of a good round sum in American dollars, but as a matter of fact such is only occasionally the case. The following letter from Mr. A. M. Hodgson, of Bishopstoke, Eng., to our English cotemporary, the Stock-Keeper, affords a few instances of well-known winners at American shows being picked up in England at very moderate prices. "I cannot let the remarks made by Mr. James Taylor in his notes 'Round About the New York Dog Show' anent bulldogs go without protest. He says: 'I think English bulldog judges should be more careful in giving their awards; a certain bitch that did a lot of winning was deformed on one leg; I often pointed it out. Through her wins she was sold at a good figure, and can only get V.H.C. in America on account of her deformity.' Now it is patent to every bulldog man that he refers to Haphazard, who has the misfortune to have one of her feet splayed, and perhaps it will also be a surprise to your readers to learn that the 'good figure' received for her was ten golden sovereigns. I also exported Wal Hampton (who has worked his way into the challenge class) and Heathen, the sire of Monkey Brand, each at the same figure; the latter I purchased of Mr. James Taylor for £15. I don't think that I can be accused of selling dogs to our American cousins at exorbitant prices. The only large (?) sum I ever received by the sale of a dog in America was for Harper, £60, who was sold for exportation by Fred Hinks, of Birmingham."

ON March 7 the entries will close for the Los Angeles dog show, the seventh annual show of the Southern California Kennel Club. The entrance fee is $2, $2.50, or $3, according to size of breed, in view of which the prizes seem very paltry in comparison with what are usually given for such entrance fees; but no doubt it is the best the club can do, and exhibitors on the Pacific Coast evidently prefer a show with small prizes to no show at all, in which they are quite right. Mastiffs, St. Bernards, Great Danes, greyhounds, pointers, English setters and smooth fox terriers have each two challenge classes of $5 and $3; two open classes, with $3, $2 and a diploma as the prizes; and two puppy classes, with two diplomas in each; pointers, greyhounds and fox terriers also have two novice classes, in which the prizes are diplomas. Dachshunde have two open classes, with prizes of $3 and $2. But Old English sheepdogs, toy spaniels, Dandie Dinmont, Bedlington, Scottish, Irish, Yorkshire, black and tan, Skye and toy terriers, Italian greyhounds, schipperkes, pugs and miscellaneous do not get any cash at all; two open classes, with two diplomas in each, are their portion. Other breeds get $5 and $3 in the challenge classes, and diplomas in the open and puppy classes. The kennel prizes (for three or more dogs) are diplomas, and the special prizes are merchandise donated. Judges were announced last week. Our old friend, Dr. R. J. Withers, is secretary and superintendent, and no doubt veterinarian, too.

IT looks as if Des Moines fanciers have been remiss about formulating plans for another successful dog show in connection with the state fair next September. They should have had their arrangements made and have been ready to lay their plans before the board of directors of the Iowa State Agricultural Society when it held its meeting on March 21. The show given last September by the Des Moines Kennel Club was worthy of a repetition this year; in fact [illegible] considered one of the best at[illegible] and the Des Moines Capital scores a [illegible] marks: "Just now, when the di[illegible] are thinking of new attractions, [illegible] the dog show and give it them[illegible] done successfully at the great in[illegible] Toronto, at the Rhode Island state fair at Providence and many other places, and all of them have found it not only a great drawing card, but a financial success as well. Let the fair managers try it one year, and then, if they are not satisfied, they can drop it." We hope the members of the Des Moines Kennel Club will stir in this matter and either make arrangements to again hold a dog show in connection with the state fair or do all in their power to induce the board of directors of the fair to make a dog show a part of the fair.

THE following circular letter has been addressed by the Canadian Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to the secretaries of kennel clubs in the Dominion:

DEAR SIR:—I am instructed by the executive committee to call your attention to the amended copy of a resolution passed by the English Kennel Club and to earnestly request that you will bring it before the committee and members of your association with the view of ascertaining whether they will follow the excellent example set by the English club. As you are probably aware, H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, both a keen sportsman and lover of dogs, has written a letter strongly condemning the practice of cropping as both cruel and useless. The executive committee would call your attention to the fact that the pain of the operation, though had enough when practiced skillfully, is frequently greatly enhanced by being performed by untrained persons.

Yours faithfully,
G. DURNFORD, Secy.-Treas.

The resolution referred to is, of course, the one that recently announced to the fancy in Great Britain that no dog born after March 31, 1895, nor Irish terrier born after December 31, 1889, can, if cropped, win a prize at any show held under the English Kennel Club's rules.

A MEETING of Milwaukee dog, poultry and pigeon fanciers was held in that city last Saturday evening, there being present Messrs. C. Cass Hendee (Highland Kennels), Louis Steffen, secretary of the Northwestern Beagle Club, H. Volt, J. Colligan, W. C. Henry, John Callahan, M. A. Doerfler, James Ormsby, J. Meisenheimer, R. Graf, C. J. Kaiser, the water spaniel breeder, J. Setz, H. Dose, F. S. Morrison and W. Loeffler, the dachshund fancier, to represent the canine interests. It was proposed to organize a kennel club and a poultry club, with a view to holding a combined show next Autumn. At present there is nothing definite as to dates, as the meeting was an informal affair, but we are assured there is more enthusiasm among the dog men for a show than ever before, and that their ambition is to form a kennel club which will become a member of the American Kennel Club and hold regular dog shows. On Thursday evening of this week there is to be another meeting, at which it is expected a permanent organization will be formed.

MACK—HE NEVER MISSES A COPY

TO own a dog from puppyhood to old age means that one will become greatly attached to it, and anyone who has lost an old favorite will sympathize with Mrs. A. R. Loag of Fort Wayne, Ind., whose English setter Van recently died from injuries received by being run over by a police patrol wagon. Mrs. Loag writes us: "Van was one of the most noted hunting dogs in this vicinity, but about a year and a half ago he became stone deaf, which was the cause of the accident that caused his death. My husband, the late Dr. George W. Loag, got him at the age of nine months, and Van was twelve years old on the eleventh day of last month." Mr. M. Heller of Monroeville, Ind., who bred Van, also sends us a few lines, saying: "He was the last in this state of that famous nick between Ruby and Druid; and although not so famous as Buckellow or Sue, it was through lack of opportunity, or he might have become so."

DETAILS of an incident in which the fasting powers of a dog were very forcibly demonstrated have just been published in France. A gamekeeper, living in the Haute Saone, had a dog which was much given to fox-hunting on its own account. One day the dog ran a fox to ground and began a "set-to" under ground. Suddenly the gamekeeper, listening outside, heard something fall, and then followed silence. Either the dog had been killed or the soil had fallen in, so the gamekeeper made an effort to dig the animal out. As the ground was rocky he failed, and, giving up the job, went home, and then forgot him. One day a neighbor, passing near the spot, heard a faint growl, and at once ran off and told the gamekeeper, who returned with another friend and some shovels. After five minutes' digging they liberated the poor beast, who was wasted to a skeleton, and whose nose and claws bore witness to the efforts he had made to get out. He had been imprisoned for three weeks, and must have fasted all that time.

I AM informed that the beagle Jean Val Jean, who won first and then champion in the New England Beagle Club's trials last year, died on March 4 by drowning in an old well at Oxford, Mass. His owner, the popular Mr. Homer Joslin, will have the sympathy of all lovers of the beagle in his sad loss. Speaking of the AMERICAN FIELD as an advertising medium I will say that I received a call from Kennels Trla Vogliera, Pavia, Italy, yesterday regarding my dogs. This speaks well for the circulation of the AMERICAN FIELD as an advertising medium as well as for the world-wide reputation to which the Glenrose Beagle Kennels have attained. I regret that press of other business will not admit of my giving my attention more to my dogs, but perhaps in a year or two I shall be with the "boys" again the ring and at the field trials.

Bucksport, Me. F. W. CHAPMAN.

FROM far western exchanges we learn of the organization of the St. Bernard Club of California. At an informal meeting on March 20 of Messrs. A. J. Kidd, F. Fry, J. G. Barker, W. M. Craig, O. H. Williams, H. McCracken, W. H. Collins, J. R. Kelly, Capt. W. Poole, J. B. Wingate, Dr. A. T. Regensberger, A. Russell Crowell and J. R. Dixon in the office of the Breeder and Sportsman, a temporary organization was effected, and Messrs. Barker and Crowell were temporarily elected chairman and secretary. Messrs. Crowell and Williams were appointed a committee to draft a constitution and by-laws, and Messrs. Barker and Crowell were appointed to confer with the committee of the Pacific Kennel Club on the subject of engaging Miss Whitney to judge St. Bernards at the San Francisco show.

THE Massachusetts state Senate on March 19 ordered to a third reading a bill which, if it becomes law, will permit any person to slay in cold blood, if he can, a dog which suddenly assaults him while he is peacefully riding or walking outside the inclosure of its owner; and any person to kill a dog discovered in the act of worrying hens or any fowl. This may result in the abrupt termination of a few bright canine careers, but as a general thing people do not go about prepared to shoot on sight, and of those who do a good many would be just as apt to wound themselves as hit the dog. But dogs with a penchant for killing poultry had better take warning.

MR. W. J. BRYSON, president of the Mascoutah Kennel Club, has been instrumental in having a bill introduced in the Illinois legislature, the features of which are similar to the one now in force in New York. It provides that a license of $2 shall be paid on every dog or cat for the first year and $1 for every year thereafter. It does away with the muzzling of dogs. Whenever a dog or cat is found bearing a license tag the owner is to be at once notified. Instead of placing stray dogs in the charge of a poundmaster, they are to be turned over to the Humane Society. A complete record is to be kept of all animals seized, stating when they were seized, by whom, under what circumstances, and a complete description of the animal.

AT the Canadian Kennel Club's executive meeting held on February 8—a report of which was published in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 23—a motion was carried that: "The executive may use its discretion in modifying Sec. 1 of Rule XV and Regulation No. 5, by granting permission to recognized kennel clubs to hold shows under C. K. C. auspices, providing the entry list, judges and premiums offered meet with the approbation of the committee and on payment of a fee of $10." The officers of the Toronto Kennel Club should avail themselves of this change and see to it that their show this month is under C. K. C. auspices, so that wins may be recognized by the C. K. C.

MR. W. H. WORTH, the Gordon setter breeder, tells us he has been having his share of bad luck of late. Since January 15 three of his bitches have whelped, and each had a nice litter. There were twenty-seven puppies in all, of which Mr. Worth destroyed three, and the last one of the two dozen died from distemper on March 16. Several of the puppies died when very young from worms, and Mr. Worth vows that never again will he omit to get the dam as free as possible from internal parasites; but owing to prolonged sickness and death in his family he has not been able lately to give his dogs the attention they needed.

WE publish in this issue an excellent portrait of Mack, owned by Mr. W. E. Walton of Richmond, Va., regarding which he writes: "He is a litter brother of the dog that I lost by death, Ned W (12286). It was impossible to get him on a point, being the close season, so I took the next most interesting subject, the AMERICAN FIELD. He seems very much interested in it, and like his master, reads all of the advertisements in it. I have a stack of AMERICAN FIELDS over three feet high, and I hope to see it twelve. I also hope that Dr. Rowe will then be its editor."

I HAVE returned from Aiken, S. C., where there was quite a big lot of my eastern friends, some of whom have given me their names to present for membership in the United States Field Trial Club, such as F. R. Hitchcock, H. B. Duryea, W. S. Bell, Frank G. Hagan and several others. This makes about thirty-five members that I have induced to join the club.

Hickory Valley, Tenn. J. M. AVENT.

THE St. Louis Globe-Democrat is authority for the statement that Mr. G. B. Simpson, superintendent of the Wells-Fargo Express Company, is a welcome addition to the roster of the St. Louis Kennel Club. It is to be hoped that he will at once become converted to the principle of reasonable express rates for dogs, and that he will straightaway use his influence with the Wells-Fargo Company to that end.

DR. R. R. BRAXTAN, A. T. Ackerman and Jno. Huebner, of Loogootee, Ind., have formed a copartnership and gone into bloodhounds. They purchased, last week, from Mr. Roger Williams, a brace of puppies by imported Buccaneer out of Lady Marjorie. It is the intention of these gentlemen to establish a bloodhound kennel the peer of any in the country.

THE Duquesne Kennel Club offers $10 for the best four spaniels owned and entered by one person or kennel; also a second prize of $5 in Class 74. If a special carload is made up from New York the United States Express Co. will charge $3 per hundred pounds, and return all free.

Pittsburg, Pa. JOHN MOORHEAD JR., Prest.

MR. S. W. VIDLER'S winning team of deerhounds at the Denver show had the misfortune to take distemper home with them, and Lass o' Lowrie, a promising young bitch that was second in her class, has succumbed. Fortunately for Mr. Vidler, he had all his young greyhounds kenneled at the Colorado Springs Country Club house instead of out at Windmill Ranch.

THE Liberty Kennels, formerly of Hyattville, O., have removed to Columbus, O. Some of the dogs will still be kept at Hyattville.

COURSING AT BRENTWOOD PARK

(Special Report.)

In consequence of the severity of the weather the eight-dog stake intended to be run March 16 was postponed until the twenty-third. Though as a rule postponements are not attended with success, it can be safely said that the above occasion proved a rare exception. The remarkable change in the weather seemed to infuse high spirits into the lovers of the leash, and brought with it a change in the personnel of the entries from those made a week previous. Some of the entries, as seen below, were from the best stock in this country and stood out in glaring contrast with that which was owned by the residents of the city and county of St. Louis one year ago; thanks to Mr. H. C. Lowe of Lawrence, Kan., for the impetus given to coursing in St. Louis when he came here to the first open meeting given at Brentwood Park, a year ago, carrying off first, second, third and fourth moneys. The clean sweep seemed to tickle the fancy of some of the greyhound owners and awake them to the fact that they "were not in it" when it came to coursing with imported stock. The fact was realized, and immediately after an occasional stranger appeared in town, which awakened a spirit of laudable rivalry, led off by Mr. C. A. Robinson and followed by Messrs. Egan, Bambrick, Brown, Curran and McElrath (Border Ruffian not included). The card run through last Saturday included the Lord Neversettle—Partera, Glenkirk—Innocence, and Lord Neversettle—White Lips stock, the Glenkirk—Innocence supplying the winner and runner-up. It was to be regretted after the card had been run down that the stewards decided on an eight-dog stake instead of a sixteen, so enthusiastic were the spectators over the high standard of sport given. Everything seemed seemed to contribute to its success. The hares, which have been in the park since last November, were quite familiar with all the escapes and gave ample opportunity to test the speed of the dogs; the corral arrangements, in the hands of Messrs. Crews and McElrath, were simply perfect; the slipping, which was undertaken by Mr. McElrath, owing to indisposition, through illness, of Mr. Egan, was well done with one exception, which might be passed over; and the judging of Mr. D. J. O'Callaghan seemed to give entire satisfaction even to the beaten owners. The weather, which seemed to be ideal to the spectators, was rather warm for the genuine coursing man.

In the first round Comet vanquished St. Louis Girl with seeming ease, allowing the bitch to score once with the kill. It was a surprise to many to see Comet lead the Girl from slips three lengths, it being the first time she was knocked out of the first turn while she has been running in the park.

Chartist fairly smothered Sarsfield.

The most exciting course of the day was an undecided between Mulcaster and Lady Alko. Lady got away from slips a full length the best of Mulcaster, but he overhauled her after one of the closest runs ever made to a hare by two greyhounds. In the run-off Lady showed a lack of training. Mulcaster led her three lengths to the hare and won with a lot to spare.

Edgebrook Pearl was not in it with Eleanor.

FIRST TIES

The loss of two toenails by Comet in his first course seemed to take a great deal out of him, as in his course with Chartist he did not seem to be possessed of the burst of speed shown earlier in the day. Chartist led to the hare by two lengths and after scoring second turn Comet was good for one. Chartist again handled his game in working order and got the flag, though Comet made a splendid kill.

Mulcaster and Eleanor got a good slip to a game hare. Mulcaster led by three lengths for first turn, Eleanor accounting for herself in good position after several exchanges. Mulcaster gave the bitch a clean go-by; but she was not to be shaken off and after some very even work piled up a big score, and showing the most decided staying qualities she got the flag with high honors. Eleanor seemed rather distressed after this course.

In the interim between the end of the first ties and the final, a few matches were run off; among others one between Mr. Chas. Park's Ruth and Mr. Chas. A. Robinson's Banker, in which Banker showed up well in the first part of the course but quit about half way, allowing Ruth to win. Ruth is eleven and Banker nine months old.

FINAL COURSE

Chartist, who showed much fresher than Eleanor, led about two lengths and scored a turn, when the bitch went in for a short innings. Chartist again took charge after some few exchanges and ran up a good score, with Eleanor in close attendance; but before the time to show her staying qualities arrived the hare escaped, leaving Chartist a decided winner.

The most friendly feelings seemed to prevail among all, and it was noticeable that the tough element which cast such a reflection on the management of the Park heretofore was unheard of at this meeting.

OCCIDENTAL COURSING CLUB'S MEETING

This club has been revived and reorganized, and from California exchanges we learn that it held its first meeting this season on March 10 at Golden Gate Coursing Park, near San Francisco. John Grace judged, James Wren handled the slips, J. R. Dickson was slip steward, D. Curtin handled the flags, and D. D. Roach, A. Merrill and Thos. Ford were the field stewards. The hares proved a good lot and the day's sport was fine. The summary of the running is as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, March 10. THE OCCIDENTAL STAKES, for 20 greyhounds of all ages at $3 each; for members only. $35 added by the club and $25 added by Mr. M. Kerrigan. Winner, $40; runner-up, $30; third dog, $20; next two, $10 each.

FINAL COURSE

Gold King beat Lady Clare, and won.

NOTES

THE following item appeared in all the Denver papers just prior to the dog show recently held there: "Charles F. Hoeckel, whose greyhounds have been noted coursers in this region for a decade, several years ago took a fancy to the borzois and secured the thoroughbred puppy Watke, which he desired to use both as a racer and to attempt to cross with his greyhound stock to improve coursing qualities. The dog proved to be a wonderful racer and Mr. Hoeckel, having heard a great deal of the dogs owned by George Gould, is desirous of giving them an insight into jack-rabbit tricks. He accordingly issues the following challenge: 'Watke, the only thoroughbred Russian wolfhound that has grown up in Colorado. This dog is entered in the coming bench show to compete with George Gould's pair of wolfhounds. Watke is open to run any wolfdog in America for money, marbles or chalk. Colorado wolves are barred. C. F. HOECKEL.'" The idea that a man owning noted coursing greyhounds would cross them with borzois to improve their "coursing qualities" is too rich. If Mr. Hoeckel had cared to inform himself beforehand he could have learned that Mr. Gould's team of borzois consists of two bitches that are in whelp and a young dog of no experience on the plains; and if he had thought for a moment or two it might have occurred to him that hounds which had spent a whole month on show benches could not possibly be fit for coursing. However, Mr. Hoeckel's desire for a match is to be satisfied, for we are informed that Mr. J. G. Massey, of Rawlins, Wyo., has accepted the challenge on behalf of his bitch By'stra, a litter sister of Mr. Hoeckel's dog, and has deposited $50 as a forfeit with Mr. C. H. Withington, superintendent of the recent Denver dog show; the match to be run on hares and under coursing rules.

MR. A. P. SLOCUM writes to say that the prospects are good for a successful meeting at Oaks next week, so we hope the weather will be satisfactory. Nothing is more annoying than to have a blizzard come along the night of the draw, or just as the meeting gets well under way. He says: "I think that we will come mighty near filling. Mr. Whiting has two here at work, and Rew one; Jessup & Wood one, and I have three or four that I will enter; we have now ten or twelve that are here that will all go. Huntley says we can count on eight from Huron; part are J. H. Watson's. I have three other entries in and paid. Waterhouse has two, and I think we can safely count on six from adjacent towns. McNickle and Durbin have three, and Aberdeen promises six. So I feel safe in counting on a thirty-two. Chas. Robinson, of St. Louis, is talking of coming up, and many others that we don't count on."

THE St. Louis dailies publish some wonderful stuff about the local meeting. Describing the run-up between Lady Alko and Mulcaster the Globe-Democrat avers that "in the second course the dogs left the slips together and ran head and head for 2,200 yards." Of the winning dogs it says: "The three last dogs in the stake are litter brothers and sister by Glenkirk out of Lady Innocence. Thoroughhead, brother of Lady Innocence's sire, is a [illegible]loo Cup, and Glenline, a litter brother [illegible] winner, won first money in two big [illegible] S. D., last Fall." And it further states [illegible]n's Comet, by Lord Never Settle out [illegible]ier of the celebrated Master Jim, who [illegible] Yes, indeed.

FAULTFINDING is always an unpleasant duty, but we must call the attention of the officers of the new St. Louis Coursing Club—though no reflection on Mr. McElrath is intended—to the fact that Rule 39 was violated when that gentleman both ran a dog and did the slipping. To be sure he only undertook the latter on account of Mr. Egan's indisposition, but a rule is a rule.

Rifle

FIXTURES

NINTH TOURNAMENT OF THE WESTERN SHARPSHOOTERS' UNION

The executive board of the Western Sharpshooters' Union has issued the following program for the ninth tournament of the association, to be held at Milwaukee, Wis., from June 19 to 23

June 19. Assembiage of all shooters at headquarters, No. 318 State St., at 10:30 a. m. After arrival on the range grounds, address by the president. Dinner. Firing begins at 2 o'clock and closes at 6 o'clock p. m.

June 20. Firing begins at 8 o'clock a. m. Intermission from 12 to 1 o'clock. Firing closes at 6 o'clock p. m.

June 21. Firing begins and closes as on Thursday. Team contest in the afternoon.

June 22. Firing begins at 8 o'clock a. m. Intermission from 12 to 1 o'clock. Firing closes at 5:30 p. m.

Prizes will be awarded on Sunday, June 23, and the full program for that day will be published later.

All shooting will be done at 200 yards, and all prizes are guaranteed by the Milwaukee Sharpshooters' Society.

The targets and prizes to be awarded on each are as follows:

UNION TARGET (Target of Honor)

This target contest consists of 25 ¾-inch rings and is commonly known as "German Ring Target." The black is 12 inches in diameter and includes the rings from 18 upwards, the 25 ring being white. Number of shots to be fired, three; no re-entry.

All donations from societies, business men, etc., to the value of about $2,000 to $3,000, will be distributed on this target and every shooter will receive a prize.

First prize, donated by Milwaukee Sharpshooters' Society, $160. Second prize, donated by Western Sharpshooters' Union, $100. Other donations will be published later.

KING TARGET

Target used—same as Union target. Number of shots 10; no re-entry. The shooter making the best score will be crowned as "King" of the tournament, and receive the "King medal", valued at $35, and $15 in cash. Besides this there will be sixty cash prizes as follows: Second prize, $25; third, $20; fourth, $18; fifth, $16; sixth, $14; seventh, $12; eighth, $10; ninth to eleventh prize, each $9, $27; twelfth to fourteenth prize, each $8, $24; fifteenth to twentieth prize, each $7, $42; twenty-first to twenty-sixth prize, each $6, $36; twenty-seventh to thirty-second prize, each $5, 30; thirty-third to fortieth prize, each $4, $32; forty-first to forty-ninth prize, each $3, $27; fiftieth to sixty-first prize, each $2, $24. Total $357.

"STICH" TARGET

This target has a 12-inch black, with a 9-inch removable disk. When hit this disk is removed, numbered and placed under seal and subsequently the exact string measure taken. The shortest string takes first prize, and so on, but the shooter receives a prize for his best shot only. A shooter making 3 hits receives an additional cash prize of $5. Hits are marked by red flag and current number of hit. Number of shots, three; no re-entry.

On this target the following prizes will be awarded: First prize, $50; second, $40; third, $30; fourth, $20; fifth, $18; sixth, $14; seventh, $12; eighth, $10; ninth, $9; tenth to twelfth prize, each $8, $24; thirteenth to fifteenth prize, each $7, $21; sixteenth to eighteenth prize, each $6, $18; nineteenth to twenty-fourth prize, each $5, $30; twenty-fifth to thirty-second prize, each $4, $32; thirty-third to forty-eighth prize, each $3, $48; forty-ninth to sixtieth prize, each $2, $24. Total $400.

The foregoing targets—Union, King and "Stich"—are exclusively for members of the W. S. U.

The combination card entitling to shoot on these targets is sold at $10.

The following targets are free for all.

MAN TARGET

This target represents the upper part of a man's body and is divided into 39 ⅝-inch perpendicular spaces, counting from 20 as the center space to 1 on each side; line shots only count. Cards entitling to 5 shots are sold as follows: First card, $2; every succeeding card, $1. Entries unlimited. A shooter is entitled to a prize on the best card only.

On this target the following prizes will be awarded: First prize, $60; second, $50; third, $40; fourth, $30; fifth, $20; sixth, $18; seventh, $16; eighth, $14; ninth, $12; tenth, $11; eleventh, $10; twelfth to thirteenth prize, each $9, $18; fourteenth to sixteenth prize, each $8, $24; seventeenth to twentieth prize, each $7, $28; twenty-first to twenty-fifth prize, each $6, $30; twenty-sixth to thirty-first prize, each $5, $30; thirty-second to fortieth prize, each $4, $36; forty-first to fifty-third prize, each $3, $39; fifty-fourth to sixtieth prize, each $2, $14. Total $500.

PEOPLE'S TARGET

Target used—German Ring target. Card entitling to four shots are sold as follows: First card $2; each succeeding card $1. Entries unlimited. A shooter is entitled to a prize on the best card only.

On this target the following prizes will be awarded: First prize, $50; second, $40; third, $30; fourth, $25; fifth, $20; sixth, $18; seventh, $16; eighth, $14; ninth, $12; tenth, $10; eleventh to thirteenth prize, each $9, $27; fourteenth to seventeenth prize, each $8, $32; eighteenth to twenty-first prize, each $7, $28; twenty-second to twenty-fifth prize, each $6, $24; twenty-sixth to twenty-ninth prize, each $5, $20; thirtieth to thirty-sixth prize, each $4, $28; thirty-seventh to forty-fourth prize, each $3, $24; forty-fifth to sixtieth prize, each $2, $32. Total $450.

POINT TARGET

This target consists of a 12-inch black, containing two smaller circles of 7½-inch and 3½-inch diameter respectively. The inner circle counts 3 points, indicated by red flag; the middle circle counts 2 points, indicated by blue flag, and the outer circle counts 1 point, indicated by white flag.

Single cards entitling to 20 shots are sold at $1; double cards, entitling to 20 shots and counting each point double, at $2.25. Shooting 250 points on this target entitles the shooter to a handsome gold medal, valued at $12, the one scoring the first 250 points receiving a special medal with suitable inscription. For every red flag shot after the first 250 points the shooter receives twenty cents, if a single card, and forty cents, if a double card. The shooter scoring the first red flag at the beginning of the tournament receives an extra award of $1; for the first and last red flag at the beginning and close of every half day during the tournament, fifty cents, and for the last red flag at close of tournament an extra award of $5 is given. Besides this the following cash prizes will be awarded for the greatest number of red flags shot during the tournament. (In this award red flags shot on double cards count singly):

For most "red flags," $20; second, $15; third, $12; fourth, $10; fifth, $9; sixth, $8; seventh, $7; eighth, $6; ninth, $5; tenth, $5; eleventh, $4; twelfth, $4; thirteenth, $3; fourteenth, $3; fifteenth, $3; sixteenth, $2; seventeenth, $2; eighteenth, $2; nineteenth, $2; twentieth, $1. Total $122.

STANDARD TARGET

In order to accommodate off hand shooters and encourage off hand shooting, we have decided to give the American Standard target a place among the others, the shooting to be done strictly off hand, without elbow rest. Cards entitling to ten shots are sold at $1; entries unlimited, the best card only entitling to a prize. All money received for entries, after deducting 10 per cent. for expenses, will be divided into twenty-five graduated cash prizes, the Milwaukee Sharpshooters' Society guaranteeing the first three prizes of $25, $20 and $15 respectively.

TEAM CONTEST

Target used—German Ring target, ten shots per man. Teams to be composed of five members belonging to one society; no re-entry. A society may be represented by several teams, which will be numbered consecutively. Entries must be made on or before June 15, 1895, with the secretary, accompanied by $15 cash for each team. If a member is prevented from attending, the team may furnish a substitute, but same must be a bona-fide member of the same society. No shooter is allowed to shoot on more than one team.

Every member of the team making the highest score will receive a handsome gold medal with suitable inscription. The entry money, after deducting the cost of the medals, and 10 per cent. for expenses, will be divided into purses of 50, 30 and 20 per cent. and awarded to the teams making second, third and fourth best scores respectively.

FROM the note published in the AMERICAN FIELD two weeks ago from Jos. E. Badger Jr., of Frankfort, Kan., one would think that I had claimed to be the champion colored live bird shot of the West and had promised to defend such championship for a large stake, when the facts are that I only asked Mr. Clay, the gentleman for whom Mr. Badger Jr. did the writing, how he thought the gentlemanly sport of trap shooting could best be stimulated among men of our race. The question I asked was not answered direct, but instead I was notified that on a wager of $50, or as much more as I desired, Mr. Clay would shoot me an individual match. I replied that I did not claim to be a champion, neither did I care to shoot for a big stake, but that I was ready at any time to shoot a race with any man of my color for the championship, the loser to pay all expenses. Mr. Clay's backer then said that probably there were other colored trap shots that would like to enter a contest for the championship and if Clay and I should shoot for it they would raise a howl, and that the best way to settle the matter would be to get some dealer in sportsmen's goods or some manufacturer to put up a medal or trophy emblematic of the colored championship of the United States and let all who wished to compete for it come in, and to hold the tournament where the trophy was to be shot for—at Kansas City, Leavenworth or Atchison Now, in my former article I was only endeavoring to carry out the idea suggested by Mr. Clay and his backer, and why they should construe it to mean that I wanted a private race with Mr. Clay for the colored championship is more than I know. If they think I am not ready to meet them as I proposed they are mistaken, although I again say I am not seeking championship matches, nor was I when I suggested that the colored men have a tournament and shoot for the colored championship.

Pleasant Hill, Mo. T. H. CONRON.

THE program for the Michigan State League shoot to be held at Battle Creek, Mich., on April 23 and 24 is to hand, and in its make-up is quite attractive, being printed on fine heavy paper and in pleasing colors. Nine events are scheduled for each day, the more interesting features being the contest for the state team championship, the "triplet" contest, and the contest for the individual championship of Michigan. The entrance to the different events ranges from 50 cents to $3.60. In the team contest members of the winning team each get a diamond trophy. In the individual championship race, participants will be handicapped according to the league classification and there will be three medals, expert, semi-expert and amateur. During the tourtuament a team contest will be shot between Grand Rapids and Battle Creek, for the silver trophy now held by the Battle Creek team. American Shooting Association rules will govern and the Parker handicap will prevail. The grounds of the Battle Creek Club are as fine as any in Michigan and the tourtuament, barring a couple of state events, will be open to all.

THE Colorado State Fish and Game Protective Association has selected May 13, 14 and 15 as the dates and Pueblo as the place for holding its ninth trap shooting tournament. Ten events, all at targets, are announced for each day and after these have been shot live bird events will be arranged, For highest average on each of the two first days $10 in cash will be awarded, and for highest average on the third day $15 cash. The individual championship contest will be at 20 singles, everything known, 10 at known traps, unknown angles, 10 at unknown traps, and 5 pairs. This contest will follow Event No. 6 on the second day. The team shoot for the Salida Cup will follow Event No. 6 on the third day, the teams each to be composed of three men and each man to shoot at 20 singles, everything known, and 5 pairs. Purses will be divided into four moneys and all contests will be under the rapid fire system. Five hundred dollars in cash will be added to the purses.

IN conversation the other day with Mr. Chas. Grimm of Clear Lake, Ia., regarding the live bird championship medal of his state, now held by Mr. H. J. Wilson of Emmetsburg, Mr. Grimm said that the people of Clear Lake purchased the medal and turned it over to him to name the conditions under which it should be shot for, and although it might not have been stated in so many words that challenges for it should be made through the AMERICAN FIELD it was so understood, and the fact that up to this time all challenges for it had been made through the AMERICAN FIELD established a precedent at least that he did not think Mr. Wilson had any right to ignore; and that if any man, resident of Iowa, should challenge Mr. Wilson through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD, accompanying the challenge with the required forfeit, Mr. Wilson would have to recognize such challenge and shoot the match or forfeit the trophy.

THE Summer Gun Club is the name of a recent organization of Chicago sportsmen and trap shooters. The club membership is limited to twenty-five and is already nearly filled. The club will shoot at Watson's Park, Burnside, 12-gauge guns only being allowed, and every man is to shoot at the same rise—30 yards—no handicap, the best score made from the scratch to win both the glory and the "boodle." The club is made up largely of young men who are "in it" for sport and recreation, and yet among its members are to be found some excellent shots, both in the field and at the trap. The club will be represented by a good team of its members at the Illinois State Sportsmen's tournament at Burnside in June, and it might be well for some of the older clubs to keep an eye on them as they will be there for business.

THE Sibley Mound Gun Club wishes to claim May 8, 9 and 10 for its 1895 tournament. The tournament is to be under the management of A. G. Bierbauer, Ben Powell and C. H. Saulpaugh. We guarantee $200 added money besides a lot of valuable and useful merchandise prizes amounting to about $150. The tournament will be held at the fair grounds, and all shooters will have free transportation to and from there We will also serve hot coffee and lunch on the grounds, free to shooters. Empire targets and expert traps with electric pull will be used. The entries run from $1 to $5 and nobody will be barred. We will guarantee everyone attending fair treatment, a good time and plenty of shooting. Programs will be ready April 1, and can be had by addressing C. H. Saulpaugh.

Mankato, Minn. A. G. BIERBAUER.

THE Oil City Gun Club has elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, C. H. Duncan; vice-president, Alfred Smedley; secretary, H. C Keeser; treasurer, L. L. Graham; directors, F. S. Bates, M. Scheide and J. L. Abbott. The above named gentlemen will also act as the executive committee. The club has experienced quite a boom recently and a great many new names have been added to the membership. Club shoots will be held every other week. Electric pull traps, with all the modern improvements essential to an up-to-date club, will soon take the place of the old outfit now in use. The purchase of a number of new guns is contemplated by the members, and advocates of "the best gun in the world" are already getting in their work.

Oil City, Pa H. C REESER.

THE program for the Galesburg Shooting Club's annual tournament to be held at Galesburg, Ill., on April 23, 24, 25 and 26, announces eight events for each of the four days, all at composition targets, entrance ranging from $1.25 to $5. On the second and third days there are to be team contests, on the second day a two-man team, 20 targets per man, and on the third day a four-man team, 40 singles per man. All purses will be divided into four moneys, and any shooter who ties for any part of a purse can draw his share if he does not wish to shoot it off. American Shooting Association rules to govern, except that "no bang, no bird." The tournament will be held in the baseball park, which is reached direct from the heart of the city by electric cars.

THE dates for the tournament of the Atchison (Kan.) Gun Club are April 16, 17 and 18, and the traps and grounds of the club will be open for practice on April 15, so that those who wish may get a little familiar with the surroundings before the tournament proper opens. No shooter will be allowed to win more than one first prize each day, but if he wins a first on the first day he may also win one first on both the second and third days. Winners of second and third moneys are not so handicapped, and there is no handicap in the sweepstakes. Shooters should remember that Mr. John Parker of Detroit, Mich., has been engaged to manage this shoot, and that fact alone should be enough to insure a large attendance.

MR. CHAS. GRIMM of Spirit Lake, Ia., after a two days' spin before the traps at Rockford, Ill., last week, where he did some very nice work considering the class of birds provided and the speed the inanimates were thrown, dropped into Chicago and spent a couple of days with his friends here. Mr. Grimm was not looking for anyone's scalp yet he said, in the presence of several of the boys who handle the scattergun quite cleverly, that he had never declared himself opposed to live bird matches and if he always felt just as he did then he did not believe he ever should. However, most of the Chicago trap shots are too busy at this season of the year to shoot many matches even if they were only for fun.

MR. E. C. MEACHAM, the head of the well-known sporting goods business of the E. C. Meacham Arms Co. of St. Louis, Mo., after a lingering illness of some months' duration, died on Tuesday, March 26. Mr. Meacham through his business relations with the sportsmen of the country, was perhaps as widely known as any dealer in sportsmen's supplies in this country, and the news of his death will be received with deep regret by very many. Mr Meacham started in business in St. Louis, in a small way, some fifteen or twenty years ago, and by tact and shrewd business energy succeeded in building up an immense trade which will be continued by the company he established, Mrs. Meacham retaining her husband's interest in the business.

MR. S. S. HALE of Purdin, Mo., passed through our city a few days since en route to New Boston, Ill., to take a week's outing and get in shootiug trim to meet Dr. Carver and Hon. Tom Marshall here next week. Mr. Hale is enjoying good health and has every reason to believe he will win both matches. The Hunter Arms Co. has made him a special gun for these matches, and, to say the least, it is a beauty. Much credit is due Mr. Al Miller of New Boston, Ill., and Mr. Al Runge of this city for getting these matches here, and no doubt their efforts will be fully appreciated by the shooting fraternity.

Burlington, Ia. BIG FOUR.

THE opening shoot of the Eureka Gun Club for 1895 occurs on Saturday, April 6, at 2 o'clock p. m., on its grounds at 79th Street and Vincennes Avenue, Auburn Park. New traps, new batteries, and other improvements. A new and novel program will be introduced. A full attendance of members is specially requested. A cordial invitation to all trap shots to be present and take part is herewith extended. Take C. & E. I. or C., R. I. & P. Railway to 79th Street, via suburban train; or State Street cable and transfer to 79th Street electric car at 61st Street.

IT is reported that Bessie Braun, the female rifle shot of Germany, has issued a challenge to compete against Annie Oakley, the female rifle and wing shot of America, in a contest at flying targets, stationary targets, glass balls, clay marbles and ring targets for a prize valued at 5,000 marks and the championship of the world. If the challenge has really been made and is not accepted by Miss Oakley, it will not be because of the fear of being defeated, but because she does not regard it ladylike to shoot for a wager.

THE Goshen (Ind.) Gun Club will hold a three days' tournament at live English sparrows and inanimate targets on April 23, 24 and 25. Arrangements have been made for an abundance of sparrows, so that those who wish to attend the tournament need have no fears but what plenty of birds will be provided. The club regrets that the Battle Creek tournament has been changed so as to conflict with that at Goshen, as it was the aim of the latter club in selecting its dates to avoid a conflict with any near-by club.

THE city council of Portland, Ore., recently passed an ordinance permitting the Multnomah Rod and Gun Club to conduct the annual shooting tournament of the State Sportsmen's Association within the limits of Portland, the location of the shooting grounds to be subject to the approval of the committee on health and police. The tournament will probably be held between June 10 and 15. There doesn't seem to be anything the matter with Portland.

THE Highland Gun Club of this city is in a prosp[illegible], having at present thirty-three members. The club will have monthly prize shoots during the Spring, Summer and Fall months, and will give as a prize to the member scoring the largest number of breaks in the eight monthly contests a fine Winchester repeating shotgun. The opening shoot of the season occurs on Saturday, April 6.

THE Forest Gun Club of Philadelphia, Pa., will have an all-day shoot on Monday, April 15, on the club's grounds at 27th Street and Lehigh Avenue. Blue Rock targets and expert traps will be used and targets will be thrown at 2 cents each. Ten events are scheduled the entrance ranging from 50 cents to $2. The shooting will commence at 10 o'clock a. m.; lunch will be served on the grounds.

ON and after April 1, 1895, my shooting park at Burnside will be open only when notice has been received from parties desiring to shoot. Notice sent to the undersigned by telephone, "Oakland 363," or by letter or telegram to Grand Crossing, Ill., not later than the previous day, will receive prompt and careful attention.

THE London Gun and Fishing Club's tournament, to be held April 9, 10, 11 and 12, promises to be a grand success. The club offers $1,000 in gold, and I can assure American shooters that attend that they will have a good time. The tournament will be under the management of the "only" Parker, of Detroit.

MR. A. G. COURTNEY, the jolly and popular salesman for the Lefever Arms Co. of Syracuse, N. Y., made the AMERICAN FIELD a pleasant call last week. It is probably true, as some of his acquaintances claim, that Mr. Courtney can crowd as much business and sport together into twenty-four hours as any gun man on the road.

MR. PAUL NORTH, representative of the Cleveland Target Co., visited his Chicago trade the first of the week, and as a matter of course dropped around to say "howdy" to the AMERICAN FIELD. Mr. North was in excellent health and the best of spirits, and said he anticipated another year of good business for his company.

THE Limited Gun Club of Indianapolis talks strongly of purchasing a tract of land convenient to that city and fitting it up in first-class shape as a shooting park where tournaments and individual matches at the trap can be held without annoyance to anyone. The stock of the club has all been subscribed for by its members.

A MOVEMENT is on foot, it is said, looking to the consolidation of the Minneapolis and St. Paul gun clubs. This would give the consolidation a membership of 200 or more, and a gun club of such proportions would be unwieldy. As a rule moderate sized gun clubs are more successful than extremely large ones.

THE Interstate Association will give a tournament at Macon, Ga., under the auspices of the Macon Gun Club, on July 17 and 18. The Macon Gun Club adds $200 in cash to the purses.

NEW JERSEY STATE LEAGUE

The second meet of the New Jersey State League was on the grounds of the Union Gun Club at Springfield, on Wednesday, March 27. As usual a crowd was present. Besides the principal event, the team shoot, thirteen sweepstake events were decided. Eight teams of five men each were present, and the contest for first place was close between the South Sides of Newark, with 106, and the Unions of Springfield, with 105. The Maplewoods were a close third with 103, followed by the Riversides with 101. These were all that passed the century mark, the others ranging from 95 down to 67, the lowest made, by the Union Hill club. The next meeting will be on the Maplewood Gun Club's grounds near Maplewood, on Thursday, April 11. Each man shot at 25 single targets in the team race. The scores:

NEW YORK COUNTRY GUN CLUB

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The above named club held a contest at its grounds at Rockaway Park on March 25. The attendance was rather light, but all hands had enough of shooting, as the scores appended will show. Several of the members averaged from 75 to 85 per cent., which everyone will concede was an excellent average for the many styles of shooting used at this club's outings. For instance, only the single-handed races, the team contests, and part of the sixth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth events were rapid firing, the rest were all expert rules in all that the word expert implies, as the indicator was turned for each and every shot, even in the walking match, the five traps throwing the Empires at the usual acute angles. Captain Edwards was here, there and everywhere, and the captain of the trap boys, John Fleming, saw that his battery of traps were in good working order before starting.

Handicaps were allowed, which induced some of the shooters of less ability to come in and take out more than they subscribed, something that seldom happens to the beginner, and which encourages him. The star sweeps were very interesting and every miss or break was greeted with a volley of ohs, ahs! and hurrahs.

Mr. Harry Heyer of the North Side Gun Club sold shells on the grounds, and the latter half of the contest were mostly shot with his ammunition, Smokeless shells and 42 grains of E. C. powder. Schorty shot his new high grade Parker gun and his usual ammuuition—3 drams of E. C. powder in Rapid cases—and came out with the top average of 85 per cent.

Most of the boys went down to the beach the night previous, and Mr. Josephus Burke honored their presence with a selection on Van Roosevelt Meyers' accordeon, the theme being "The Wearing of the Green," at 2:30 a. m. when all hands were sound asleep. He persevered despite the anathemas and rubber boots which were hurled at him from the bunks in the club house. He casually remarked the next day, when he was forgiven, that the selection was appropriate, as several of those present were members of the Emerald Gun Club. Scores as follows:

Prior to the regular events Messrs. Edwards and Schorty shot two races at 25 singles each man, the result being as follows:

TRAP AT SAN ANTONIO

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

[illegible]AN —Talk about the shooters of San Antonio [illegible]ng able to have a first-class shoot if [illegible]me to look around for the facts to sup[illegible]are not to be found. On the contrary the evidence is all on the other side of the question. The only thing necessary to get out a good crowd, either at a club shoot or a tournament, is to classify the shooters so that all have some show. This the San Antonio Gun Club does, and as was shown at the opening shoot of the club this season, held a few days since, the boys turn out like darkies to a watermelon sociable. The very fact that the management of this club has exerted itself in behalf of the poor shot as well as the expert is what has made it so popular and strong, it now being one of the largest and solidest clubs in the state.

To lovers of the gun who delight in stopping the erratic flight of the inanimate target, the opening shoot of the San Antonio Gun Club is always an event looked forward to with delight, for the reason that anticipations made for a pleasant time are never disappointed, and this season the occasion was no exception to the rule. The members of the club had made preparations for a great shoot, and a great shoot they had, and when the prize shoot was announced by President P. Shields, thirty-six shooters faced the traps and the shooting soon became fast enough to suit anyone.

There was quite an attendance of visting sportsmen, notable among them being seen the genial face of A. W. Adams of Chicago, Richard Merrill of Milwaukee, Miles and Wallace Miller of Austin, A. H. Piety of Kansas, J. Schmidt of Milwaukee, John Ellis of Galveston and Postmaster George of this city.

The preliminary shoot was at 15 single targets, rapid firiug system, unknown angles. There were twenty entries in this and the results was as follows:

As will be seen a clean score was made by Mr. R. Merrill, a visiting shooter, and he carried off the fine prize to be competed for by visiting sportsmen, donated by Mr. Chabot. The prize was a very handsome beer set imported by Wagner & Chabot from Germany for this particular occasion. Mr. Merrill is one of the prettiest and neatest shooters ever seen here. It was really a pleasure to watch him. Erect and graceful, standing at ease, with gun poised, a short, sharp command, "pull," and a pulverized bird every time.

Of the club members Vernor captured first prize; W. S. Smith second; J. Epp third; Thiele, Vollbrecht and McVicar tied for fourth, which was won by Vollbrecht in the shoot off; Samuels sixth, and Learn, Chabot, Tendick and W. Pancoast tied for seveuth, Pancoast eventually taking it after a spirited shoot off; Block took eighth "by his lonesome:" ninth was won by our worthy president, Mr. Shields, in a shoot off with Prescottt, who got in the same box; Eppstein took tenth.

EVENT No. 3.—15 singles per man, unknown angles, eighteen entries: P. Shields 9, A. W. Adams 12, Fritz 14, Chabot 7, Ellis 12, Merrill 12, Rothwell 12, Newton 7, Samuels 10, Piety 14, Vernor 9, Wallace 9, Black 11, H. W. Adams 13, J. Smith 9, Rahmsdorf 11, C. Kearney 6, G. C. Smith 4.

EVENT No. 4.—15 singles per man: Adamson 12, Vernor 14, Black 11, Rothwell 12, W. Miller 13, F. Miller 14, Smith 7, Shields 13, Merrill 13, Piety 8.

That Capt. Thiele had the traps in fine working order was evidenced by the fact that 1,900 targets were thrown from 8 o'clock to 6:45 p. m., the traps not breaking more than half a dozen birds during the afternoon. This shoot ushers in another year of continued prosperity for this popular club.

The day was an ideal one, being bright and still, with the exception of a gentle, cool breeze off the lake. It was just warm enough to make the sandwiches and soda taste good. The next shoot will be held on March 31, and so on until next October.

G. CHABOT.

WINFIELD GUN CLUB

Targets from known traps and at known angles furnished any amount of sport for the members of the above-named club on the afternoon of March 27. The event of the afternoon was the team contest which proved to be of unusual interest. The scores made in the different events follow:

EVENT No. 1.—Club contest, 7 clay birds per man, handicap rise, American Shooting Association rules to govern: James W. Colgan, 28 yards, 7; Edward V. Kent, 29 yards, 6; Henry P. RIVERTON VS. NEW UTRECHT

The conditions for the contest between ten-men team, 25 birds each man, handicap rise, on the grounds of the Riverton Gun Club, on Wednesday, March 27, seemed perfect for the contest of skill of the men selected to shoot. Quite a delegation went down from New York and they were pleasantly received by the gentlemanly Rivertons, as all visitors are. As there are two sets of traps on the grounds the shooters were divided into two squads of ten, five of each side shooting half of the scores on one set of traps and then changing to the other. At the first set, and principal one, the wind, which was quite strong, and from the northwest, blew across the traps from left to right, and here the best shooting was done, as the the total misses were 48 against 62 at the lower set of traps, where the ground is a little depressed beyond Nos. 1, 2 and 3 traps, causing a tendency to overshoot low flying birds. Besides this, the wind coming with a good sweep across the Delaware River was blowing directly from the shooter to the traps, and the way the birds left the traps was a surprise to many.

At the conclusion of the first half of the match Messrs. Davenport, Ferguson, Morris, Meyer and Capt. Money led their opponents, Messrs. Ellison, Downiug, "Leonard," Welch and Dando, by a safe lead of six birds on the hardest (the lower) set of traps, while the other half of the New Utiecht, Messrs. Deacon, Pfister, Nostrand, Keller and Lindsley, had made game work in holding their opponents, Messrs. Davis, Wolstencroft, Cartright, Gerwig and Godschalk, down to a lead of one, a clear lead of five. This lead was increased a little just after the change of traps was made, and the Rivertons at the upper set of traps gave up all hope of winning until near the end of the match when it was found that "Tee Kay" and Milt Lindsley had literally "gone to pieces" in their shootiug, getting only three birds out of the last fourteen shot at, Keller getting two out of his last seven, Lindsley but one. This gave the Rivertons the match by four birds. After the regular match all were invited to a good lunch provided by the Rivertons in their comfortable club house. After lunch a series of sweeps were indulged in until time for a return to New York. A return match will be shot on the grounds of the New Utrecht club about April 15. The scores are given below:

KEYSTONE LEAGUE VS. CLIMAX

These two clubs met on the grounds of the Climax Gun Club near Fanwood, N. J., on Monday, March 25, for the first of their series of matches on live birds, twelve men teams, 15 birds each man. The morning was showery, making the grounds, with a little use, muddy. Mr. Ben O. Bush was present with traps and new electric pull, but they did not work as satisfactorily as they should and they were finally replaced by the old traps. The device releases the trap, which seems almost noiseless in its operation; so much so that many birds remain at the trap that under most circumstances would fly. To-day it was almost an exception to have a bird fly, but when they were started nearly all seemed good flyers The match was an exceedingly tiresome one, and was delayed until the patience of many was exhausted. The crowd was not kept in usual order for these grounds and many of the visitors were not in the best of humor on account of it. A good lunch was served in the club house.

The visitors took the lead at the start and held it by a margin of two or three birds until the 141st bird, when the Climax boys led by a small margin for a while. In the last round of five birds each, the Keystones dropped a number of birds, and the Climax's lead increased to eight, finally closing at seven. The totals out of 180 birds were: Keystone League 152; Climax 159. Altogether the meet was not a success, owing principally to the trouble with the traps, the shooting being drawn out from 12 o'clock until nearly 6 o'clock p. m. The clubs meet for the second match on the Keystone grounds on Tuesday, April 16, when better conditions are sure to prevail.

In connection with the match was an optional sweepstake of $5 entrance. Dan Terry, being the only one entered in it to make a clean score, took first money (nearly $50) alone. The second and third moneys were divided among several persons. The scores:

DAYTON—FREEHOLD—BRUNSWICK

The team race of fifteen men each at 30 targets per man, at New Brunswick, N. J., on March 23, drew out a fair attendance, the weather being perfect. As expert rules were used the scores did not run so high. The Dayton and the Freehold teams had a pretty race of it and only finished ten points apart, the Daytous leading. The scores:

TRAP AT WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, D. C.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The live bird shooters of Washington, D. C., have been "doing so some more" since the opening of the year 1895. We had a shoot here on March 2 that some of the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD may like to know about.

Our "dandy" vice-president of the Capital City Gun Club being married to the Greener gun and things that are English "don'tcherknow," and having an extra gun on hand, a combination Lefever, conceived the idea of having a shoot at five birds for said gun. After hustling around for a few days twelve entries were procured and the shoot came off, and I believe everyone pronounced it a success in every particular. A more jovial or fun loving crowd would be hard to find. Our guests and shooters were Messrs. John A. Logan Jr., Perrin and Altemus, of Ohio; Bond, Kingsbury, Ducker and Gent of Baltimore; Chas. McAllister, Philadelphia; Wagner, Green, Hellen, Gulick, Arnold, Barker, Mattingly, Hall, Shuster, Maxwell and others of Washington, D. C. "Old Bad Luck" furnished the birds and owing to the short notice he had they were rather a mixed lot, but they answered the purpose very well. The wind blew a gale and made some of the birds very fast flyers. The scores follow:

EVENT No. 1.—Shoot for Lefever gun, 25 birds per man, entrance $5, birds extra All over $50 to go as second money. Class shooting, handicap rises, birds allowed the weaker shooters.

GOOD SHOOTING AT ERB'S GROUNDS

Sixteen men faced the traps in the big 25-bird handicap event at Erb's grounds at Bloomfield Avenue, Newark, N. J., on March 28. Capt. John L. Brewer was most severely handicapped of any of the participants, he being required to shoot at 32 yards rise, while Dr. Hudson, president of the Emerald Gun Club of Brooklyn, and W. S. Cannon, the one-armed shooter of Newark, were given the lowest handicap, 26 yards each. The other entries, with their respective handicaps, were as follows: Frank Class, Morristown, 30 yards; F. Bennett, Boston, Mass., 29 yards; W. W. Bennett, alias Capt. "Jones," Boston, 29 yards; William A. Allen, Greenwich, Conn., 28 yards; H. H. Stewart, Newark, 28 yards; G. N. Martin, Greenwich, Conn., 28 yards; G. H. Piercy, Jersey City, 28 yards; T. C. Wright, Paterson, 28 yards; W. G. Hollis, Kearny, 28 yards; John Erb, Newark, 28 yards; Capt. Bartlett, Lakewood, 27 yards; Aaron Woodruff, Elizabeth, 28 yards; P. J. Ziglia, Elizabeth, 28 yards.

First money was divided between Capt. Brewer, F. Bennett and John Erb, each of whom killed 23 out of 25 birds; second money between Frank Class, W. W. Benuett and Aaron Woodruff; third money went to Capt. Bartlett, champion rifle shot of the world, and fourth money was divided between Stewart, Wright and Ziglia. The full scores were as follows:

GIBERSON—VAN DYKE

An interesting match was shot on Friday of last week at the grounds of Charley Zwirlein, at Yardville, N. J., between Peter Giberson of New Egypt, N. J., and Ferd Van Dyke, the popular representative of the Winchester Arms Co. The conditions were 50 birds a man for $50 a side, Neaf Apgar of Plainfield refereeing.

The birds were a lot of "hummers," as they invariably are at these grounds. Mr. Van Dyke shot in the better form, but with luck against him. He had to take the losing end He shot a nervy, uphill race, being four behind on the first half. He was particularly unfortunate in failing to gather birds that were seemingly killed dead, and most unfortunate in having shells stick in the magazine of his gun twice, each time costing him a bird. Van Dyke was anxious to arrange another match, but his opponent was not willing to name a date. The scores are appended:

P. Giberson..1220021211 2211111021 0221222220 0212201220 2111201220—40
F. Van Dyke.2022012210 0022122021 2200212220 2202122222 2222222222—40

When fifty birds had been shot at by each man the scores were a tie and they agreed to settle the struggle on ten extra birds each. Giberson in his tie birds lost only one, the fifth. Van Dyke lost his third tie bird, then killed four, but lost his ninth, which gave the match to Mr. Giberson.

After the match two miss and out events, $2 entrance, were shot, resulting as follows:

No. 1.—N. Apgar 1, "Jones" 4, F. Bennett 4, Van Dyke 3, Bartlett 3, Brewer 4.

No. 2.—Apgar 4, "Jones" 1, Bennett 3, Van Dyke 4, Bartlett 2, Brewer 4.

MR. FRED HOEY'S GOOD WORK

Dispatches from Rome, Italy, say that Mr. Fred Hoey the American pigeon shot who is now visiting some of the foreign countries, on March 3 shot a match with Signor Raudi, a famous local shot. The match was at 50 live birds and Mr. Hoey made a clean score, a feat that had never before been accomplished in Rome, and, of course, won the match. The match created unusual attention and Mr. Hoey was warmly applauded for his fine work.

On March 26 in the Gran Giro di Roma pigeon shooting competition, Mr. Hoey again sustained the reputation of American pigeon shooters by dividing first and second moneys with Signor Zupelli and in the shoot off for the gold medal emblematic of the absolute winner of the event he landed the trophy easily, shooting his only competitor out on the first bird.

THE POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE ROD AND GUN CLUB

The members of the Polytechnic Institute Rod and Gun Club of Brooklyn held their regular monthly trap shooting tournament through the courtesy of the New Utrecht Rod and Gun Club at the latter organization's grounds, Third Avenue and Eighty-second Street, Bay Ridge, L. I. Harry Chapman, '95, captured the trophy for the third successive time. The shooting was all at inanimate targets, and good sport was enjoyed. The scores: Club competition at 20 targets, unknown traps, unknown angles, Long Island rules: Marcus B. Waterman, 20 yards, 14; William Slocovitch, 20 yards, 13; Robert A. Howes, 20 yards, 11; Harry Chapman, 20 yards, 16.

SECRETARY.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.—The Powder Hill Gun Club held its first shoot of the season at the West End grounds on March 24 The attendance was rather slim, owing to a misunderstanding regarding dates, but the scores were just as good as though there had been fifty shooters present. There is nothing like feeling this way. Critzer run 25 straight (singles and doubles) in his first string and about half the next before he got tired smashing things. Mr. Shaw, a visiting sportsman from Illinois, and a very fine field shot, was present and did remarkably well considering that this was the third time he has ever shot at Blue Rocks. Following are the scores at 15 singles and 10 pairs: Critzer 25, Dyer 23, Ohnesorge 22, Shaw, at singles only, 23.

SHOOT No. 2.—25 singles: Critzer 23, Shaw 21, Dyer 21.

Following this Mr. Critzer and Mr. Shaw shot for the supper for the crowd, Mr. Shaw shooting at 12 singles and Mr. Critzer at 6 pairs. Result: Critzer 10, Shaw 11.

G. CHABOT.

HASTINGS, NEB.—Scores as appended hereto were made by members of the Hastings Gun Club on March 22.

SHOOT No. 1.—Practice, 10 single targets per man: Walradt 5, Fleming 8, Brown 4, Lawson 3.

SHOOT No. 2.—Same again: Bernhard 7, Lawson 4, Brown 7, Fleming 8

SHOOT No. 3.—Trophy contest, 30 single targets, allowance handicap.

Answers to Correspondents

We are willing always to answer any question that we can answer, and prescribe for dogs or other animals in these columns, but we can not answer questions or prescribe by mail. In all instances where it is necessary that a sick animal should be prescribed for by mail, we refer the owner to Professor R. J. Withers, No. 627 South Main Street, Los Angeles, Cal., to whom one dollar must be inclosed to pay for his services.

KENNEL

E. L. B., Lynn, Mass.—Ans.—Dunmurry did not win over Jack Briggs at the last New York show; they did not compete against one another. At the New York show of 1892, where Jack Briggs was 3rd in the open class for dogs, Dunmurry won the special for best Irish terrier in the show; and she repeated the performance three weeks later at Pittsburg, Pa., where Jack Briggs was again 3rd in the open dog class. So quite correctly she may be said to have beaten Jack Briggs on both those occasions.

B. C., Des Moines, Ia.—Ans.—(1) Lady Athol (5038) was by King Richard out of Blue Belle, by Count Noble (1509) out of Rosalind (2198); King Richard, by Carl R (1482) out of Royal Queen, by Dash III (4760) out of Gift (385). (2) Peghid (3484), by Cambridge (1478)—Marchioness Peg (2101). (3) Pararia is not registered. (4) Sylph (520), by Lark (Phil—Dido) out of Nelly (by the Duke of Buccleugh's dog—Mr. Strader's bitch).

G. W. H., Windsor, Ont.—Ans.—Your bitch Mischief, that was 3rd at London and V.H.C. at Toronto in 1890, is by Blemton Grumbler (9322) out of Blemton Bagatelle (6975). Blemton Grumbler, by Lucifer (5459) out of Gamma (5189). Blemton Bagatelle, by Mephisto (5461) out of Trifle (owned by Mr. A. Foster of Boston, but not registered), she by Raby Tyrant (Bailiff II—Peach) out of Judy (Hampton Joe—Rose).

C. B. D., Sigourney, Ia.—Ans.—Intestinal parasites may be the cause. After a fast of eighteen hours give one and one-half grains of powdered areca nut to the pound weight of the dog, and in one hour after one ounce of castor-oil. Then, for six consecutive days, give three grains of the iodide of potash three times daily, also give the one-ninetieth part of a grain of the sulphate of strychnine three times daily until well.

Q. A. W., Hawarden, Ia.—Ans.—You are quite right as regards an English setter bitch named Snip having been registered under No. 16302; she was a white and black bitch. Our correspondent stated that this bitch is dead, and asked if a lemon and white bitch named Snip had been registered since. Much obliged to you for the interest shown in the matter.

A. E. G., Aurora, Mo.—Ans.—(1) Mollie Rake, dam of Dick Gath (28691), is not registered; she is by Rake (212) out of Mellissa (5113). (2) Perfection, the sire of Bonnie Blue Daisy (8282), is not registered; he is by Count Noser (1510) out of Maple (2100). (3) Lit Laverack's number is 8336; she is by Tempest (1799) out of Lilly (2070).

E. E. S., St. Louis, Mo.—Ans.—(1) Vanguard (21262); his dam's name is Flame M (Count Noble—Dashing Novice), not Flame. (2) Georgia Belle, not registered. (3) Flame M (21331). (4) Gleam (23945). (5) Doe (10248); former name was Blue Mass. (6) Brimstone (3596). (7 and 8) Rhœbe III and Swaze are not registered.

E. M. B., Dallas, Tex.—Ans.—(1) Follow advice given in this issue to C. B. D., Sigourney, Ia. (2) Probably tapeworm. After a fast of eighteen hours give one and one-half grains of powdered areca nut to the pound weight of the dog, following it in one hour with two ounces of castor-oil; repeat treatment in ten days.

G. A. S., Chatham, Can.—Ans.—The case you mention is not so very uncommon. With the approach of warm weather she will more than likely come in season. Keep her thin and give her plenty of exercise, and let her run with other dogs.

G. S. K., Gosben, Ind.—Ans.—After a fast of eighteen hours give one and one half grains of powdered areca nut for each pound weight of the dog, following it in one hour with two ounces of castor-oil; repeat treatment in ten days.

C. R. D., Cleveland, O.—Ans.—Both are very good, and perhaps each would meet with favor over the other among breeders. Personally, we prefer the bitch by Roderigo out of Lufra's Girl.

SPORTSMAN, Cincinnati, O.—Ans.—For three consecutive mornings give one ounce of castor-oil and thirty drops of cascara segrada. Feed but once daily, then at night.

W. H. G., Chicago.—Ans.—If you will repeat your question and state whether they are rough or smooth coated, we will endeavor to supply the information you desire.

W. S. McC., Galva, Ill.—Ans.—Brush W (17401) is by Pompadore out of Bene (3140); Pompadore, by Darkie (Frank—Lawson's Nellie) out of Fan (Doctor—Dolly).

H. H., York, Pa.—Ans.—Rickets. Give one dessertspoonful of precipitated phosphate of lime in the feed twice daily, until well.

D. C. W., New York.—Ans.—Your previous letter must have miscarried. Will answer your queries as soon as possible.

C. H. L., Burton, O.—Ans.—Follow advice given in this issue to H. H., York, Pa., making the dose one tablespoonful.

S. T. A., Exeter, N. H.—Ans.—Have the genital organs examined; it may be caused by a small tumor.

R. W. H., Sea Cliff, L. I.—Ans.—We do not know such a dog he is not registered.

A. C. E., Persia, Ia.—Ans.—Repeat your question and state breed and sex.

X. Y. Z., St. Paul, Minn.—Ans.—Nellie O'Donohue is not registered.

R. M. P., Seattle, Wash.—They are not registered.

MISCELLANEOUS

SIXTEEN-BORE, Port Huron, Mich.—(1) Where is there good trout fishing near Washburn, Wis.? (2) Are non-residents charged a license? (3) What is the best sized shot to use in a 16-gauge for snipe shooting? (4) What size for clay pigeons? (5) What for live birds from the trap? (6) What is the largest amount of black powder that will burn well in a 16-gauge gun? Ans.—(1) There are trout in all the streams there, but to obtain good fishing one must either fish early in the season or go into the wood beyond all waters which are readily accessible. (2) No. (3) If the birds are wild and the day windy, No. 9, but when the birds become lazy, as they usually do on a warm still day, No. 10 is preferable. (4) No. 7½. (5) No. 7 chilled. (6) 3½ drams.

GAME AND SHOOTING

J. J. F., Cincinnati, O.—(1) What changes were made in game law of Indiana by its recent legislature? (2) What is the law on snipes? (3) Is there a non-resident or non-export law in that state? Ans.—(1) No change was made in Indiana's game law by the last legislature. (2) Snipes are not protected. (3) There is no law prohibiting non-residents from shooting in Indiana, but there is a non-export law that forbids anyone taking any deer, buck, doe or fawn, quails, pheasants, wild ducks, grouse, prairie chickens or woodcocks beyond the limits of the state.

NATURAL HISTORY

T. M. E., Dothan, Ala.—(1) Will red and gray foxes cross in breeding? (2) Will the red fox stay in a comparatively level country? Ans.—(1 and 2) Yes.

Amusements

SCHILLER THEATER.—Kellar, the celebrated magician, in response to a request so general as to practically make it a public demand, will remain at the Schiller Theater for one more week, positively his last, as he is compelled to fill engagements in other cities. His visit to Chicago this season is so remarkable in the great audiences which have attended his performance, that it partakes somewhat of the character of an amusement sensation. There is, however, a side to his new entertainment other than mere amusement. For the first time Kellar revealed and illustrated in public some of the marvelous and world-renowned feats in Hindoo magic which it has taken him years of study and several trips to India to accomplish. He reveals the bypuot'sm shown in "Trilby" about which the public is so eager, and with Mrs. Kellar, who is also wonderfully proficient in the mysterious art, successfully accomplishes a test mind reading act, which, whether it is hypnotism, clairvoyance or due to other occult influences, amazes the crowd and absolutely baffles the most searching scientific inquiry.

ROYAL ENGLISH WINTER CIRCUS AND GERMAN WATER CARNIVAL.—The greatest show for the admission in America. Two performances daily. This week hear the world's greatest cornetist, the only Levy; see the inimitable and unexcelled juggler, the great Severus Schaffer; see Mdlle. Bartoldi, the new ballet, new fireworks and new banquet float. Afternoon at two o'clock, evening at eight o'clock.

COLUMBIA THEATER.—"The War of Wealth," Mr. Chas. T Dazey's new play, is mounted and cast in unapproachable manner, and makes its mark with the public. Monday, April 8, "The Fatal Card," from Palmer's Theater in New York, presented by the original company.

HAYMARKET THEATER.—Mr. Wm. Barry, in "The Rising Generation," his new play, which abounds in sentimental true heartedness. Next week, commencing April 7, the Della Fox Opera Company, presenting the success of the year, "The Little Trooper."

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—Third week of the favorites, The Bostonians. Tuesday and Wednesday, "Maid of Plymouth:" Thursday, Friday and Saturday, "Prince Ananias." Next week, and last of the Bostonians, "Robin Hood."

MCVICKER'S THEATER.—Crowded houses nightly greet the famous Lilliputians in "Humpty Dumpty Up to Date," their new and greatest spectacle.

CHICAGO OPERA HOUSE.—Last week of the favorite, Francis Wilson, in "The Devil's Deputy." Next week, "The Twentieth Century Girl."

MADISON STREET OPERA HOUSE.—Sam T. Jack's "Old Age and Youth." Two big shows daily.

THE LINCOLN.—Hallen & Hart, in "Later On." Next week, "Finnigan's Ball."

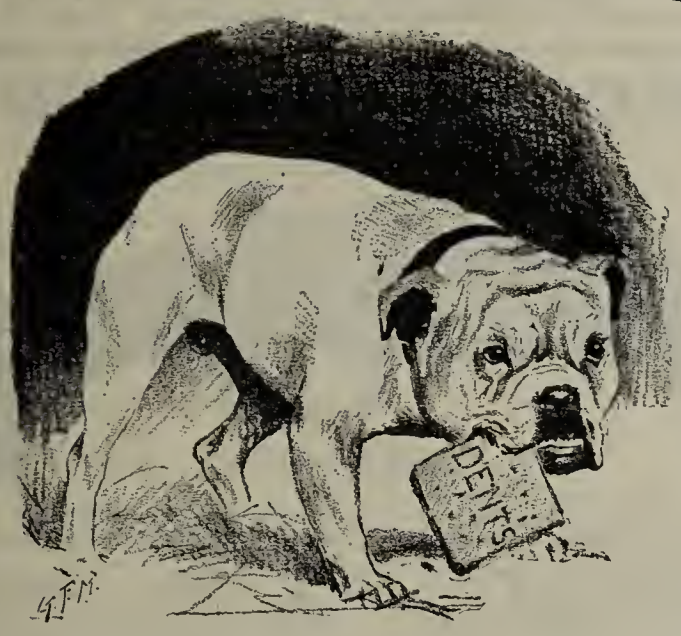
We Want You to Know Their Merits

1,000 Boxes of Dent's Pepsinated Condition Pills Given Away to Dog Owners.



We find, where one box of Dent's Pills goes into a neighborhood, that orders for more medicine come in from that vicinity

Good dog men recommend good things to their friends.

We know: Dent's Condition Pills and all their other medicines are far better than any other medicines you have ever used; pleasanter, safer, surer, more economical and quicker in their results, which in some cases are actually wonderful.

We will, therefore, beginning March 18, present each applicant, either personally or by mail, with one regular, full sized box of DENT'S CONDITION PILLS, containing forty-two pills, same as sold for 50c. Out of town applications will be sent promptly by express. If you want them sent by mail send 8c for packing and postage. If you want a copy of the new book on FEEDING, WASHING AND THE VARIOUS DISEASES OF THE DOG, postage will be 2 cents extra.

Dent's Pepsinated Condition Pills

Are unquestionably the greatest tonic and alterative the dog world has ever known. They are absolutely pure and non-poisonous. Their value is inestimable in that dull, thin, lifeless, unthrifty condition that dogs will at times run into, their eyes becoming red, swollen and full of tears; their noses hot and dry, mouths full of ropy saliva, coat harsh, rough and thin, urine scanty, high colored and frequently passed; bowels irregular, appetite variable, at times ravenously hungry, and again refusing to eat altogether; the animal stretches out at full length, groans and at times attempts to vomit, coughs, gags and throws up a frothy, greenish fluid.

DENT'S PILLS

WILL REMEDY THIS CONDITION. They have a marvelous alterative and tonic action upon all the organs of the body, increase the secretions of the stomach and intestinal juices and thus prevent souring of the food; regulate the liver and kidneys, control the bowels and effectually tone up every tissue and organ of the body, and a bright, animated healthy dog full of life, with a handsome, glossy coat and sweet breath, is the result.

WHAT THEY SAY

Mr. Ben F. Lewis, Lansdowne, Pa., who has a larger percentage of wins to his credit than any half dozen handlers in America, says of Dent's Pills: "They are the greatest thing I ever had in my kennel I have never had my dogs in as fine shape as they have been since using Dent's Condition Pills."

Mr. Ames L. Orr, manager of the Dwight Kennels (the best kennel of Gordons in America), says of Dent's Condition Pills: "They are good enough for me."

Col. R. D. Williams, Lexington, Ky. (the popular judge and breeder), says: "At the New York show my bloodhound bitch Marjorie was in very bad shape; I began using Dent's Condition Pills and before the Chicago show she was in good shape and had taken on twelve pounds of flesh."

Mr. Charles E. Bunn of Peoria, Ill., swept the boards with his magnificent kennel of mastiffs at the late Chicago show. Everyone admired their perfect condition. Mr. Bunn uses Dent's Condition Pills.

Mr. W. L. Washington, Mr. C. Cass Hendee, Mr. Whitney, Mr. Eberhart, Mr. Clayton, Mr. Wilson—in fact, if you will inquire of the owners you will discover that 80 per cent. of them are using Dent's Pepsinated Condition Pills.

DENT'S MEDICINES

Are not the product of one man's experience, but of several of the most eminent physicians and veterinarians of America and Europe who have conducted careful investigations into the various canine diseases over a period of years. They are the only line of dog medicines on the market embodying the latest ideas of modern, scientific investigation; they effect cures where all others fail; absolutely safe, pleasant and effectual.

If you own a valuable dog you cannot afford to treat him with some antiquated mass of exploded ignorance.

THE DENT MEDICINE CO.

Prepares cures for the various diseases of the dog; distemper, mange, eczema, worms, chorea, fits, etc., etc.

Ask your druggist or sporting outfitter for them, insist on having them, and take no other.

Excelsior Dog Cakes

As their name implies, are the highest grade in the world, and five gold and silver medals corroborate the fact. They are economical and nutritious and are used by the leading kennels in the United States and Europe.

The Swiss Mountain Kennels have the following to say about them:

SWISS MOUNTAIN KENNELS, GERMANTOWN, PA.

Gentlemen:—I have used Excelsior biscuits now for about five years and find them perfectly satisfactory in all respects. The dogs are not only fond of them, but even when used exclusively have always agreed splendidly with them, keeping them generally in a good healthy trim.

I have several times recommended them to other parties and have never failed to find them otherwise than pleased with them. I would here thank you for your prompt attention to all orders. I am perfectly willing you should publish anything I have said formerly or at the present time in regard to the cakes. Yours truly,

SPORTSMEN, ATTENTION!

Trophies of the Forest and Field.

Few sportsmen are enabled to keep souvenirs of the chase, as the art of preserving objects of natural history is not generally known. Still there are thousands of gunners and anglers, together with their parents, wives and children, who often lament their want of ability to mount rare and curious objects of interest, and trophies of the day's or week's outing.

Many homes could be beautified, and many dens made more attractive, if the head of the house, his wife or children, had even a slight knowledge of preserving and mounting objects of natural history. We often hear the remark: "How I wish that big pike's head could be saved." Or we hear the complaint from a hunter who deplores the fact of his inability to save more than the horns of the moose, elk or caribou which he shot on the trip; while the lady of the house, intent on decoration, laments the wasting of the plumage of the game birds.

Do you wish to learn a simple method by which you can preserve and mount a hummingbird, grouse, snipe or quail in natural position, or put up a pike's or deer's head?

Do you wish to follow a course of instruction which does not require one-third of the work needed for the old style of preserving by stuffing, or less than one tenth of the expense?

Do you wish to give agreeable employment to your family, and beautify your homes, enlighten your children, and delight and interest your friends?

If so, inclose a stamp for further information. Mention the AMERICAN FIELD. MORRIS GIBBS, M. D., Kalamazoo, Mich. 43 26

THE ANANIAS CLUB

BY BLUEBILL

"Lay down, Jim."

"Who is that, Johnny?"

"It sounds like Mr. Jacobs' voice. I presume he is coming out to see who it is that has been shooting on his grounds."

"Yes, he probably heard me when I shot at that mallard we jumped up in the slough we ran through as we came up the river."

"Yes, I guess so, for he has stepped into a boat and is coming out to meet us, and there is a big, black dog perched up on the front deck, and it too is intently watching us."

"Pull in, Johnny, toward the shore, and we will meet him just as he comes out of the channel."

"Hello!"

"Guess he must be mad for he does not seem inclined to answer."

We had now drawn quite near and we could see that it was mine host, so I yelled:

"Hello, Will!"

"That you, Al?"

"Yes."

"Well, I am mighty glad to see you. I was just coming out to raise the dickens with you for shooting on our grounds. I heard you shoot down the river. Did you get anything?"

"No. We jumped an old greenhead, but he got between me and the sun and 'saved his bacon,' for I could not see where I was holding."

"Missed him, eh? Well, pull into the channel and we will go up to the house."

"Say, Will, what do you call that?"

"What do you mean, the dog?"

"Yes, he looks like a—"

"Now never mind guying that dog. You wait until you see him bring out ducks and you will change your tune."

"Yes, but what breed is it?"

"Why, the man I bought him of says he is half collie and half setter; he cost me $50, and if he keeps up his present gait I think he is worth the money; but he is so awful black that it is hard work to hide him in the boat so the ducks, in circling around, won't see him. But, come into the house and unpack your things; Jim Vance will be glad to see you."

MADISON, WIS., November 2, 1894.

A. W. K—, Chicago.

Am over at Brickson's. Mallards flying good. Come up prepared to stay over Sunday.

W. H. JACOBS.

The foregoing telegram was found lying on my desk the morning of November 3. It did not surprise me in the least, though I had not heard from the sender for fully six weeks. I had wired him some ten days previous, asking when he would be in Chicago, and this was the answer, if such it could be called. "Mallards flying good. Come." That portion of the message was what struck me with the most force. Could I go? Well, I would see; and I immediately set about my task of "seeing." In a little over an hour's time my transportation was arranged. Then to look up the train I could catch, get shells, gun and general equipment together, took a greater portion of the day. About 3 o'clock p. m. I wired my friend Jacobs as follows: "Have Brickson meet me to-morrow morning; will arrive at 3 a. m." The 10:30 p. m. train on the C. & N. W. R. R. that night found me on board, and at 3.30 a. m. I alighted at Mendota, the first station beyond Madison, Wis., but found, upon investigation, that the day operator had received my message and took it off the wire "Tuesday" instead of "to-morrow," and there I was two miles from Brickson's at 3:30 a. m., the night darker than a stack of black cats, colder than blazes, and no earthly show of getting anyone to take me to my destination; so I "cached" my traps, except my gun, in the depot and set out on foot for Brickson's, where I arrived in due course of time, wet and covered with mud, for it had rained all the previous day and was raining then, consequently the roads were simply frightful.

The next morning found me up bright and early, and with Johnny Brickson to row, I started up the river to the abode of mine host, who, I learned, was located in a cabin about a mile above.

"Well, Al, what do you think of our layout?"

"Think of it? Why, man alive, it is 'out of sight!'"

"Dinner won't be ready for some time yet, so get your gun and a few shells and come down to the boat landing and I will row you up the river a little way and show you the finest marsh you ever set eyes on, and perhaps we can jump a few mallards on the way."

"But, say, Will, is this a new purchase?"

"Yes, Mr. Allis of Milwaukee and I hold a lease, with an option to purchase, on about 800 acres that you see lying before you from the C. & N. W. R. R. bridge on the west to that house you see on the east side, which, by the way, is the headquarters of the Cherokee Club. The north and south boundaries are the low hills that border on the marsh. I think we have as nice a layout as anyone could wish, and the shooting, well you will see what that is, just wait until the evening flight commences. I will locate you over in what we call the 'mallard hole' and will guarantee that you will find it good and lively before dark."

Will rowed me up the river for a mile and gave me a chance to verify his statements about the marsh. It certainly was a dandy. Our trip was made in the middle of the day, and there were but few birds moving, as it was warm and pleasant. When we returned we found Mr. Allis had arrived from town during our absence and he gave us a cordial reception. Jim Vance, the cook, announced dinner and we sat down to roast venison; and upon inquiry I found that Will had killed several deer on a recent trip up in the northern part of the state and this was from a part of one quarter that he brought over to the shanty to "help out" as he called it. So we had venison cooked in every conceivable style during our stay. And Mr. James Vance, as a culinary artist, is "no slouch."

After dinner we started for the marsh to get located for the evening flight, and as Will was pulling our boat into a blind in the reeds he put his foot into a hole, getting his boot full of water and a "wet deck." He then took Mr. Allis' boat and put back to camp, so Mr. A— and I fixed up the stand and settled down ready for business, which soon opened up in good shape. We shot with good success until it began to get dusk, and then we pulled out for home, but kept stopping every little while on the way out to take a shot at the mallards and greenwing teal that were fairly swarming all around us, dropping down in the wild rice, and darting here and there so close we could not resist the temptation to "crack" at an occasional one that presented a good mark. We lingered too long, however, and the darkness settled so quickly that we found, when we started to get out of the marsh and into the channel of the river, that it was not as easy as we anticipated, and after trying several openings, as we thought, and found they only led into pockets, we settled down to the fact that we were lost. We then set up a series of yells that would have made a Comanche Indian turn green with envy, and fired volley after volley of four barrels each to let Will and Jim know where we were, in hopes they would come after us, and I guess the natives thought the Japo-Chinese war had changed its base of operations and located close at hand and the bombardment of Pekin had commenced. We could see the light shining in the window of the shanty. As Mr. Allis had a package of "coffin tacks" we lit a couple and settled down to await results, occasionally breaking the stillness with a yell that ought to have awakened the dead. That man Allis is a dandy at yelling. He has a yell that he calls a "Milwaukee bung starter." It is a cross between the screech of a panther and the "down brakes" whistle on the "St. Paul limited." When he started the performance, the dog, Jim, who was perched on the bow of the boat, jumped into the water and started to swim ashore, preferring to take his chances of drowning rather than hear that yell again, and it was with considerable difficulty that we managed to persuade him to come back. If any of our college "elevens" are looking for a yell, they ought to gather this one in; it would be a handy thing in a football rush. If they ever let it loose during the game, they would win "hands down," for their opponents would certainly leave the field in dismay. The boys heard us shooting and yelling our heads off and started out to guide us in, and, rowing up to within a few yards of us, sat in their boat listening to our choice selection of billingsgate and "confounding our luck," and wondering why they did not come after us; but they sat there chuckling at our discomfiture until finally Will said:

"You are a nice pair of ducks!"

"Is that you, Will?"

"Yes, Jim and I have been sitting here for ten minutes listening to you fellows 'turn us over' for not getting here sooner."

"How in blazes do you get out of this infernal place, anyway?"

"If you had any sense you would have marked the way where you come in. The very least you should have done was to start for the river before dark, for anyone not knowing the ground thoroughly is sure to get lost if he stays in here after nightfall."

Well, we were mighty glad to get out into the channel of the river and "squared away" for the shanty, where, after a good supper, we lit our smokers and talked over the instances of the day.

"By the way, Al," said Will, "I have a gun here that I positively cannot hit anything with. Can you tell me what ails it?"

I took the gun, looked it over, drew it up and aimed it at a mark, and found it had about a 3¾-inch drop at heel and 2¾-inch at comb, and told Will it certainly was too crooked for him.

"Well, great Cæsar! I used to shoot it first rate, but somehow since I returned from up North, I cannot hit a balloon with it. While we were away someone shot buckshot out of it, and perhaps that is what ails it."

"Well, I will try it to-morrow. You take my old howitzer and see if you can do any better with that."

Next morning found us up bright and early, and each man started out for himself. I went up into a "mallard hole" where we were lost the night before, and was greatly surprised upon looking over the ground in daylight to see how very easy it was to get out if one only took the pains to note the way he went in, and I was heartily ashamed of myself for getting lost. I went into a blind close to a good sized pond hole and awaited developments. There were a few birds in the air, circling around. Presently along came a pair headed straight for me, and low down. Well, "I won't do a thing to those fellows." Bang! bang! Not a feather. "Well, well, that was a rotten miss. Never mind, I will do better next time." Pretty soon I got another chance at four with the same result, and if ever a man was thankful for "swearing room" I was, for the whole marsh was at my disposal. And thus it was all the morning; occasionally I would scratch a duck down, but my principal occupation was shooting large holes in the air at different angles. I looked the gun all over carefully; did not see anything that appeared wrong with it; inspected the shells and they appeared all right, and considering the overhead shooting, side shots, etc., it apparently was not the drop of the stock, for surely that could not make any such difference. However, I stuck to it until evening, and went in with only five mallards when I should have had at least twenty-five with any kind of luck, considering the chances offered me. Under ordinary conditions I had [illegible] that "most any old thing" that could shoot powder and had a trigger on it" would do, but [illegible] a convincing argument that I could not [illegible] or else the gun was "away off," and which was it. But as my friend Jacobs, who, by the way, is a capital shot, had given the gun a fair trial and could do nothing with it, I took the benefit of the doubt, and on bringing it to Chicago for repairs and reciting the instance of its queer shooting qualities, it was found when they attempted to bore it over—thinking perhaps that might be where the fault lay—that the boring tool commenced to grind when near the center of the barrel. Upon taking it out of the machine and lining it up, the barrels were found to be sprung to such an extent, although invisible to the eye, that at forty yards the center of a charge of shot would strike from eight to twelve inches low in shooting at the center of a target. Now take this very serious defect, together with a 3¾ inch drop to the stock, and where do you suppose a fellow would have to hold to kill anything with it? I give it up.

Altogether we spent four days on the marsh and killed a good bag of birds and had a glorious time. One evening, after supper, we were sitting around smoking, when it occurred to me to ask friend Jacobs a few questions, and the following colloquy ensued:

"Say, Will, what do you call this, a club?"

"Yes, but Mr. Allis and myself are the only members.'

"Who is president?"

"Haven't got any."

"This is a great club; no president, no first, second or third vice-president, no board of directors, with an attorney attached onto it that will object to everything, no by-laws, no constitution, in fact no frills whatever."

"We have a great organization; don't you think so?"

"But why not have a president?"

"Well, go ahead, name your man."

"I will name Mr. James Vance."

"What, Jim, our pumpkin colored cook?"

"Yes."

"Well, that suits me," said Mr. Allis.

"Jim, you Senegambian Hottentot," said Mr. Jacobs, "come in here. You have been nominated president of this club and you have been duly elected, and I want to say to you, Mr. President, right now, as a starter, that we want you to have breakfast ready before daylight. And another thing, Mr. President, my boat needs bailing out and a little fresh hay; and once more, Mr. President, if you don't 'git a git' on you and a lively one, we will have a new presiding officer and you will be out of a job before morning, and back to the ranks as member of the 'Wandering Willies.' "

"By the way, Mr. Allis, what is the name of this club?"

"Well, it is a little out of the ordinary, but for fear someone would get it confounded with the balance of the high-toned shooting preserves, and also out of respectful consideration for the veracity of my friend Jacobs, who is the greatest all around 'catch as catch can' story teller I ever met, I will name it the 'Ananias Club,' and shall expect quite an extensive write-up in the AMERICAN FIELD from 'Will Wilderwood' some of these days; and we are willing to bet him 'all kinds of money' that he has never seen anything like our club house, and may never want to again."

Well, here was a case worth mentioning. These two gentlemen, both very well-to-do, had leased these grounds for their personal use, and for such friends as they chose to invite, and indeed fortunate was the man lucky enough to receive an invitation to share their hospitality. Conventionalities were here laid aside and you were told to do just as you felt like doing. Help yourself to anything and everything you wanted and not stand on ceremony; come and go as it suited your convenience; in fact do just what you pleased, as long as you had a good time. I tell you, dear reader, they are a pair of royal good fellows; true sportsmen, "all wool and a yard wide." The house they occupy is situated upon a wooded knoll that overlooks the entire marsh. It is substantially built and indeed ample for their wants and suits the purpose nicely.

Tuesday morning came and we got our traps ready and started for Madison, where we arrived in time for me to catch the 1:10 p. m. train on the C. & N W. R. R. for Chicago. I had a glorious good time and came home with a nice bunch of mallards to gladden the hearts and palates of some "can't get aways." The trip was a memorable one, and to my generous hosts I can only repeat the old Irishman's toast: "Here's hoping that your shadows may never grow less, and may you both live to eat the duck that waddles over your grave."

INDIANA'S GAME AND FISH LAWS

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

[illegible] ELD:—Sportsmen of the "Hoosier" [illegible] lting information as to the result [illegible] for the betterment of our laws for [illegible] and fish. In the beginning I may say that the laws now stand precisely as they did before the fifty-ninth session of the General Assembly met; that is, every measure introduced with this end in view was killed. Of these there were twenty-three, which would indicate that there was some interest in the matter, though it availed nothing. There were fish and game bills of every nature, a resumé of some of which may not be uninteresting.

Representatives Bohannon and Remington each introduced bills to prohibit the killing of quails for five years. One of these said: It shall be unlawful to kill quail "for five years from the first day of January, 1895." A good time to open the season—New Year's Day.

Senator Collett introduced a bill to prohibit the killing of ducks, brant or geese between January 1 and October 1. The committee recommended its passage after striking out Section 3, which read: "In all prosecutions under this act possession of the birds shall be prima facie evidence of guilt." A part of Section 2, which provided the penalty, was unconstitutional, which would have invalidated the entire section, as I understand it, thus leaving no provision for a penalty, and therefore rendering Section 1 inoperative. This bill never reached a third reading.

Senator Holler's bill would prohibit the taking of any fish from any Indiana lake between April 1 and June 15. The intent of this measure was good, but was constructed in such a manner that it would have been as imperative as are the existing laws, inasmuch as there were no means of enforcing its provisions. In its imperfect state the measure passed the Senate and went to the House. When there seemed to be a probability of its passage, I wrote its author, calling his attention to its imperfections and offering suggestions to remedy the defects. By return mail I received the following: "I believe it is now too late to inject your proposed amendments in Senate Bill No. 297. Am sorry my attention was not sooner called to your amendments, for I heartily approve of them." The bill failed to pass the House by a vote of 59 nays, 16 yeas.

Representative Gaither's bill would prohibit the sale of fish caught in Indiana waters between the fifteenth day of March and the fifteenth day of August. This bill failed to pass for the want of a constitutional majority.

Representatives Harrison, of Shelly; McCaskey and White, each introduced bills to prohibit the pollution of streams by dumping refuse from factories therein. Two of these were indefinitely postponed and the other failed to pass for the want of the necessary majority.

Senator Baker, of Grant, introduced a like measure in the Senate, which was promptly sat upon; but later on introduced another, which was a most excellent measure, and which was not killed until it came to its third reading, when there were found to be 13 for and 27 against it.

Representative Remy, of Bartholomew, introduced a bill for the protection of fishes, which, with two exceptions, would have answered the purpose very well, as it obliterated many of the existing flaws in the law. The exceptions noted are that it did not limit the length of minnow seines, and provided that fish could be taken "by means of seines constructed with meshes not less than two and one-half inches in size in rivers and streams." A protective measure, indeed! It passed to its third reading, but, because of the pugilistic ambitions of the members of the House, perhaps, was never heard of afterward.

Representative Simons, of Marshall, proposed a corker. It would prohibit the catching, in any manner, of any kind of bass (except rock bass or red-eyes), pike, perch, wall-eyed pike, or pickerel, between December 1 and May 1. That would open the season on the day the bass begin to spawn. Section 2 of this bill provided that "it shall be lawful to take and catch the following kinds and species of fish, to wit: Suckers and redhorse, from any of the rivers and streams in this state, between the first day of February and the first day of September of each year hereafter, 'in any manner' except by means of exploding dynamite or other explosive materials." While the bill did not say so, it is to be presumed that the seiner would replace in the water any game fishes taken while seining for suckers and redhorse. Strange to relate, this bill did not pass.

Other bills upon this subject were introduced by Messrs. Howe, Woodruff, Pettit, Wishard and others—the provisions of which I am unaquainted with—all of which met the same fate as those already enumerated.

Regardless of the assurances of various members to favorably consider House bills Nos. 286, 379 and 380, it seems they received not so much attention as did others of less importance. The first of these was introduced on January 23, and the latter two on January 28, and were all referred to the Committee on Rights and Privileges. I sought occasion to confer with the individual members of both branches whenever opportunity could be had, and at all times received such encouragement from them as to confirm the belief that if they could be safely engineered through the committee's hands they would become laws. Day after day passed and no report came from the committee. I frequently saw the chairman of the committee, Mr. Henry C. Pettit, of Wabash, who repeatedly assured me that I should be notified and given a hearing before action was taken on the measures. It had been arranged that a number of our most prominent and influential citizens should, upon being notified, go before the committee and present reasons why the bills should be passed. These gentlemen held themselves in readiness to go to the State House at a moment's notice; but the days grew into weeks and we were still daily expecting to receive notice to appear. But the notice never came. I cannot recall the exact date, but somewhere about February 20, I called Mr. Pettit from his seat, and in a most polite manner asked him what the prospects were for a report on the bills in question. Something must have gone wrong with him that day, for he flew into a terrible rage and would listen to no reason whatever. Said he had already told me that the committee were not favorably disposed toward those measures, which was news to me, however, and he did at that time, and for the first, intimate that there was little chance for them. He also communicated the information that "this legislature has more important business to transact than to make laws for the benefit of a few sportsmen," referring, I suppose, to redistricting the state, raising judges' salaries, etc., yet he again assured me, this time of his own accord, that we should be heard before final action was taken. Because of his passionate demeanor on this occasion I made it my last interview with him.

On February 23 I was much surprised to learn that House bills 286 and 380 had, on the previous evening, been reported unfavorably at a night session, when about twenty-two members were present, and indefinitely postponed. I then saw other members of the committee, one of whom had not been present, and I could glean no information from the other. I made some inquiry as to the game bill, but secured little satisfaction. Every effort was made on my part to raise the latter bill, and I was informed by some that it had been reported, by others that it had not, so the prospect was very poor for any action being had. Since that time I have been unable to ascertain anything, except from the official calendar, where, on page 64 of the last issue, I find: "Bill No. 379 read first time, January 28: A bill for an act for the protection of game and birds within the state of Indiana; introduced by McBeth; date of last action, January 28; condition of bill, referred to Committee on Rights and Privileges." According to the calendar, the bill was never reported, and died with the rope around its neck which was probably placed there the day it was introduced. It is certain, however, that we were never given the hearing so often and sincerely promised by Mr. Pettit, of whom we had expected at least "a show for our white alley." I feel certain that the gentlemen who would have gone before that committee, had they had the opportunity, could have convinced its members of the justice of the measure in which we were interested, as every possible objection which could have been raised against its provisions had been fully anticipated and discussed.

A delicate matter comes to my mind which is most distasteful to refer to, but which I believe myself justified in mentioning. It is that a slanderous rumor has been circulated, to what extent I do not know, nor can I asertain its origin. The expression, as nearly as I can recall, was: "Sharp is bleeding the sportsmen, who are paying him well for lobbying the legislature on behalf of these measures." My only recourse is to make a denial of such rumor. No man in Indiana can truthfully say that I have ever received one penny, nor even so much as intimated that I wished to be paid for what I was doing; but on the contrary, there are gentlemen who would, if necessity demanded, come to the front and prove that I have refused to accept proffered financial assistance to accomplish the end so much desired by game and fish protectors of the state. Such a vilifying statement is without the slightest foundation, and is wholly unjustifiable.

I wish, in closing, to tender my thanks to those sportsmen who have interested themselves enough to assis in endeavoring to secure more efficient legislation upon the subject in question, among whom may be mentioned Messrs. Hyatt L. Frost, Dr. J. C. Adkins, W. F. Jones, M. D. Butler, A. T. Hetfield, F. M. Gilbert, W. M. McCleery, C. G. Sims, Jno. W. Good (who secured and sent a petition to the legislature with sixty signers favoring House Bill 379), A. W. Oaks, T. H. Upperman, and many others.

LATER.—Since the adjournment of the legislature the fact has been developed that Senate Bill No. 297, by Holler, was prior to adjournment taken up and passed, and is now a law. Section 1 of the new law reads: "It shall be unlawful for anyone to take any fish from any of the lakes of this state between the first day of April and the fifteenth day of June, except it be for the purpose of introducing the variety of fish into other lakes or rivers." This, it will be seen, refers only to the lakes and does not restrict fishing in the streams. The other sections provide for the enforcement and declare an emergency.

I. WALTER SHARP.

NITRO POWDERS AND GUN WADS

WARSAW, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I should like to "diffuse" upon several subjects, and, before closing, be permitted to utter, as Gail Hamilton would say, "an honest growl."

Since nitro powders have come into general use nothing found in the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD has interested me more deeply than the articles published from time to time from the pens of distinguished experts upon this subject

I have given American Wood, Schultze, S.S. and E.C. powders each a year's trial, and, incidentally, have tried Troisdorf, Walsrode, Leonard and DuPont. I like them all, and could not be induced under any circumstances to return to the use of black powder. They are all good, and, when care is exercised, safe. We all have our preferences, and we all have our objections to the various brands.

I have fired many thousands of shots in the field, at the trap, and at targets, with a very great many combinations of hard and soft wads, and I, like other sportsmen, have my favorite. For my use E. C. powder fills every requirement as to strength, regularity, cleanliness, etc. But even to E. C. there is a very striking objection, and here is where my "growl" comes in. This powder is retailed at seventy cents per canister, yet the canisters are many drams short of Schultze, S. S., Troisdorf and others. I use for inanimate targets 39½ grains. My powder measure registers for this load 3 drams. With a canister of S. S. or Troisdorf I can load one hundred shells; with a canister of E. C. I can only get ninety loads. To one firing thousands of shots annually, this difference amounts to quite an item. I presume the company will say their powder is so much more carefully and expensively made than others, that they cannot sell a larger quantity for the money, but that is hardly sufficient to satisfy the consumer.

Captain Money is said to be a whole-souled, generous-hearted gentleman, and he is, of course, or "the boys," who are pretty hard to deceive, would long ago have found it out and ceased to call him, as they do, "a good fellow." But those of us who use twenty-five or more canisters of his company's powder yearly would like to see the canisters in which it is put up swelled out to fairly respectable proportions. The matter of quantity becomes the more striking when one understands that it requires nearly two dollars and eighty cents' worth of E. C. powder to shoot one dollar and thirty-five cents' worth of shot, using 1¼ ounces to the charge, which is very much in excess of the cost of excellent black powder. A good many of us wish to continue the use of E. C. powder, and would cheerfully continue to pay a good round price per canister for it, but I think the E. C. company will consult their future interests if they will compete in quantity as well as price with rival companies. This matter was freely discussed at many tournaments which I attended last year, and I heard much dissatisfaction expressed over the difference in bulk between a canister of E. C. and some of the other nitros.

While on this subject I am reminded of the sudden departure for Berlin of Mr. Armin Tenner immediately upon the conclusion of his wad tests. I have often thought that a part of his mission might be connected with the Plastomenit and Von Forster nitro powders with which he obtained such remarkable results, and if this is so I hope he may secure the agency of them for this country, as additional competition may tend to lower the price of nitro powders.

Whenever I commenced a yearly trial of any of the nitros, I first used two canisters at targets in order to get the best load for my gun and to ascertain suitable wadding for the same. Besides this, I fire hundreds of experimental charges yearly, and I think I can give those who are having trouble with these powders a general rule by which they can overcome all difficulties. For example, should one use the U. M C. Trap wad next to the powder, use a hard, ⅛ inch blackedge wad next to the shot, without the slightest reference to the intermediate wadding. If a cardboard wad is used upon the powder first, let the wad next the shot be a soft pinkedge. Bearing this rule in mind, experiments will soon give one the best load for his particular gun. The very best top wad I ever used is one I make myself from the porous cardboard that cracker manufacturers use in their barrels to prevent crushing. These wads blow to pieces invariably and can be made to fit the shell to any degree of closeness.

For many years I have pursued the plan of having our junk dealers preserve the tops of the so-called felt boots which they receive. These I have thoroughly beaten to remove the dust, laundered thoroughly, and, when perfectly dry, subjected to another pounding process, thus removing all dust. I then cut wads from them of the desired size, and find them, when used with normal wadding, to be most excellent substitutes in case I am out of others. Their cheapness will commend them to many shooters. They should not be cut larger than the bore of the gun, as their expansive quality results in increased gas pressure and excessive recoil if larger sizes are used.

If any sportsman still uses that escape valve of a bad temper—a dog whip—I can tell him how to make a good one: Procure a piece of heavy, black harness leather about twenty inches long, two inches wide at one end and tapering to a sharp point at the other. Pound the edges of the wide end together so as to form a round handhold, and wrap it in three places, two inches apart, to hold it in place. Such a whip cracks and frightens the dog, but does not kill him outright. If the shooter is of a very violent temper, such a whip is the very best thing for him to use, as with it he cannot seriously injure a good dog. Fortunately, however, the dog whip is rapidly being relegated to oblivion, where it belongs, for it never served a useful purpose, except to cool off the shooter's anger because his misses were in excess of his kills.

MONOQUET.

[OUR correspondent is mistaken as to the quantity, by weight, of E. C , S. S. or Schultze powder in a canister. If he will procure an accurate pair of scales and weigh the powder contained in the respective canisters, he will find that in each instance it weighs the same. If he is correct as to the difference in the number of shells he can load from a canister of E. C., S. S. or Schultze, the fault is doubtless in the loading and not in the quantity of powder contained in a canister.—ED.]

SPRING SHOOTING SHOULD BE STOPPED

AUBURN, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Well, the duck season in this state is supposed to be open again until May 1, and the ducks will catch it until that day and date.

But I have a few observations to make: I sat on the point of Carr's Cove nearly all day recently and saw hundreds of ducks going and coming up and down Cayuga Lake in pairs, in flocks of three, four, five, six, and seven, but no flock larger than twenty in number; but I saw ducks all day long. They were there galore. They were ever present. The eye could scarcely look out on the lake without seeing a duck. They would not come to decoys anywhere. Hoagland had Gully Brook Point and killed a few, Hunt had Utt's Point and bagged two or three, Tripp and Nellis captured three or four on West Point and Kidney and the writer secured five on Farley's Point. Guns were going off all over the lake, at Dyesingers, Canoga Marshes, Mudlock, and away down the river as far as one could hear a gun.

The ducks would come up the lake nearly in the middle and seemed to be restless, uneasy, scared almost to death, and as for coming for decoys they would not think of such a thing; they were simply frightened out of their wits. I did not think of the cause for their actions until I began to think of the river and the shooting down there. There was shooting on the river a day or two previous and of course the ducks became wild. Barnes and Goodrich bagged 17, Coburn and Wiggins 9, the Parker boys at Free Bridge are said to have killed 58, while scores of other shooters must have run the string up to an aggregate of 500 ducks, many of which were shipped to New York markets. The reason they would not come in to stools on this day was that were frightened nearly to death. No one had told them of the obnoxious Fuller duck law which Governor Morton had recently signed, although the Donaldson bill provides for same thing. No one had told them that on a certain Saturday while in the pairing season and the mating season, while eggs were forming and nidification was in contemplation, a battery of choke-bored shotguns would be turned loose upon them by a lot of men who were anxious to see how many they could kill and how quickly they can exterminate the ducks as our fathers exterminated the wild pigeons so that we of the present time have left only the memory of the wild pigeon.

This is the order of the day with reference to ducks: Kill all you can right off the nest if the season permit. Horace Silsby of Seneca Falls, who is a sportsman and not a game-butcher, once killed a teal duck which jumped from the marsh, and out of curiosity he went to the place from which she jumped, and although it was the middle of April he found there a nest with eleven eggs in it. He never shot ducks in the Spring after that.

If they who carry guns nowadays would be men and give game a fair show, if they would give it as fair a show as they do their best personal interests, if they would not kill it at a season when it is trying to increase and multiply, the sportsman would certainly gain his reward. What does it profit a man to kill more ducks or catch more fish than John Doe killed or caught? Is it a species of credit that entitles a man to very extraordinary consideration? I cannot see how. If it is a credit to be considered a first class destroyer, then, of course, every man ought to try to kill all he can. But no one but a market hunter or fisher—and the woods and waters do not contain enough game and fish for that, as game and fish are not bountiful enough to keep men and their families alive or to supply markets—should care to kill all he can. No, the true sportsman is the man who shoots and fishes for a fair string or a modest bag and who protects, propagates and befriends game and fish. Are the ducks and the fish enemies of man that they should be killed as fast as possible as were the pirates and wolves and the nearly extinct game bird, the pinnated grouse? I have a suggestion to make, yes, two perhaps.

First, let the sportsmen of all the states call a convention by delegates, to make laws for the migratory birds and let the convention be called "The Migratory Bird Convention." Let such laws be made for ducks, snipes, gallinules, woodcocks, etc., as will protect them and befriend them. They are not our enemies but our means of sport and they should be befriended and no Spring shooting should be allowed anywhere.

Second, let us as sportsmen endeavor to befriend rapidly disappearing game and propagate it and protect it and ask the state to build game hatcheries.

Let us think more of our game and fish, and if not for our own selves then surely for the sake of the boys of the future.

UNFRIENDLY LEGISLATION

ST. PAUL, MINN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In reply to Mr. Felton's article in the AMERICAN FIELD of April 6, in regard to North Dakota's new game law making it necessary for a non-resident to take out a permit costing $25, for the privilege of shooting in that state each year, I would say that this bill would probably never have been passed had it not been for the South Water Street, Chicago, bill, which if it became a law in Illinois would make Chicago an open market for all game killed out of the state, and as I notice by the AMERICAN FIELD, there is nothing very positive that this bill will not yet become a law.

North Dakota had this South Water Street bill staring her in the face and she had nothing to do but to pass this non-resident law. Her legislature adjourned weeks ago. She did not dare to wait and take any chances. As regards the non-export law of North Dakota and Minnesota, I partially agree with Mr. Felton, but how is a state to pass a law and discriminate between a sportsman and a market-shooter? It would be impossible if not unconstitutional. A law might be passed permitting a sportsman to carry game out of the state, provided he would give a bond that he would not sell it, and state that it was for his own use and consumption. Felton says, "this law, just passed in North Dakota, is unjust to sportsmen." I agree with him; but how can it be overcome and make the discrimination?

I would like to see a law passed making the permit for shooting $5, and at the time of taking out a permit require the party to make an affidavit that he would not dispose of his game for profit. There are many so-called sportsmen who come to the Northwest to shoot, who sell every head of game they kill. I know of one Chicago man who shoots at Ashby, Minn., and employs three men to hunt for him, who ships his game. This man is the vice-president of a large corporation in Chicago and, you might say, a retired capitalist, yet he puts himself on a par with the market-shooter. I regret to say that we have the same kind of men in Minnesota, consequently gentlemen sportsmen have to suffer for the evil doings of others.

I admit that Chicago sportsmen and the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association have done a great deal toward game protection, but when they pass a non-export law and prohibit the shooting of wild fowl in the Spring, they will have accomplished more good than they ever will with the laws they now have. Four years ago Minnesota had a Spring duck law. It was passed with the understanding that Illinois, Indiana and Iowa would fall into line. This those states failed to do, and the law was repealed; but I am happy to inform the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD that we have just succeeded in passing a Spring law which prohibits the shooting of wild fowl or snipes later than April 15, which, in ordinary seasons, will not give over five or six days of Spring shooting. Let Illinois follow us and pass a Spring and a non-export law.

CRANE SHOOTING EXTRAORDINARY

BOZEMAN, MONT.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—As it is some time since I gave you any account of sport up here, I thought you might like to hear of a day I had after the Arctic or Great Snow cranes. The Arctic crane (called by the natives simply "Arctics") makes its appearance in Montana only during excessively cold weather, when the temperature falls to 40° below zero or thereabouts; then they may be found in large flocks feeding on the foothills. In size these birds are between a turkey and an ostrich, a fine specimen sometimes weighing 150 pounds. The wonderful power of birds to adapt themselves to their surroundings causes their plumage to turn snow white in Winter, a color somewhat relieved by their bright scarlet beaks and yellow legs. Their flesh, properly cooked, i. e. cut into steaks and fried, is delicious, rivaling, to my mind, that of the woodcock.

It was after this grand game that Professor P—an the writer started on a bitter cold morning about the middle of February. Having wrapped ourselves up in fur coats we were soon spinning away to the merry tinkle of the sleigh bells dragging behind us a toboggan. After an exciting ride we reached our destination—the top of a hill which stretched out for two or three miles below us. The cranes are very difficult of approach, but I have been told by the early pioneers in this county that they always flew directly down hill and flew very slowly, so the pioneer would seat himself in one of his gold washing pans and slide down the hills at a constantly accelerating rate, and so managed to overtake the slow-flying birds. Many sportsmen have had considerable luck in sliding after them on skis, but as you must keep your gun cocked and are apt to trip I consider this method dangerous and prefer a toboggan with one man to shoot and another to guide.

Arriving at the crest of the hill we soon spotted the cranes feeding about half a mile below us. Accordingly, pointing our toboggan square for them, Professor F— sitting in front with his 10-gauge gun loaded with 4 drams of smokeless powder and 13 swan drops in each barrel, we shoved off. Great Scott, how we flew, and Cæsar's ghost, how cold it was! If it had not been for the excitement I believe we would have frozen to death. When we were about 400 yards from them the cranes rose. Picking out the largest I followed him. Then began a race that I shall long remember. Although we were going at a terrific rate the crane seemed to go faster, but we slowly gained on him, and by and by were directly under him as he sailed along about fifty feet from the ground, his magnificent white wings spread out against the blue sky and his long, yellow legs tucked up against his body. We were now going at so nearly the same rate that he seemed quite still and there was not a motion of his wings. I thought my companion would never fire, and at last I shouted to him to let drive, he shouted back, "can't; hand frozen." He had unfortunately drawn off his glove to get at the trigger, and his fingers had frozen to the trigger guard. I did not know what to do as he could not hand me the gun, and we were beginning to get ahead of the crane. Just then, right before us, I saw a small hummock which I knew would give us a tremendous bump and probably jar the gun off, so shouting to F— to keep his gun pointed at the bird, I put the toboggan right at it. There was a tremendous bump, then a roar like a cannon as both barrels went off at once, and the next instant I found myself continuing my journey alone, Professor F— having fallen off. But the strangest part of it was, there was the crane continuing his flight, although I had seen the shot strike him square, tearing a great hole out of his side. But the mystery was solved a few minutes later, when I reached the bottom of the hill and he came sailing almost to my feet, for I found he had frozen stiff while in the air, and continued his flight as an inanimate areoplane.

THE SLAUGHTER OF DUCKS

BROOKLYN, N Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Once more I return to the charge on the principle that the constant drip wears away the stone. I inclose you another report of the vandalism that is taking place. Constantly one hears the queries: Whither have our ducks gone? What causes the scarcity of ducks? etc. I think such outrageous and criminal practices as enumerated in the clipping I inclose answer these queries.

I notice in the game laws for New York state that it is unlawful to hunt wildfowl (ducks) between March 1 and September 1, and the laws for Long Island (specials) put the close season from May 1 to October 1. Now I must say I think, as I wrote before, that the law should be above all things uniform in its dates, and should be from September 1 to December 1. This open season should include all game, and these two months are ample for shooting. These dates would, if properly enforced, avoid repetition of the slaughter of ducks described in the clipping mentioned above, which is as follows:

Black duck shooting along the south side of Long Island for the past month has been better than ever before in the annals of game hunting on Long Island. The extreme cold weather during the first half of February froze up the Great South Bay, Moriches Bay, East Bay and Shinnecock and Peconic bays from shore to shore. The air holes which in former years were always to be found on the surface of the ice and gave the ducks a chance to feed were this Winter frozen over. Nearly all the freshwater streams along the south side were also frozen.

This state of affairs actually drove thousands of starving ducks to every stream where there was a hole from which they could drink and feed. Thousands of birds whose bodies were thin and wasted and almost useless were thus shot by the hunters, who took up positions near the streams that had air holes. The ducks seemed utterly bewildered and nearly starved to death. A dozen men would surround an air hole not a hundred feet square and have all the shooting they could attend to without using decoys. An illustration is given of this in the case of George Albin [illegible] Pachogue. A big strip of open water [illegible] ers on Pachogue Lake. Albin [illegible] at opposite sides of the open break. [illegible] t forty pairs of black ducks. Other [illegible] e numbers of birds.

[illegible] of Greenville cut a hundred foot [illegible] t South Bay, opposite Greenville. Each sat upon a common camp stool and wrapped himself in a white sheet. In an hour's time the surface of the hole was literally covered with dead ducks. An afternoon's shooting showed that 306 black ducks had fallen before the gun.

Daniel Murdock, a member of the Smith's Point life saving station, at Smith's Point, made a hole 100x50 feet in the center of the East Bay. He pulled a common, low shooting boat up to the hole and sat inside without any effort to disguise himself. In four hours he slaughtered 165 ducks.

Fred Hamlyn of Bellport in a half day killed over a hundred ducks in an air hole on Fiddleton flats.

"William Muncey, who lives at Babylon and who has spent fifty years in fishing and shooting—making his living in this way—says that ducks that were half starved and unfit for food have been slaughtered by the hundreds. Every unfrozen hole or stream was surrounded by a bloodthirsty crowd of men and boys and the poor ducks were mowed down like wheat before the mowing machine. It was death for the birds if they did not take to the few open spaces of water, and it was certain death for them when they did.

MINNESOTA'S NEW GAME PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION

At a recent meeting of Minnesota sportsmen the first steps were taken toward organizing what is to be known as the Voluntary Game and Fish Protective Association. The plan proposed was to form an association, to include members from all parts of the state, which shall act in conjunction with and as an auxiliary of the state board of game and fish commissioners.

After some discussion as to the best method of accomplishing the end in view, the following committee was named to take the necessary steps toward perfecting a permanent state organization: C. S. Brackett, William L. Wolford, William L. Bigelow, F. F. Davis, W. P. Andrews and James Griffin of Minneapolis; Uri L. Lamprey, Dr. C. A. Wheaton, H. P. Goodenow, Crawford Livingston, R. W. Matthews and William L. Tucker, St. Paul; C. N. Nelson, Stillwater; O. McFarland, Dalton; J. H. Claggett, Montevideo; L. Z. Rogers, Waterville, and H. B. Griffing, Buffalo.

The objects of the association are the bringing together of all clubs, local associations and individuals in the state, interested in the protection, preservation and propagation of game and fish; to form one state protective association; to encourage and assist in the organization of local clubs in any district of the state where it is the general wish, and the importance of the interests demands it; to assist the state board in securing evidence, and the prosecution of offenses against the statutes on this subject; to represent the sportsmen of the state in advocating any legislation that may be deemed essential for the further advancement of the preservation and protection of game; to locate and plant with suitable foods any waste lands that will make feeding grounds for game birds; and to keep up all natural feeding grounds that now answer this purpose; to expend any moneys on hand not necessary for actual expenses and other purposes of this work for the purchase of any game animals, birds and fish that may be suited to this climate for the purposes of introduction and propagation of any such species; to correspond with associations of neighboring states that wish to work in harmony for these interests, and influence legislation to the extent that the seasons may open and close at the same time in such states.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we, individually and collectively, will at all times seek to cultivate the good will and support of all classes of citizens, that the pleasures of the forest and stream may be enjoyed by all persons; and to mediate in any and all cases of injury or injustice between gunner and the owner or tenant of any lands or waters; and furthermore, we will labor to cultivate a better general understanding as to the value of the game and fish products to the state and to the individual, especially seeking to impress the fact that these products should not be a subject of sale, barter or commerce. And be it further

Resolved, That this association shall be perfectly voluntary; that no salary shall attach to any of its offices, and that it will not be sectional in character, or operated for the private purposes of any of its members or any class of citizens.

An open letter was drafted, which will be sent to all those who would be likely to be interested in the movement, calling upon them to attend a state convention to effect a permanent organization, on May 15, at Minneapolis.

ACTIVE CO-OPERATION OF ILLINOIS SPORTSMEN NEEDED

The game bill now before the Illinois legislature, known as House Bill No. 715, and which has been reported out of the committee, is the best bill ever presented for passage in the state of Illinois, and should become a law. It has the unanimous indorsement of every officer of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association, the sportsmen want it, and the representatives of the people assembled at Springfield should not dally with it longer but push it through. It is in the interest of all the people and protects game.

Mr. W. L. Shepard, president of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association, spent several days at Springfield arguing in its behalf, and as is well known Mr. Robins S. Mott, chairman of the law committee, spent many hours in drafting the provisions of the new sections, those which were vitally important if game was to be protected properly. The best features of the so-called Blow bill were retained, and when the new bill was finally ready for presentation, the officers of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association in a body urged its passage. It now remains for each sportsman in the state to make it his personal business to give efficient aid.

In an interview with Mr. Shepard he stated, in substance: "We want this bill to become a law; we have spent much money and time in perfecting it, and if every sportsmen's club in the state will meet and indorse the bill and petition their legislators to labor in its behalf, Illinois will have a law it will be proud of. If every secretary of every club will get a copy of the bill and read it to members at a called meeting for that purpose, there is no question but everyone will indorse it and the sending of petitions will give it an impetus which their representatives will not dare to ignore and we will have a law. It is my earnest desire that every secretary do this, and I will give all the information in my power upon application. When I was in Springfield the active support of everyone I talked with was promised, and all we now need is to show our lawmakers that the measure meets with popular favor and is wanted. If I could reach every sportsman I would; but as this is impossible the press must be depended upon."

Mr. R. S. Mott said "a lot of activity is still necessary, but how to reach every sportsman is the question. I believe a letter should be written to every sportsman in the state, asking him to use his personal influence, but we have spent so much time on the bill now it does not seem right we should continue further in view of the fact that the great need now is the showing of strength, by every sportsman laboring with his representative either in person or by letter. I hope every sportsman will do this."

The bill is now slumbering, and the sportsmen of the state should galvanize it into life, and ask for the passage of House Bill No. 715, without further changes, in accordance with the methods outlined above.

SPORTSMEN PROTEST

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—We, the undersigned sportsmen, hereby request you to aid us through the columns of your paper in entering a vigorous protest against another form of game abuse which has recently come to our notice.

During the late heavy storm hundreds of ducks in the vicinity of Philadelphia became starved and weak from cold and hunger, and in this helpless condition were killed in great quantities. They were sold on the streets in great numbers, and owing to their condition were entirely unfit for food.

It is hoped that by bringing such actions as the above to the notice of the public this kind of wholesale slaughter of game can be in a measure checked.

GUNS

HARTFORD, CONN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The article by Gun Wad in a recent issue of the AMERICAN FIELD on the gun question, is, to my mind, one of the best I have read, and very little published in the AMERICAN FIELD escapes my eye, even to the advertisements. This would have been a long, dreary Winter had I been deprived of its companionship every week. After many years of experience I have come to the conclusion that most shooters use guns with too much drop of stock.

I have bought for my own use in the past twenty years no less than seventeen different shotguns, with drop of stock from 2¼ to 3½ inches and in weight from 6½ to 12 pounds, and the conclusion of the whole matter is that one stock and two sets of barrels is much preferable to two complete guns. One pair of barrels 28 inches, for brush shooting, no choke, and one pair 32 inches nearly full choke, is my idea. The gun should be 12-guage and weigh, with short barrels, not more than 7¼ pounds and with the longer barrels 7¾ pounds. I prefer 32-inch barrels to 30-inch barrels for trap and duck shooting, as I am convinced they shoot just a "leetle" stronger, and the aim is better with the longer barrels. The strongest shooting gun I ever owned was 14-guage, 30-inch barrels; hence I claim the 12-guage will be more satisfactory with 32-inch barrels when one can have two sets of barrels.

SIMPLE SIMON.

NOTES

THE great exposition to be given of field sports of this country is becoming an item of general interest and comment. If there has existed any doubt as to how the sportsmen would look upon the exposition, there is no longer reason for conjecture. The committee of measurements and records desires this exposition to be as complete as possible. The Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, Archibald Rogers and George Bird Grinnell are gentlemen who are familiar with the best types of our North American game, and this committee should have placed before them a full collection of our North American game animals to pass judgment upon. Here permit me to urge every sportsman who owns typical heads of our large game to send at once to the secretary of the association a list of the same, with such data as may be authentic. The association expects to have 500 heads of the various species pledged for exhibition. There has never been an opportunity before to compare the largest heads of our antlered game, and this occasion should be made a memorable one. Herewith is given a list of the articles which are needed in order to make the exhibits of a historical nature complete: A primitive dug-out, an old birch bark canoe, a flat-bottomed boat, a modern canoe, a racing shell, a catapult or slung shot, cross bow, boomerang, blow gun, Indian arrows and bows, blunderbus, primitive guns of different designs, Kent rifles, flintlock guns and pistols, percussion guns and pistols, and various kind of sights and levels. These collections will interest the general public and be an incentive to others not now devotees of any special field sport to take up some one of them. A very interesting, unique and instructive exhibit will be that of Messrs. Tatham & Brothers. This firm is constructing a shot tower to be placed in the exposition, where the public will be shown the method of making shot. The lead will leave the furnace at the top of the 30-foot tower and the shot will fall at the bottom and the several sizes be sifted as they fall at the base. The packing and labeling will be done in plain view. This exhibit will reveal to the public the mystery of how shot are made round and of a uniform size and weight. As the management intends making a great feature of the various club nights, it is the desire that all shooting, fishing, golfing, lawn tennis or other clubs formed for outdoor sports should send a list of their officers and members to the management of the Madison Square Garden, that they can be furnished with tickets for the special evenings upon which the clubs from their vicinity attend.

New York. FRANK W. SANGER, Manager.

IN writing of the work done by officers of the National Association in Oregon, Mr. W. A. Story of Portland, writes: "I can truly say that the vice-presidents in this state, the Hon. S. H. Greene. of Portland, Ore., and E. V. Carter of Ashland, have been untiring in their efforts to prosecute and assist in prosecution where infractions of the game and fish laws have occurred. With our present game warden, we have secured about fifty convictions, and the game law breakers have about concluded that this is not a good country for them. Another work that has been pushed by your secretary for this state, and in which I am now prepared to ask your hearty coöperation, is the protection from egg hunters on our wild fowl breeding grounds at Alaska. A careful investigation shows that millions of eggs are gathered and shipped from these grounds annually and countless thousands of partly matured eggs destroyed. I have furnished our United States Senator, Hon. John H. Mitchell, with the proper information relating to the above facts, and if the secretary of each state of this association will bring the matter before his senator at Washington, asking him to cooperate with Senator Mitchell in this matter, I am sure the effect will be for the best. Oregon, Washington, California, Idaho, Montana and British Columbia depend largely, if not entirely, on these breeding grounds for their supply of wild ducks, geese, swan, etc., and unless they are protected from such wanton destruction, I fear we will, in a short time, be forced to enjoy our duck hunting in memories of the past. Our game laws have been weak, and in some cases, where the evidence has been absolute for conviction, we have lost the cases. This we hope to remedy at the bi-annual session of our legislature, which occurs this month. We also hope to shorten the open season on many of our game birds, and prohibit entirely the taking of some birds for a period. The laws on game and fish are all right, with a few minor changes, which we hope to secure also. Our streams are well stocked with trout of the various species known to the waters of this state, and there has been some talk of introducing the black bass into the open waters of this state. Are bass detrimental to the trout where both exist, or rather can both thrive in the same stream? Our outlook for protection for the coming years is very bright."

[Bass and trout do not thrive in the same waters.—ED.]

RECEIVING calls from all over the state to run down and arrest violators of the game laws, I left Chicago March 28 and made a round, taking in Princeton, Galesburg, Burlington, back to Quincy, Canton, up the river to Peoria, through to Springfield and back to Chicago by April 3. During this time I made over forty arrests, a number of the cases still pending, but twenty-seven have been tried and fined from five to twenty-five dollars each, the offenses and names being as follows: For killing song and plumage birds: Fred Kanack, J. Clark, W. Hall, A. Sieman, E. Johnson, J. Nelson, and B. Turner; for night shooting, using headlights, from sail boats and blinds in open waters: J. Larson, H. Semlar, Lewis and Wm. Dick, A. Morell, W. Dennison, J. Hoffman, M. Long, Tony Remwold, G. Barefoot, H. Sarba, J. Pipel, M. Jacobs, C. Zeman, J. Ahold, J. Healey, W. Miller; for shooting fish: W. Brady; for shooting wildfowl in open water from a blind: Wm. Kreuger; for killing quails: J. D. White. D. Levi & Co. of Chicago escaped conviction for having quails in possession. I will be in Savanna April 10, and will then move up to Dubuque, back to Rockford and take up pending cases. I shall try and create a wholesome respect for our game laws before I am through.

CHAS. H. BLOW,
Chicago. State Game Warden.

I NOTICED in the AMERICAN FIELD of March 28 an article from E. R—, Rochester, N. Y., on keeping quails in confinement. Now, I do not wish to give advice to E. R— or to Mr. J. M. Page, for advice, of all thankless favors, is the least appreciated. Last year, about the first of March, I bought sixteen live quails and kept them in a shop with only a run of 28x60 inches until April 10, when I took them to Athol, Mass., and gave them a room in a henhouse 12x24 feet, where I kept them until the first of August without losing a bird, except one that got out by breaking the window, and when I turned them out they stayed near by until about the first of October and then disappeared. I do not know whether they went south or to the woods, or were caught by cats or some other animal. I wished to have them breed, and though they laid nearly 100 eggs they would not set. One of the male birds did stay on the nest some at night but not enough to hatch the eggs. I have also had six quails for the past two months in a pen 2x3 feet that have done nicely. I have heard of many quails being frozen in the South the past Winter and would not expect Southern quails to stand a cold Winter in the North.

Thomasville, Ga. J. G. ALBEE.

THE new game and fish law of Minnesota makes the close season on ducks, geese, brants, snipes and other aquatic fowls, from April 15 to September 1; on golden or prairie plovers, from June 1 to September 1; protects fawn absolutely; makes it unlawful to kill elk, moose or caribou until January 1, 1898, and makes the open season on deer from November 1 to November 20 in each year. It prohibits the sale at all times of any deer, moose or caribou, except the head and skins, and limits the number of deer that may be killed in a season by one person, to five. It also makes it unlawful for a person or his dog when hunting to enter the field of another where there is standing grain or to hunt on the lands of anyone that are posted without permission of the owner or occupant. The law regarding prairie chickens, quails and other game remains as it was prior to the above changes, which were in the form of amendments.

In the AMERICAN FIELD of March 16, Mr. L. I. Flower refers to "Wandering American's" notes on guns. The statement that more hammer than hammerless guns are in use over here is quite correct. Anyone can see that at the club meets and pigeon matches; also gunmakers say there are more hammer than hammerless guns in use on game. Coming down to the crowd, very few would care to pay the price for a good hammerless, and a cheap one of that variety does not last long, especially in shore shooting. I think a better judge of good guns and shooting than "Wandering American" will be hard to find.

Leeds, Eng. G. A. W.

IT is said that Canadian poachers in the wilds of Alaska, where many game birds, particularly wildfowl, rear their young, are making a business of gathering the birds' eggs, which they sell to chemists, thus reducing the game supply of the country many thousand each year. These poachers also kill every animal or bird they come across, no matter whether they can make any use of them or not. It is believed this discovery will lead to legislation that will prevent a continuation of this wanton destruction of wildfowl.

FROM reports and from my own tramps occasionally, I am pleased to learn that game has wintered well, notwithstanding the severe weather we have experienced. I read with great interest the article of A. W. Rhodes, of Wilkesbarre, in the AMERICAN FIELD of [illegible] effective protection for small game, a[illegible] the nail right plumb center on the h[illegible]

SECRETARY SMITH has made an amendment to the rule governing Yellowstone Park which will make the enforcement of the law against those killing animals and birds more stringent. Hereafter persons ejected cannot return except by permission, and should such persons return without permission they will be subject to a fine or imprisonment.

MR. NATHANIEL BOWEN of Deposit, N. Y., recently killed a wildcat that weighed 35 pounds, the largest cat killed in that section for years. The animal was tracked to a cave where it had taken refuge, and there killed.

THE North bill, to prohibit the killing of deer in Pennsylvania for five years after October, 1895, under a penalty of $200 for each animal killed, has passed the lower house of the Pennsylvania legislature.

NEW PATENTS

The following patents in the sporting goods line have just been issued and are reported especially for the AMERICAN FIELD by Joseph H. Hunter, Attorney at Law and Solicitor of Patents, Washington, D. C.:

Apparatus for filling cartridge feed belts for magazine guns, Francis E. D. Acland, London, Eng., Louis Silverman, Crayford, Eng., and Benjamin Orman, Dartford, Eng.

Billiard cue, Nicolas Bosmann, Chicago.

Cartridge belt, William C. Brown, United States Army.

Ejector mechanism for breakdown guns, Daniel M. Lefever, Syracuse, N. Y., and Charles F. Lefever, Syracuse, N. Y.

Bicycle, William C. Nichols, Williamsport, Pa.

Cartridge-loading machine, Lewis B. Crosby, Danbury, Conn.

Magazine firearm, Myron C. Lisle, Grand Rapids, Mich.

FOX TRACKS AROUND AUBURN

BY DR. KENNEDY

Well, now, that enthusiastic hunter, Hugh Ricker, of Haverhill, Mass., threatens to hop on this old Auburn doctor's trail. Well, what he writes about hounds and hunting hits a man like a hearty meal, for it smacks of the old cedar swamps, and leads one's imagination off over the ridge and then down through the old stump lot, where the tall dead mullein stocks stand around like soldiers around a clambake. His pen talks right out plain, and one can imagine hearing the old hound work a cold trail down along the brush fence; and as it gets more eager it makes a hunter want to climb on top of an old pine stump and turn his eye around over the knolls and hollows, for it sounds just as though the hound was getting it pretty hot and would soon send a fox "humping" itself down along the runway next to the sap bush.

Among the many hunters there are very few who love to hear or watch the old hound when he strikes a cold trail, or listen to him work it up—maybe for five minutes, and maybe an hour or two—but if he is a good one, he will finally lift old John Fox out of his slumber and then cut it right loose like a Dutch band starting off on a picnic.

After forty years' experience in hunting foxes with all kinds of hounds this old Auburn chap is inclined to lean heavily upon the belief that Reynard's reputation for cunning has never been overestimated. When he is up and dressed for a gallop ahead of the hounds he can come nearer to seeing into futurity and twigging a gunner who stands on his runway than any old clairvoyant doctor that ever humbugged a sick man.

Now the old Pilibob that's talking is not one of the kind that has a better gun or a better hound than anybody; but with middling kind of tools for the fun he manages to peel the pelts off of about two dozen foxes every season, and in a locality where they are not numerous. He leans to the conclusions of Mr. J. M. Avent, of Hickory Valley, Tenn., that a good foxhound (and they are scarce) will pick up a trail that is some hours old and follow it at a pretty smart lick, on sod or leafy ground, where there is any moisture to hold th[illegible] And he has learned by experience that a good fox [illegible] hound (for the gun) is one with a mild, musical voice [illegible] an easy gait that does not push his nose too fast. W[illegible] such a hound we often see a fox scudding along not far ahead, or sometimes dodging around the top of a hil[illegible] with only speed enough to keep clear of the hounds' jaws. Well, now, when a man stands some way off and sees that [illegible] maybe "his heart will thump some, and his [illegible] hunks."

[illegible] using a fast hound with a harsh cry [illegible] any such "circus" as that, for the fox is frightened, so he pulls right out and keeps sailing, and crosses every loose dirt field on the route. Maybe a fox does not know that fresh dirt is a powerful disinfectant to destroy the scent of his trail.

Perhaps enough has been said, but it makes a man who can beat one at his own game feel so rich that your readers may sit easy a little longer, while I tell of an incident happening up the east side of Owasco Lake last Fall in what is called Seward's Gully, the General himself having a Summer home on the lake shore, about seven miles up and near the foot of the gully. It is a deep, wooded gorge and runs a mile and a half back up among the hills. Toward the upper end is a narrow, shallow place and a dugway for teams to cross; directly above this the gorge forks and spreads out into a big covert of hemlock woods. Whenever a fox is routed out up there it most surely takes a turn or two and then skips across the dugway just where the bushes line it, or it plunges across the road just on top of the bank into an open lot, and flees away down the gorge to the lake shore, where it can baffle the best of them along the dry stony bluffs and gravelly shores.

On the first trip up there last Fall the tall white hound Buster Depew hit a cold trail at the dugway, worked up toward the head, and in five minutes had "Redner" heeling it around among the hemlocks. Old Calomel cocked his pet ear up that way and listened to the hound tearing the corner of the woods off. It was a conundrum, whether to try the dugway for a snap shot, or to stand in the open lot, where there was a fair swipe if he came out on that runway. As a man could not cover both places at once, and the procession was heading down the north fork, the gunner scrambled up to the open lot. But it was a poor guess, for the fox and hound flipped across the dugway and soon went out of hearing toward the lake. In about an hour the hound came trotting along back, gave the gunner a smile, passed right along up among the hemlocks, and in a few minutes was heard singing hallelujah after another fox.

"Now," said the old man, "maybe lightning won't strike twice in a place, so I'll chance the outside again."

"Well, gol ding the luck, the second one crossed down right where the first one did. The hound was gone about the same length of time, again came jogging along back, and again with a good natured look, passed on up beyond the forks.

It was not long until he was tuning it up again, away up at the top end. Then the old chap just tipped the hammer of his shooter into the back notch, and slipping down into the dugway kept his eye skinned along the road. Pretty soon a red streak popped across the opening, and the repeater popped too, all in a wink; but they did not connect. The hound was nabbed when he came up, and the old man led him outside, and looking pretty solemn. Finally, hearing some crows keep up a squalling away down the gully (as they always do at the sight of a fox), it looked possible to play on that fox a trick that had worked good in other localities. So, leading the hound through the fields, we went clear down near the lake, a mile below, where there was another dugway. Turning the hound loose, he hoofed it right back to where taken off the trail, and in a few minutes was heard working down the gully in good cry. Pretty soon the fox came trotting down along the stony bed of the brook, little suspecting that old Quinine stood there, and fixed ready to dose him with pellets. Well, that little incident just took the wire edge off the disappointment that had happened up toward the top end of the gorge, and the day ended.

The first damp morning that came the Doctor and the hound were headed for the upper end of the gully, and at the dugway the dog nosed up the south fork, while the old chap busied himself rigging up a dummy with his coat and hat right where the foxes had jumped across the road. Before he had time to back off and see how it looked, the hound was making the hemlocks ring with a hot trail. The gunner scrambled up to the open lot, and was quickly followed by a scared looking fox with ears pinned down on his neck as he popped out of the dugway into the open lot, right past the shooter. While he was streaking it down through the stubble at a two-minute gait a load of No. 1 gave him an extra boost from behind, so that he revolved end over end like a tumbleweed in a gale. Buster was right there in the nick of time, and mittened onto him like a leech.

The hound then went down in the gully and wallowed in a puddle of water; then went off up the stream. After half an hour of cold trailing that old camp meeting shout began booming again steadily, and the fox came down [illegible] dummy before it struck the road, [illegible] upper side, popped into the lot [illegible] old man stood behind a stump. [illegible] Buster and I will stand back and [illegible] say.

A COLD AND LONG CHASE

BY E. C. J. KRAELING

Having just returned from a good fox chase, I will try and give a short description of it while the details are yet fresh in my memory. In that way I hope to pay off a long standing debt of gratitude to all writers that have from time to time narrated their fox-hunts for the benefit of all readers of the AMERICAN FIELD, myself included. To be sure, we all like to go fox-hunting, but when your presence at home is required day in and day out the next best thing is to read of the hunts others have had. That is refreshing and helps considerably to make you feel contented with your lot. But ad rem.

Having announced my coming to J. C—, with whom I hunt quite a little, I was met by him when the train pulled into the little station of D— at noon on the sixth of February. After a ride of three country miles behind a good runner we arrived at the modest but comfortable homestead of J. C—, and were greeted by the deep baying of Ned and Victor.

Before going any further I will tell the reader what kind of hounds these are. They are foxhounds, and as far as I can make out they are a cross between a foxhound and a bloodhound. Long bodies, long heads, heavy sterns and very long and soft ears. At first sight it seems as if Ned had three ears, which, however, is easily explained. When a puppy he was running a fox with his dam, and they ran it to ground. But as there was a fox in that particular burrow already, this one remained near the entrance. The puppy (Ned) tried to get at it, and to punish him for his forwardness the fox caught the puppy's ear, and, as he pulled his head back, the ear was torn in two. Ned has a beautiful voice, deep, melodious, metallic, ringing, giving forth a long note.

Victor, a little larger than Ned, is a fleet-footed animal that hardly seems to touch the ground when running, very elastic and all in all a fine hound.

I have never seen the Kentucky and Tennessee hounds running, though I have seen some of them at the Westminster Kennel Club's shows, among other good ones Logan, which I think is a Kentucky hound; and as there are no July, Goodman or Walker hounds owned around here, I cannot compare them with ours. But when I read of their catching their foxes in an hour or two I feel inclined to think the difference must be more between the foxes of that region and ours than in the hounds, though I admit there is a great difference between those hounds and ours as far as looks are concerned.

As the day of my arrival was a very cold one, the thermometer having almost dropped down to zero, we concluded not to venture out that afternoon, thinking it might moderate before morning. The snow was deep and there was a sharp northwester blowing, which made hunting well nigh impossible. So we passed the afternoon in going over fox-hunts of the last season (when ten foxes were killed), telling yarns, smoking and keeping a good fire. In the evening J. C— produced his banjo and brought a violin for me, and though your humble scribe had once mastered that instrument somewhat yet he had not touched it in eight years. However, we managed to play some songs and tunes together, and as the next neighbor lives down the road half a mile or so we disturbed nobody in particular, nor were we disturbed. When we found there was no more music to be got out of either banjo or violin we retired for the night—at least, for a part of the night.

Awakening at three o'clock I thought I was freezing to death. Though having jumped into bed with all my clothes on, and having plenty of blankets besides, it was so cold in that room that icicles had formed on my beard and my nose was as red as a lobster. So I started downstairs, intending to build a wood fire and thaw out. To my surprise and pleasure there was a good fire in the stove. J. C—'s father and mother (both in the seventies) were seated around it, and told me they had concluded to stay awake all night and be comfortable and warm rather than freeze in bed. That I call common sense. Soon we were joined by J. C—, the third and last member of the family.

We now partook of a good substantial breakfast, and after having done full justice to the good things on the table we got ready for the hunt. While J. C— hitched up I coupled the hounds, and off we were in our cart. On our way to the so-called Bald Hills, our hunting grounds for that day, we saw a great number of fresh fox tracks, having been made during the night, but did not examine them closer as we wanted to run a certain fox that had given us the slip a couple of times already; a good runner and as cunning as they are made. We found what we thought was his track and laid the hounds on. Though the track was a little old they soon gave tongue, and after hunting first toward the south they soon changed their course toward the north. Then they went westward for quite a little way, finally jumping the fox on the lee side of a small hill after two hours of cold trailing. The fox headed eastward and kept on going for miles in a straight line.

We tried to keep within hearing of the hounds by cutting across the hills, a mile to the right from the fox's line, so we might cut him off if he should begin to circle. That, however, was not his intention for a long time, and when at last he did begin to circle it was a good way from where he was jumped. Let me say right here that the foxes that return to the starting point are rather the exception hereabouts; and especially at this time of the year, when the dog foxes go a great way from their favorite burrows after the vixens. Being jumped by the hounds probably seven miles from their usual haunts, they will run all of that distance in a straight line, or nearly so, and then will circle a mile or more around or near the burrow that is to be their final place of refuge when too hard pressed. The circles this fox made were so irregular that try as we might we could not get a glimpse of him. From the way the hounds put on, however, we knew that they were gaining on him fast, and when we saw them once, passing near us, they were running like demons.

Nearer and nearer they seem to come to the heels of the fox. He is now heading for a large clearing in the woods. Does he forget all his cunning? Does he forget that if the hounds sight him there he cannot live much longer in front of them? Why is that fox going out into such an open place, when his last chance of escape is in remaining in thick covert, or, better yet, in going to earth in yonder well-known burrow on the hill? Ah! that fox knows what he is about.

In a few minutes the tonguing stops and all is quiet; at the same time, almost, we come into the clearing and see, nearly in the middle of it, the hounds stretched out on the ground and lapping the cold snow to cool their tongues. But where is the fox? He is nowhere to be seen. One of the hounds, however, is stretched out over what proves to be a hole in the ground. We know now why the fox headed for this clearing; there is his burrow.

As we looked at our timepieces it was two o'clock in the afternoon, and as the train was due at 4 p. m. there was no time to waste. That was a cold and long chase.

NOTES

THE Lima Hounds had a very good day on March 23, judging by this dispatch from Media, Pa., to the Philadelphia Record: "The Lima Fox Hunting Club was out again to-day, and after a five-hours' run killed a fox and secured a brush and drove another fox to earth. The first fox was started in Johnson's woods in Middletown Township. He made a lively run up Ridley Creek and then across through Edgemont Township to Willistown in Chester County. Reynard circled there for an hour. But the hounds were hot on his trail, and when he was finally forced to take to an open field above Sugartown, the yelping pack was only fifty yards behind. The hounds then began running the fox by sight, and in a few minutes ran him down, and in spite of his efforts to escape soon tore him to pieces. Marshall Altemus was first in at the death, and secured the brush. Dr. Dohan, Charles Dohan, Thomas Powell and William Dohan were also close to the hounds when the fox was killed. A second fox was afterward started on Ridley Creek, and after a two hours' run was forced to take to earth in Johnson's Woods, near where the first fox was started." The last meet of the season had been set for Monday, March 25, at Flowerdale Park, where Mr. John R. Flower entertained all comers. The previous Friday a big dog fox had been dug out after affording a good gallop, and had been kept for a spin on the last day of the season. According to the correspondent of the Philadelphia Record this fox ran wonderfully well for a "bagman," for we read in that journal that: "The red fox captured by the Lima Hunt last week gave about seventy-five horsemen and eighty-five hounds a lively chase to-day. About one hundred invitations were sent out, and after breakfast at Flowerdale Park, given by John R. Flower, the fox was released by Marshall Altemus, whipper-in of the Lima Hunt, at 10:20 a. m. After fast and hard riding of three hours the fox was killed in the barnyard of Charles Cheyney, in Upper Chichester, having covered about twenty miles. John Hawkins, of the Lima Hunt, captured the brush. On the return another fox was started in Chelsea, which furnished two hours' riding, the fox being holed in Ford's thicket. The first fox was given twenty minutes' start, and was one of the liveliest hunted for a long time. Among the clubs represented were: Lima, Howellville, Brandywine Hundred, Concord and Ridley. Besides the hunters were many spectators present, many following the hunt in wagons and road carts. Supper was served at Flowerdale Park after the hunters returned." The members of the Lima Hunt ought to feel satisfied with the way they finished their season.

MESSRS. TATTERSALL—the English firm—have received instructions from the Duke of Richmond and Gordon to sell, by auction or by private treaty, the entire pack of the Goodwood Foxhounds, consisting of about forty-five couple of entered and fifteen couple of unentered hounds. This pack is, we believe, the oldest of which there is any record, dating back to 1675, and the Goodwood bitch pack is credited with being the fastest bitch pack in the United Kingdom. The present duke has maintained the pack in magnificent style for twelve years, but has now decided to give it up, much to the regret of the district.

A special meeting of the Brunswick Fur Club will be held at Mechanics' Hall, Boston, on April 16, at noon. The committee on the revision of the constitution and by-laws will make its report, and other important business will come before the meeting.

A pack of draghounds has been started at Lakewood, N. J., with Dr. Charles L. Lindley as M. H. The pack is supported by a hunt club, of which Mr. Arthur B. Claflin is president and Mr. George J. Gould vice-president.

Since the breaking up of the frost in England followers of the famous Quorn have been hunting six days a week to make up for lost time.

Fish and Fishing

FIXTURES

Chicago Fly Casting Club's open to the world touruament, August 21. F. B. Davidson, secretary.

JULY TROUTING ON THE RIO GRANDE DEL NORTE

Del Norte, Colo.

Editor American Field:—The season of 1894, in this section of Colorado, was most propitious for good catches of trout, especially so during July, when the fishes seemed ravenous and anxious to take the fly, artificial lure or bait of any kind. In fact, a novice could catch trout; for a trout is like a wild turkey—the smartest fool on earth.

Judge House, of Texas, with whom I have cast a line or two, tells a good one about the foolish trout. The Judge's yarn runs as follows:

"We were in camp and at lunch, when Jim (a nigger, from Texas) picked up a rod and asked: 'Boss, kin I try and ketch a fish?' Yes, I answered. So Jim picked up the rod, made an effort to cast, and landed the fly in his hand. Then he tried again, and this time succeeded in landing two flies in his hand, and I had to cut them out," continued the Judge. "Then Jim looked at the flies and asked: 'Boss, whar am de bait?' Why, said I, there is no bait; these fishes don't need bait! This settled Jim, who laid aside the rod most carefully and retorted: 'Boss, dese fishes don't got no sense! I likes dem fishes down in Pearl Ribber, what noes a good ding when dey sees hit.'"

During August last the rainy season occurred and the river was for several weeks—I might have said "five long weeks in the month of August"—too murky for any kind of fishing. But with the glorious season of Fall and clearing waters trout fed again, rising well to the fly, good creels were the rule, and the game was fully worth the candle.

During the latter part of July, one morning long before Old Sol had made an appearance over Sierra Blanca (a high peak of the Sangre de Cristo Range, on the east of the sunny San Luis Valley), four disciples of the gentle art—Frank Thomas (the lucky man), Bev. (not Rev.) Thomas (the religious man), David Gibbs (the funny man), and Crocus (the cranky man), all were on their way up the Rio Grande del Norte to try conclusions with the wary trout.

The lucky man believes in live minnows and a cane pole, and gets there just the same, even if he does carry the bait in his mouth; the religious man goes on a lucky day of the week, and also gets there just the same; the funny man shouts for all that's out (when he hooks a good one), and consequently gets there on time; the cranky man kicks because the trout don't come out on the bank and bite him, and when the biggest fish he hooks gets away, sings: "Enjoy thy stream, oh gentle trout!" etc. But to business.

The lucky man and religious man commenced at "The Craig," the ranch of our Scotch friend, Corson; the funny man and the crank started in a-whipping a mile below. By 10 a. m. our creels were fairly filled—I mean our pockets, for a bit of canvas with many pockets and a little coat is much handier as a creel than a basket.

By this time the fishes had ceased rising, and the funny man was ready to quit. Not so the crank, who had succeeded in landing several good ones by using a bass spinner (Irwin spinner), and was anxious to try the gross of flies in his book before quitting. Such is a crank!

We had stopped to lunch and to rest on the cobbles, when the lucky man hove in sight, weighted with fishes; and such a catch! Well, it would make one envy a lucky man! Seven trout which weighed over seventeen pounds (five, weight fifteen pounds), such was the basket displayed.

This showing gave encouragement to the funny man, who rigged up again and three of us commenced whipping down-stream. The religious man had homeward gone (to attend worship). Not far had we gone when the funny man cried out, he had struck a whale! (good brain food), and from the racket we suspected a Jonah conclusion. But, in the course of time, with the assistance of good tackle, a trout was landed which weighed—by the mind—four pounds, by the scales, three pounds; but, nevertheless, a good one.

JULY TROUTING ON THE RIO GRANDE DEL NORTE—PART OF OUR DAY'S CATCH OF ROCKY MOUNTAIN TROUT

The accompanying illustration, made from a photograph taken by the writer, shows six of the big Rocky Mountain trout that we caught that day. Frank Thomas hauled out Nos. 1, 2 and 3, with a cane pole, using minnows for bait. Nos. 4 and 5 were taken on a dark coachman fly with a lancewood rod, by David Gibbs. The writer caught No. 6 on an Irwin spinner, with a split-bamboo rod.

So ended a successful day on the Rio Grande Del Norte.

THE NINETEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE OHIO STATE FISH AND GAME COMMISSION

In their annual report to Governor McKinley, for the year 1894, the Ohio Commissioners of Fish and Game emphasize the commercial importance of the Lake Erie fisheries. They state that from 1882 to 1890 the supply of fishes increased steadily in that lake, but since the latter date the catch of many of the most valuable fishes has steadily decreased. The efforts of the State Fish Commission to procure the enactment—from time to time—of laws which would protect the fishes during the spawning season have always been combated by the market fishermen and fish dealers, from one end of the lake to the other.

The gill-net fishermen and the pound-net owners—who from their different methods have always been at variance with one another—are largely against [illegible] fishes, and have always combined the[ir] [illegible] the efforts of the state commissioners [illegible] despite their conflicting interests. [illegible] nets [illegible] be moved from place to place the owners follow the schools of fishes from shoal water to deep water, and are favored with catches at times when the pound-netters get little or nothing because their nets are stationary. But the pound-netters are not limited as to the size of fishes to be taken, and, of course, with their catches they lift tons upon tons of fishes during the season which are too small for market purposes, and which go to fertilizing factories to be utilized. Therefore it seems to be about a stand-off as to which class of fishermen is decimating Lake Erie the faster.

The report declares that until proper protective and restrictive legislation is enacted the fish and game commissioners "see no way by which the industry can be made more economic to the state." They urge a lease law by which the fishing grounds will be platted, claiming such a measure would bring the state from $20,000 to $50,000 annually, and the price of fish would be less to the public because the supply would be greater; and the change would be beneficial to the fishermen.

From lack of funds the commissioners were unable to utilize the hatchery at Sandusky, therefore its use was tendered to the United States Fish Commission, which promptly accepted and hatched out a very large number of pike-perch fry, of which a large planting was liberated in Lake Erie and about 16,000,000 were turned over to the Ohio commission. Of these some 2,500,000 were placed in Grand Reservoir, at Celina, but the remainder which were put into rearing ponds at Chagrin Falls appear to have been unfortunate, as when the water was drawn down none of the pike-perch fry was found.

At the Chagrin Falls Hatchery some 30,000 black bass fry were hatched from spawn obtained from 174 adult black bass. In the propagation of croppies, about 50,000 fry were obtained from twenty-five pairs of adult fishes.

At Waverly, in ponds leased by the commission, about 1,000,000 marble catfish fry were raised from 2,000 adult fishes which were obtained from Chautauqua Lake, New York, by the courtesy of the fish commission of that state, and during September and October Chief Fish and Game Warden Buntain superintended the distribution of the marble catfish fry in various waters of Ohio.

Fair angling—rod and line fishing—is reported to have improved vastly in inland lakes and reservoirs since net fishing has been prohibited in such waters.

The report of Chief Warden L. K. Buntain shows that during the year 156 persons were arrested for violating the game laws, of whom 126 were convicted. For violations of the fish laws 243 were arrested, of whom 157 were convicted. The sum total of fines collected was $3,864.75. This report shows a better general observance of the fish and game laws than formerly.

The financial report shows a balance on hand of $1,540.02. The appropriations for the year amounted to $6,500, and it would seem that the people of Ohio had received good value for every cent of their money. Certainly the propagation of fishes was economically done, at the rate of one cent each for the fry liberated, when it is remembered that the operations were upon rather a small scale and therefore not under so favorable conditions as exist in some other states which devoted more money for such purposes.

A DINNER AND GOOD FELLOWSHIP

On Friday evening, March 29, a number of the members of the Chicago Fly Casting Club were tendered a complimentary dinner and "smoker" by Mr. F. B. Orr, at his beautiful residence on Ellis Avenue, Chicago, the invitation to which was couched in a happy vein as follows:

My Dear Fellow Fisherman:—As informal as this invitation will be the dinner to which I invite you at my residence on Friday, March 29, at 6:45 p. m. sharp, to meet a few kindred spirits of the gentle art. While blowing a cloud in honor of our Patron Saint, Izaak W., every guest will be permitted to spin the rankest back number in fish yarns.

Anyone appearing in a dress suit will be cast into outer darkness.

Trusting you will favor me with a line of acceptance I reel this to a conclusion with the suggestion that we go up on the train together.

Very truly yours,

Frank B. Orr.

As happy a coterie of angling cranks as one would wish to meet assembled at the time mentioned, the occasion being made specially cheerful by Mrs. Orr, who charmingly graced the table with her presence, which all voted quite a condecension in view of what some fisherman present might relate as a truth. Mrs. Orr, however, knew a true fish story, as was evidenced long before the shadow of the second course had disappeared, and not the least pleasurable part of the dinner was the way the diners nibbled at "whoppers" but never got caught. But oh, how they did "spin 'em" when they got up in Mr. Orr's den!

A very suggestive feature of the last course was ice cream, molded in the shape of a boat, with [illegible] American flag flying from the mainmast. The flags were appropriated as souvenirs, of course.

...n "the den" yarns galore were spun and letters ... and regret read, among the latter were the ... which are published by request of those pres-

... Brother Angler: Your expert cast on March 25 fluttered ... desk to-day and you made a strike. While struggling to free myself from the hackle-hidden No. 10 Sproat, March Brown, I became conscious of the fact, as it proved, that another was flopping on the same line (trying to be a hass relief, I presume), and that you had made a double strike. As soon as I could get the lady at the Central to stop helloing (strange you should have inveigled her in the cast) I discovered my fellow captive was our active secretary, Frank B. Davidson. It did not take us long to exhaust our strength and we surrendered unconditionally to the tempting lure and you have landed us—scales excepted, as our feelings cannot be weighed. We will be in your generous net at 6:45 Friday (fish day), March 29.

It may be paradoxical to thank you for making us captives, but allow me to assure you that we appreciate the hand at the butt, and in unjointing we tip our helmets to you for reeling us in out of the wet. Sincerely yours,

GEO. W. STRELL.

F. B. ORR—Dear Sir: I cannot be with you Friday evening owing to a previous engagement with a Professor, who is the son of a Governor, and closely related to a Cardinal, whose Coachman, by the way, has lately scaled the line for Montreal.

For the menu I presume, for a leader, you will "tackle claret," next "turkey brown" (so Seth Green), and later on "float" (served in boats) with a "spoon."

There are no "flies" on Mr. "Oar," and my advice to all present, if they are "seine," is to cast anchor.

I know you will all have a "reel" good time. This is "net." With best wishes, I remain Yours sincerely,

J. E. ISORIGG.

Such was the spirit of the party and all too soon was it discovered that the new moon was tipping out of sight in the west, and it was time to make the last cast, which was delicately done, describing a circle of thanks around Mr. Orr from which he could not escape in time to prevent his guests from making a home plunge.

DARK VS. FULL MOON FISHING

NIMROD HALL, VA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I have read C. H. C—'s letter on the above subject, in your issue of March 30, with a good deal of interest. Some years ago I came to the conclusion, by practical experience, that the moon had a good deal to do with the size of my bag on a day's fishing. I converted that ideal old sportsman, the late Col. Fred G. Skinner, to my ideas, and he wrote a very interesting article on the subject.

My experience with bass and several other varieties of fishes is that they are essentially night feeders when they have light enough, and I have frequently had several experienced fly-fishers leave my house at early morn and fish till night when the moon was in the light and return with very small bags, while I would leave an hour before sundown, fish over the same water till eleven o'clock or later and my coachman, grizzly king, and yellow professor would soon fill my creel for me. When the moon is in the dark, I have made good bags during the day and have come to the conclusion that the reason was the fishes had to eat to live and as it was too dark to feed at night they fed during the day.

I find that Lord Baltimore, Montreal and Polka kill best during the day in the dark of the moon, whereas the coachman is most deadly at night in the light of the moon. The most curious part of the whole thing to me is that just before dark in the dark of the moon they don't feed well (being glutted, I suppose), while in the light of the moon they are just beginning to feed well and take a fly ravenously. I got fifty-five bass one evening last season in less than five hours, and did not leave the house till sunset. All our large day bags are made in the dark of the moon or after a night or two of cloudy weather.

EDWARD A. WATSON,
Fish Commissioner, Tenth District of Va.

MECHANICSBURG, O.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I read the article entitled "Dark vs. Full Moon Fishing," by C. H. C., who gives the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD some of his experiences in bass fishing which harmonize with my own. For thirty years I have angled for black bass, both species. I have used all kinds of live and artificial baits; have fished at all times of the day and of the night, on dark and on light nights. My experience has been such as to lead me to believe that bass may be taken more readily in the daytime when the nights are dark, and at night when the moon shines most brightly. I know they feed by moonlight. Some of the finest strings of black bass that I ever caught were taken between ten o'clock p. m. and two a. m. at or near the full of the moon, under a cloudless sky, when there was scarcely any breeze. I have tried them on dark nights, by means of a lantern, but never have been rewarded ... none very large ones. My favorite ... fishing is minnows, either alive or ... -throated frog from two to four ... hooked in the lips and cast very ... very silently moving boat or canoe.

S. M. HARPER.

NOTES

ON the night of April 1 a hot discussion took place at the meeting of the Anglers' Association of Onondaga County (N. Y.), at Syracuse. The great matter of interest was the expressed sentiment of some members that since Harry Jackson—the former special fish and game protector of the association—had been convicted and fined ten dollars upon a charge of fishing with a net illegally, his case should be investigated by the association. The ball was opened by Chairman J. E. Blerhardt of the executive committee, who introduced a resolution to expel Harry Jackson and Joseph Koegel, who has been using a uet also it was claimed. Upon this Mr. Fred Le Strange arose and stated that Jackson was being persecuted by parties at Liverpool who had ill will toward the ex protector because they had suffered through his vigilance when the officer of the association. Further, that the animus of the charge was to injure Jackson in his efforts to secure an appointment as state protector. Mr. Le Strange is reported as saying: "Let me uncover the true status of this affair, and I will make it hot for some of the people who are hounding this man." As a result of the debate a resolution was adopted, by which the two accused will have an opportunity, at the next monthly meeting, of introducing evidence in their defense. A committee of five was appointed, by Mr. Amos Padgham, who occupied the chair, to make preliminary arrangements for a June outing. Messrs. G. B. Wood (chairman) J. W. Page, L. S. Morgan, Mansfield French, and Fred Bower constituted the committee. The secretary was instructed by resolution to correspond with Assemblyman Rogers, and request him to petition the Assembly game committee, in the name of the Anglers' association, to extend the season for catching pickerel through the ice to February. It now includes December and January. Mr. F. E. Howell, of Utica, and Mr. J. E. Coon, of Syracuse, were elected members. The services of Protector C. S Potter were employed for one month.

THE opening of the trout season on April 1, in New York, was celebrated by Ex-Commissioner E. G. Blackford by the usual display of trout at his place of business in the Fulton Market. A marked feature with the display of dead trout was a fine thirteen-pound Puget Sound salmon, of rare coloring, symmetry and plumpness. There were dead trout from Long Island, North Carolina, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and New York; the Salmo fario, from the Old Colony trout ponds, at Plymouth, Mass., and some handsome hybrid trout, from the same ponds, attracted much attention. But those which appeared in the very pink of solid condition were from Sunk Meadows in Suffolk County. The display of live trout excited much interest and the fishes varied in size from a nine-pound rainbow trout (Salmo irideus), to a Salvelinus fontinalis which weighed two and one-quarter pounds, and from that size down to little four-ounce fellows of the latter species. Maine furnished some fine yearling trout from Green Lake, and a crowd of visitors surrounded a tank of three-inch black bass, watching their excited conduct induced by the introduction to their domain of a big rainbow trout and a lot of large speckled trout. The big rainbow trout came from Caledonia Creek, and during the journey had skinned his nose and marred his tail in his narrow quarters. As a consequence his temper as well as his appearance was impaired, and he resented the attentions of the 200 Salvelini with whom he was placed. Mr. Blackford said his sales on the opening day amounted to about 4,000 pounds.

AN explanation of the lack of angling sport on Lake Pontchartrain, near New Orleans, where a few years since anglers with rod and line found abundant sport, is thus given in a recent issue of the Times-Democrat, of that city. Near the Keller Market an Italian was standing on the sidewalk, beside a big basket which contained a bushel or more of croakers, redfish and other fishes from one inch to two inches in length, and he was offering the little fishes for sale. "Inquiry in the neighborhood developed the fact that there was a crowd of Italian 'fishermen' that made their living principally by catching these infantile fishes and selling them. The men have their station on the lake shore. They use an ordinary seine net, but the bag is lined with mosquito netting so as to prevent the small fishes from escaping through the meshes. In this way thousands of barrels of the immatured fishes are caught and sold. They are prepared for the table by making them into a sort of hash, eyes, heads and all, for they are so very small that even the scales do not detract from their palatableness. The dish thus made is said to be very tempting to the taste, to which is due the fact that this sort of fishing has been carried on by the Italians for over two years."

ALTHOUGH the trout season opened April 1 in California, as in many Eastern states, recent reports collated by the San Francisco Chronicle compel the inference that, although trout are very plentiful, heavy and continuous rains have put most of the streams in a condition unfavorable to great success with the rod. The smaller tributaries will clear first, as the water declines, but the prediction is made that a month must elapse before the larger streams will afford the best of sport, either to the bait fisherman or the fly caster. From this it would seem that our brother anglers on the Pacific Coast will not be able to report good catches of Salmo much if any sooner than we will in the East.

TROUT fishermen who intend pursuing their favorite sport in Minnesota this year will do well to notice that by the amendments to the fish and game laws of that state, passed on Friday, April 5, and taking immediate effect, no trout can be caught in that state until May 1 and the open season expires September 1, cutting off April and September from the open season. Fishing with hook and line for bass and wall-eyed pike is lawful except during March and April. This does not apply to Hennepin County, which is under an unrepealed special law passed in 1889. In that county the season is from June 1 to December 1. But a section has been added forbidding shipping from the state any bass, croppy, pike, perch or trout.

THE Springfield (Ill.) Fishing Club held a meeting at the Leland Hotel, the night of April 4, and elected the following officers: President, John H. McCreery; vice-president, L. P. Rogers of Buffalo; secretary, M. W. Stebbins; treasurer, George H. Souther; executive committee: O. F. Stebbins, J. H. McCreery, O. J. Owbridge, James B. Stout and W. H. Odlorne. New members were elected as follows: Messrs. Brand Whitlock, Edward F. Hartman, J. F. Bird, Henry Merriam, Jerome A. Leland, Robert D. Loose, Edward W. Dana, George M. Skelley, Meade Yates, E. S. Grubb, Charles Robinson, Ernest Hoover and Wm. E. Shutt Jr.

A RECENT dispatch from Columbus, O, reports that hundreds of tons of dead fishes endanger the public health in the vicinity of the Mercer reservoir, said to be the largest artificial body of water in the world. Since the ice went out the fishes have floated to the surface, and the people demand that the State Board of Public Works remove the dead fishes before warm weather arrives. It is supposed the fishes were frozen or suffocated during the extreme Winter weather, but some think the refuse oil from the many gas and oil wells surrounding the reservoir may have found its way into the water and caused the destruction.

THE total output of fish fry from the Duluth, Minn., government fish hatchery this season will be about 40,000,000, of which 25,000,000 are wall-eyed pike, 11,000,000 whitefish, 4,500,000 lake trout. In addition to these Supt. S. P. Wires reports on hand about 80,000 rainbow trout. Men are at work preparing the fry for shipment to various places where the young fishes are to be liberated. The wall-eyed pike will go to interior lakes of Michigan and Wisconsin, and the rivers of the Dakotas. The whitefish are for various points on Lake Superior, and the lake trout also are placed in the great lakes.

DESPITE the unfavorable conditions existing April 1 in the vicinity of Worcester, Mass., a number of enthusiastic troutsmen of that place celebrated the opening of the trout season by unusually good catches. None of the anglers reported upon their return less than forty trout. Among those who went out were Dr. George McAleer, John N. Akarman, A. H. Stoue, E. H. Vaughn, Henry Walker, Horace Adams, George A. Davis, John Holt and Lloyd Manning.

IN Essex County, N. J., Fish and Game Warden J. R. Riley says he paid a visit recently to the Upper Passaic River, and found that German and French carp have taken possession of the greater part of the river. From this he infers that the law recently passed prohibiting the placing of any kind of carp in the streams of the state was not enacted by the legislature needlessly, as the fishes are nearly worthless and destroy the stream for better fishes.

THE fish and game bill now in the Wisconsin legislature provides for the open seasons as follows: Trout, April 1 to August 1; pike and pickerel, May 1 to March 1 black bass, June 1 to March 1. The bill has been referred back to the committee to consider amendments offered, and there may be some changes in the above dates, of which we will advise our readers as soon as passed.

THE output of young codfish, from the hatchery at Ten Pound Island, Gloucester Harbor, Mass., amounted to 13,000,000. The hatchery has been closed. The season's work was somewhat disappointing, from the fact that although many more eggs had been obtained the extreme weather during February killed millions of them in the hatching process.

FROM New Britain, Conn., reports are that the trout season opened most discouragingly to the enthusiasts who braved the cold, raw air all day April 1 in pursuit of Salvelinus fontinalis. Eight anglers were seen upon one stream near Berlin, but no good catches were reported, so it must be the trout did not bite.

THE Missouri state fish commission has announced that this month it will liberate 1,000,000 fish fry, of different varieties of bass, and croppies in the waters of the state.

THE REPTILES OF MICHIGAN—NO. 12

BY MORRIS GIBBS

Massasauga Prairie Rattlesnake—Sistrurus catentus (Raf).—It does not seem appropriate to call this a prairie species, for although it is occasionally taken in dry and even upland districts, its preference is for low lands, with water near at hand. A favorite point is low, sparse woodland or a tamarack swamp. Perhaps this reptile has been driven from its possible original habitation of the prairies by the advance of civilization and has taken to low lands for self protection. But this hardly seems reasonable, and I feel safe in saying that this poisonous snake never infested the prairies to any extent in Michigan. The vivid stories of the settlers of sixty years ago, when the rattlers were said to be very numerous and grow to a terrific (?) size, bear out the opinion that this snake of unsavory reputation was then, as now, an inhabitant of the swamps and marshes.

The name, massasauga, is of Indian origin, and if anyone can give the meaning of the word let us hear from him through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD. Nearly all aboriginal American names have a meaning, and it will be interesting to trace this, as many others of the tribes of people so soon to be totally obliterated, and who have already lost their identity. To believe the stories of the first settlers, there were giant rattlers in the early days, and it was not uncommon to discover and kill from ten to a hundred massasaugas during a day's work in haying on the marshes, and many of them were five and six feet long. Stories of great exaggeration are still in vogue, and will be so long as snakes exist. The truth is, I do not believe that a specimen of this species was ever taken measuring forty inches in length. The largest one I have met with was thirty-six inches long and measured six and one-half inches in circumference. It was a whopper and as it lay coiled looked a veritable monster. Eleven rattles adorned this individual. A companion, who was tramping the low woods with me, nearly stepped on this snake as it lay partly dormant on the ground one chilly day in the Spring. The usual length is twenty to twenty-four inches.

So many tales of snake bites are related that we cannot separate the truths from the untruths, and we are as much in the dark in this respect as regarding many other topics of "snakelore." It is reasonable to say that nine-tenths of the supposed bites of dangerous snakes are simply scratches from innocuous species. In addition to these improbable cases we have the barefaced lies of lovers of untruths. There are plenty of persons who will weave any kind of a story out of an encounter with a common streaked-snake, and many of general intelligence and honesty will swear that a water-snake is a rattler, or, at least, a deadly moccasin or copperhead. Then there are the imaginative who think they are bitten if they scratch their hand in a bramble patch, and I have known of hysterical women nearly dying from fright from mere imagination of a bite.

A few remarks on snake bites may not come amiss in this article, together with statements from authorities. The writer has never met with a case of snake bite in Michigan, though scores of improbable stories have reached my ears. Yet a death from a snake bite (authentic) has never been reported in Michigan to my knowledge. It is reasonable to suppose that the larger the size of the snake giving the bite the greater the danger, for the deeper the fangs would penetrate, and the amount of venom would be greater. There are few published reports regarding the bites of the massasauga, though we have read many accounts of the bite of the northern or banded rattler, c. durissus (Linn.), and the large southern species. Dr. Kirtland, of Ohio, is quoted as saying that the bite of a massasauga is scarcely worse than the sting of a hornet. Professor Hay, of the Field Columbian Museum, Chicago, says:

"But, having had a good deal of experience with, and knowledge of, these snakes, I think that they are not to be tampered with." He further says; * "Animals that have been bitten by them, such as dogs and cows, suffer much and have troublesome swellings."

Probably the bite of a small "sauger" would produce but slight disturbance, but a wound from a full-grown individual would be indeed serious. We read much regarding treatment of the bites of poisonous snakes, but the treatment, little understood, is in the hands of but few and rarely, if ever, at hand when required. It is now acknowledged that a solution of permanganate of potash injected beneath the skin is the best antidote. I know nothing of the remedy; but do not doubt its efficacy, from the reports of eminent authorities. But, I would ask, what results may be expected from a tardy treatment? Hunters, travelers and strollers in the woods and fields do not carry this remedy and the necessary hypodermic syringe about with them, and there may not be a medical attendant in the county where the sufferer was bitten.

In case one is bitten by a poisonous serpent, the mouth should be applied at once and the wound well sucked. The return of the blood to the heart should be checked by a ligature above the bite on arm or leg. After the venous circulation is shut off, the region surrounding the wound should be scarified freely and if necessary deeply, with a sharp knife, and continuous suction kept up, varied by good long pulls at the whisky bottle, which we hope the victim may be fortunate enough to have by him. The advocates of temperance claim that spirits do not destroy the effects of the poison, and they are right; but they are wrong in asserting that the effects are not beneficial. The stimulating action of alchohol tends to tide over the first and more dangerous effects resulting from the venom.

Some persons have told me that the massasauga is much more venomous in July and August, and more particularly during the dog days, at about which time the species sheds its skin, so to speak. Sometime during the hotter months these snakes exfoliate, and it is my opinion that they also crawl out of their outer skin in the Spring, at least some of them do; and, perhaps, they exuviate twice each season. Some claim that this is the habit, and it is reasonable to think that it may be so, for tropical species are said to shed three or four times each year.

An old settler informed me that: "Saugers is more sartin deadly pizen when they's blind, and jes' before they sheds their pelts." I do not doubt it either, as there is good reason to think that during the state of inactivity preceding exfoliation the venom must accumulate in greater amount. Still, I fail to see how the idea prevails so generally. Previous to the shedding of the epidermis, the scale or covering to the eye becomes opaque and of a whitish color, and the "sauger" is unusually sluggish, yet, at the same time, exceedingly irritable, and will sound his rattle but hardly ever attempt to escape, which he will generally do when active. I have never met with an individual or heard of a "sauger" or any species of snake which had recently made a meal previous to shedding.

Once was accorded me the pleasure of watching a "sauger" shedding his skin. It occurred in a whortleberry marsh where we had gone for berries. It is said that snakes are much more easily divested of their external coats if they have access to water. This may be the case, and this individual was handicapped in some way as he did not get entirely free from his skin for more than three hours. Sometimes the act is performed very quickly. I have seen an individual slip out in less than ten minutes, and one authority says it is done sometimes in a minute. I have known of snakes in confinement which shed their epidermis only in sections, and the process was not over for weeks. Even the wild ones do not always have an easy time, and I have seen several with tatters hanging to them.

This rattler of the marsh was certainly blind when he was first observed, or, at least, the indications pointed that way. There was a slight rent in the skin of his muzzle, and he was trying to enlarge it, apparently, when first seen. The eye, that is the old enveloping skin over it, looked whitish and opaque. My presence did not seem to frighten the snake in any way, although I was often within a yard of it; but I think it sensed my presence in some way, and twice it entered its burrow beneath the interlaced roots of some tamaracks. It reappeared, and, finally, after much wriggling about, cast its entire coat. The movements were interesting. Contrary to the popular idea, and stories of idle talkers, the rattle did not come away with the slough, but was retained and he used it with vigor when irritated. Bright and shining, active and aggressive, he looked an entirely different animal from the sluggish creature first observed.

While speaking of snakes being blind just previous to skin shedding, I cannot refrain from giving another instance, although it refers to another species. We were watching a huge gopher snake, Georgia cooperi, which was lying on a log near the wharf down on Indian River, Florida. We afterward measured the log and her position, and found she was in the neighborhood of seven feet long. This big snake was shedding her scruff, but was having a difficult time of it, as an old wound on her side, at about the middle, caused the skin to adhere and it came away only in flakes. Strange to say the head was still incased in the old slough, and the eyes were milky and opaque. We walked slowly and noiselessly up to her,* and noted her appearance. At last, a slight tap with a cane on the ground caused her to [illegible] ably from the jar. My companion re[illegible] seized a tag of skin, and it came away in [illegible] with a tearing noise. Perhaps the sn[illegible] she certainly flounced out of our way, [illegible] hole in the wharf, with wonderful [illegible], although the aperture to her abode was only slightly larger than the diameter of her body.

The act of striking by poisonous snakes has been much written of, and, I believe, falsely to a large extent. The massasauga has been credited with wonderful power of springing and striking, and with the other venomous serpents (yes, and for that matter, all the snakes in the world, poisonous and innocuous), is presented to the public as a wonderful jumper. All the rattlers, together with the moccasin and copperhead, are considered able to leap forward at least to their full length, while lovers of the marvelous will claim that rattlers can jump several times their length and bite or spit venom at the same time. Indeed, one renowned Ananias told me, with a straight face, that he had seen a rattler leap for a man, miss the mark and fix its teeth in a tree; and the tree died in less than an hour.

The striking of snakes may be readily observed by any interested person, by watching a common streaked-snake or others of our smaller innocuous serpents. The principle is the same, although the striking movements of the poisonous species are much more vigorously and actively done. In striking, all serpents draw back the head and get their slack from a sigmoid flexure, and then launch forward with considerable force to the extent of the limit allowed by the slack, but no farther. Many ignorantly suppose that a venomous coiled snake will and does dart forward to the full length of its body. Let us consider. If a serpent struck from a coil of say two, or even one and one-half convolutions, from necessity it would have to make two revolutions of the head and body, supposing that it struck full length. To illustrate this to any thinking person let one flex the elbow, resting the finger-tips on the shoulder, then present the fingers from you palm down at an object, straightening the arm. It will be seen at once that the hand has to make a half revolution in the act. Of course a snake does not direct its head away from the object to be struck, but the principle is the same, and any reasoner will agree with this idea and acknowledge that it is impossible for a snake to strike to its full length from a coil. The late Professor J. W. P. Jenks, curator of Brown University, first brought this theory to my notice. He was an observer of great merit and quickly converted several of us to his line of thought. It may be there are serpents (so reported) which are capable of springing directly upward, or a little to one side, but they are not found in this land.

NOTES

NEAR Palm Beach, Fla., Prof. C. B. Cory, of the Field Columbian Museum of Chicago, who has spent the Winter in Florida with assistants collecting natural history specimens for the museum, had a narrow escape from death. The party had been tracking two large panthers and the dogs had treed the female. When the hunters reached the tree Prof. Cory would not let them shoot the panther, for he desired greatly to obtain a photograph of the fierce brute as she lay crouched upon a limb of the big live oak in which she had taken refuge from the dogs. The old hunters warned the Professor that the attempt would be exceedingly dangerous but he persisted. Just as he was ready to take the photograph, the panther sprang upon him, smashed the camera and knocked him down, and began using her claws vigorously upon his prostrate form. Two dogs which went to his assistance were killed, each by a single swipe of her powerful foreleg, and Professor Cory undoubtedly would have been killed also had not an old hunter shot the panther through the heart. As it was the Professor's right arm was torn near the shoulder and his face was badly clawed. At last accounts the plucky naturalist and his assistants were in pursuit of the male panther.

The Treadwell Mine and Mill

Situated on Douglass Island across the channel from Juneau, a distance of about two and one-half miles, are the most remarkable quartz mine and mill on the face of the globe.

wall to wall. At this end, by some convulsion of nature, the ledge appears to be broken off abruptly and sunken into the earth. At all events, explorations costing several hundred thousand dollars, made upon a group of claims northwest of the Treadwell Mine proper, have not as yet brought to light any continuation of the ledge in that direction.

Located at the broader or butt end of the ledge are the famour Treadwell Mines and Mill. The principal claim, known as the "Paris Lode," was located in the Summer of 1880 by a half-breed prospector and frontiersman, called "French Pete." During the Fall of that year this claim was purchased by John Treadwell, a miner of long experience on the Pacific Slope and a man of exhaustless energy and perseverance, for the consideration price of three hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. Treadwell's explorations on the property soon satisfied him that whereas the ore was of a low grade the supply was almost inexhaustible. He secured some of the adjoining claims, between the "Paris" and the seashore, and continued his explorations. Beginning on the lower side of the hill, he drove a cross-cut tunnel or drift into the ledge a distance of about one hundred feet, and found quartz continuous which showed under assays a uniform deposit of gold per ton. He then sunk a shaft down the ledge, along the upper wall, a distance of some two hundred feet, with the same satisfactory results. He next erected upon the ground a five-stamp mill, and subjected the quartz to a thorough and practical test by the milling process. The results obtained convinced him beyond all doubt of the great value of the property, and he proceeded to San Francisco, succeeded in enlisting capital in behalf of the enterprise and the old Alaska Mill & Mining Company was organized.

Under Mr. Treadwell's superintendence, a mill of one hundred and twenty stamps, capable of crushing about two hundred and fifty tons per day, was erected at the mouth of the tunnel and was finally completed and put in operation in the year 1885. This mill produced very satisfactory results, and further explorations continuing to demonstrate the permanent character of the mine, in 1887 one hundred and twenty stamps more were added, making in all two hundred and forty stamps—the largest mill of its character under one roof and management in the world.

Since that time the mill has been continuously in operation, night and day, almost every day in the year. It now crushes about six hundred tons every twenty-four [illegible] a few days during the colder [illegible] mill is operated by water power. [illegible] are ditches and water flumes [illegible] ain sides) over thirty-seven miles [illegible] two inch pipe passes down from the mountain side a distance of about six hundred feet, through which the water finds its way and emerges from a two-inch nozzle onto an enormous Pelton wheel, whereby the vast machinery of the mill is operated.

The quartz carries to a limited extent what is commonly known among the miners as "free gold," but the larger portion of the precious metal is combined with sulphur and iron, forming what is called a sulphuret.

The machinery necessary to crush and reduce the ore is not complicated. The stamps, as they are called, each consists of a stem of iron or steel nine feet long and three inches in diameter, and weighing when equipped about nine hundred pounds. These stamps are arranged perpendicularly in sections of five, called a battery, and operate in an oblong mortar of enormous weight. Each stamp is held in place by sockets, through which it moves up and down when in operation. Toward the top of each stem or stamp is a shoulder, and running through the mill lengthwise and parallel with the line of shoulders on the row of stamps is a heavy revolving shaft some five inches in diameter. On this shaft are fixed brackets or cams whose upper surfaces describe an arc. The stamps and brackets are so arranged that, as the large shaft revolves, the brackets catch the shoulder of the stamp and in revolving lift and carry it along the surface of the arc of the cam until the end of the bracket is reached, when the stamp drops its full weight into the mortar to be lifted and dropped again by the next revolution of the large shaft, and thus the process goes on.

The ore is carried from the mine in small dump cars, hauled by a dummy locomotive into the top of the mill, and from there it passes down through a hopper into the mortar, where it is crushed to pulp by the blows of the constantly moving stamps.

On the lower side of the mortar, running its full length, is a slot or opening. By a system of piping water is constantly carried into the mortar while the stamps are at work, and during the operation the water, carrying with it the crushed quartz (pulverized to a pulp), passes out through the slot on the lower side of the mortar, over copper plates smeared with quicksilver which picks up the free gold, forming what is known as amalgam, and thus the free gold is saved. After passing over the copper plates the water, still laden with the sediment of the crushed rock, passes onto a plate or pan which slowly revolves after the manner of the straw carrier of a threshing machine. These pans are called vannors, and by a simple mechanical device are kept vibrating as they slowly revolve. The effect of the vibration is to deposit the mineral along the surface of the vannor while the water and sand, denuded of mineral, pass over the lower end of the vannor and are carried off by a flume. This refuse is commonly called tailings, and constant assays of these tailings are made for the purpose of ascertaining what, if any, mineral is carried away with them. The mineral deposited by the vibrating process along the face of the vannors is scraped off by a straight-edge, as the plate slowly revolves. These deposits are called concentrates, and consist principally of gold, iron and sulphur in combination.

The concentrates are removed to another building called the chlorination works, where the sulphur is eliminated by a roasting process carried on in huge ovens heated to a high temperature. The pulp, being now rid of the sulphur and reduced to iron and gold, is placed in large vats where the gold is precipitated to the bottom by the chemical process known as chlorination, and the iron is thrown away.

The crude quartz carries gold from two and one-half to about four dollars per ton, but so complete is the process of extraction that it is taken from the mine and reduced to gold at an average cost of about sixty-five cents to the ton, and owing to the large quantity handled every twenty-four hours, the property is one of the most valuable in the world. Mr. Treadwell and the owners of the mine and mill have already amassed enormous fortunes out of the property.

The ore is blasted out of the mine by the use of giant powder, inserted and discharged in holes drilled into the quartz. The drilling is done by the Burleigh drill, operated by compressed air, and the rock is blown from terraces one above the other along the walls of the mine. The entire body of quartz from the surface of the ledge and between the walls of country rock has been blown out to a depth of about two hundred feet, whereby a pit some five hundred feet by two hundred feet in dimensions has been formed in the mountain side. Notwithstanding the enormous quantity thus taken out the mine shows no sign of becoming exhausted. On the contrary a careful estimate recently made by one of the company's engineers leads to the conclusion that, at the present rate of consumption, there is quartz enough in sight to operate the mill at its present capacity for twenty-six years.

The gold is finally retorted into bricks, varying in value from eight thousand to seventeen thousand dollars each, which are shipped direct to the United States Mint at San Francisco.

Doubtless many of the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD have seen specimens of these bricks, on exhibition as a part of the Alaskan Exhibit, in the north gallery of the Government Building, at the Columbian Exposition.

The high state of perfection to which the system of reducing has been brought is largely owing to the skill and experience of Thomas Mein, recently the general manager of the property. He has no superior as a practical mining man anywhere, and is now in charge of a very extensive group of quartz claims in South Africa, owned by an English syndicate the leading stockholders of which are the Rothschilds.

After the erection of the second set of one hundred and twenty stamps, the company was reorganized under the name of the Alaska-Treadwell Gold Mining Company, a name given it in honor of the indomitable man whose energy and perseverance laid the foundations of this colossal enterprise. The property is chiefly owned by San Francisco parties, but D. O. Mills of New York is a large holder.

A company known as the Mexican owns the group of mines between the Treadwell and the seashore, and after extensive explorations, carried on for over two years, this company decided to erect another one hundred and twenty stamp mill on the beach, a short distance from the Treadwell, and this adds its quota to the roar and thunder which the vast machinery night and day sends reverberating along the mountains and cañons of the adjacent shores.

A Perfect Sleeping Bag

In another column will be found the advertisement of Hulbert Bros. & Co., New York.

They have just perfected arrangements for the sole control and sale of the Kenwood Sleeping Bags. This is something entirely new and merits the attention of all sportsmen. Sleeping bags have heretofore been so big and cumbersome as to lose their utility in the camp, as they were too big to transport with any degree of convenience, especially with other camp equipments. Those that have been made heretofore have been made principally of canvas, fleece lined and heavy waterproof duck on the outside, and while quite comfortable when once in them, were too big for ordinary use. The new Kenwood bag is an all wool heavy blanket, woven into bag shape, without seams, and fastened at the top and down the center about three feet with patent fasteners, so that one can completely envelop themselves or leave their arms out, and still be protected from the weather. They are closely felted and have a thick soft nap inside. They will shed dew or an ordinary light rain without wetting through. A splendid arrangement inside of a log cabin on a chilly night, and would be almost indispensable in case of illness in camp. Just the thing on board of a yacht or house boat. Another thing which commends them to the public is the price, ranging from $6 to $10, according to weight, while most bags heretofore have sold for from $20 to $30. They can be rolled up in a small parcel and carried in a shawl strap, and being put on the market by a firm who are so thoroughly in the sporting goods business, and knowing the requirements of the sportsman, is a sufficient guarantee of the worth of this new article. Advt.

Through Service

The Nickel Plate Road (N. Y. C. & St. L. R. BUYING AND SELLING

Beaumont, Tex.

Editor American Feild:—I have read with some interest in the late issues of your valuable paper letters from Mr. Smith, Syntax, Old Dominion, etc., regarding the selling of dogs on approval, and if you will kindly give me space in the great American Field I would like to speak a little piece for the other fellow, namely the dog buyer.

Syntax says: "Dealers have to pay cash in advance; let the rest do the same." I would like to ask Syntax if, when he (or any other professional dog man) buys a dog he does not know all about the dog, its breeding, training (if any), the man he is buying from, and his reliability? He is not buying a pig in a bag, as it were, which the average dog buyer has to do, that is if he sends the "cold cash" in advance. This puts an entirely different face upon the matter.

Old Dominion says he has had some rich experiences in selling dogs on approval, which I presume to be true. I also have had a little rich experience in buying dogs on the pay-in-advance plan, and with your kind permission I will give an account of a couple of them.

Some few years ago I was in need of a dog, so I answered the advertisement of a gentleman who wanted to sell a broken English setter. We corresponded, and he recommended the dog very highly and guaranteed it O. K.; but he did not care to send the dog on approval, he said, as the hunting season was just opening and he might lose the sale of it (in case I did not buy). I thought this looked reasonable enough, and I concluded to send him the money, he agreeing to refund it if the dog was not all right. I got the dog and went out on a trip with a party of friends for a few days, and suffice it to say that I was the butt of many a joke from the "boys" regarding my brand new dog. He evidently thought we were on a cattle round-up, for if he happened to get sight of a cow he would never stop until he had her headed for the next county at a 2:40 gait. When I returned home I informed the gentleman that the dog was not desirable, and I would return it to him, which I did, and asked him to return my money (less express charges). I received an answer that, as the dog had been away for nearly two weeks and he probably could not sell him at that season of the year, he did not feel disposed to return the money, as another party would have taken the dog if I had not; and that the dog was there, subject to my order. And he is still there, I suppose. As is also $40 of my "cold cash," as Syntax would say. So much for one rich experience.

Last July I had occasion to purchase again, as my old stand-by had departed this life, meeting a violent death last Spring and leaving me dogless. I answered an advertisement of a Mr. H— of Detroit, Mich., stating that a thoroughly broken son of Cincinnatus was for sale, price $50, steady to wing and shot, retrieved from land or water, had rare bird-sense, etc. I wrote him that I would take the dog if sent on approval. I told him of my former experience, and I insisted that I must see the dog work before paying for it. I received a very nice letter from Mr. H—, stating that I could expect nothing else but to get swindled if I sent money to irresponsible parties as I had done before, but that he was a dog dealer and had a reputation to sustain; he sent me a catalog, in which were listed about fifty dogs he had for sale—all by celebrated sires and dams—and he explained that he could not afford to send me a poor dog from his kennel. He also sent me numerous references as to his standing, and concluded by saying that I should send a check and he would send the dog, and upon receipt of a letter from me saying the dog was all right he would send on the check for collection; if not O. K., I could return the dog and he would return the check, etc.

As I could not get any better terms I finally did as he suggested, and the dog came on schedule time; and it was certainly the handsomest animal I have ever seen. I kept him around me a couple of days (in order to get acquainted) and then took him out without any misgivings, as I had discovered he was well yard broken. We had in company with him a well broken dog, and upon finding a covey of birds my friend's dog stood as stanch as a rock. At the rise we got a pair, and upon the crack of the guns my blue-blooded treasure came racing up from behind, put up the rest of the covey, and chased them about four miles. The same performance was repeated by him at every opportunity, and I candidly believe the dog had never been in the field in his life. He would neither hunt, stand nor retrieve and was utterly worthless.

I wrote Mr. H— as to the dog's performance, and that I would send the dog the next day. But having occasion to go to the bank that day I found the check had been sent on and collected and was charged to my account. I again wrote, demanding his reason for violating our contract and asking for the return of my money, but neither that nor subsequent letters elicited any response from this highly reputable dog dealer.

I have instituted inquiries in Detroit, but cannot find any trace of a dog fancier of that name, so I concluded that I was imposed upon by some scoundrel under an alias. I do not mean to say that all dog dealers are dishonest; far from it, as I have great admiration for dealers of the stamp of Old Dominion and others I could mention, having known many fine dogs that they sold and represented exactly as they were, but I merely wish to convince these gentlemen that the buyer sometimes gets the worst of it.

I have watched the American Field carefully for some time past, as I wanted to get a dog of certain requirements, and I have seen several such advertised. In each case I have written the parties (when the price was satisfactory) and offered to deposit with an express company the price of the dog, as security for safe return if not satisfactory; also I offered to pay express charges one way. Could anything be fairer than that? But the answers are about all alike—certified check, New York draft, money in advance (of course if the dog is not as represented they will return my money upon return of dog). But a burnt child dreads the fire, and I have made up my mind that I will go dogless until I find a dealer that has enough faith in the dog he recommends to submit it to a trial in the field while he has the Wells-Fargo Express Company as security for the property.

And now, in conclusion, I would like to ask these gentlemen what is the reason (if the dogs are all as they are represented) that they object to send on such terms as these? Let them speak out; for is not the great American Field open to all its readers?

Parker, S. D.

Editor American Field:—When Mrs. Mary Bartholomew, state agent of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals at Jamestown, N. D., has that $500 judgment to pay she may draw on me for a V.

This country is flooded with dogs that were trained by such and such a professional or are from eastern kennels that buy and sell hundreds of dogs for cash before the dog is shipped. In the first instance the owner is a gentleman living in a city. He gives us breeding, size, markings and disposition; that much he knows personally. Then he gives us for hunting qualities the trainer's statement, which he also believes to be true, as it has cost him fifty or seventy-five dollars, but he has never seen the dog work; finds he cannot get time to go out, which is his reason for selling. He gets his price, cash; ships the dog, regretting to see it go, and congratulating his sporting brother on the prize he is getting cheap. He believes every statement to be true and is honest in the matter. The dog arrives, and after two or three days' rest we take him out. He is a beauty, just as our friend described him, but the thing we bought the dog for (hunting) he knows nothing about. We [illegible] for two or three weeks, but he won't wo[illegible] has been spoiled by a so-called profess[illegible] which I have seen a number out her[illegible] (and corks) and writing to the owners, '[illegible] great work."

That man was honest with us, but [illegible] bought? We were both honest and dissatisfied.

The worst curs and mongrels represented as bird-dogs that I ever saw (and there are quite a number of them here) were oash before being shipped from large eastern kennels that handle cheap dogs. They look to have little, if any, breeding, but that part would be forgiven if they only had a little hunt in them and did not show the lack of training or handling of any kind. The seller (the kennel gentleman) is "not in a section of the country where he can try such a dog;" he, too, has to "take the statement of the party he deals with." True, the dog may have the breeding, marking, etc., but not that which we also want and buy him for (hunt).

If we buy a gun the company says it will do so-and-so and give such and such penetration. I know of no company but what will send a gun for one or two days' trial; the gun does as represented, and we keep it. Not so with a dog. He is represented to do so-and-so—and that is what we want him for—but he does not do it, though his looks and his breeding are as represented. In buying puppies we get the breeding and expect to have to run the chanoes of their ever being worth a fig to hunt.

I have bought four "trained" dogs in the last four years, cash before shipment, and not one was worth his feed. As I was giving up in despair I got a letter from a stranger, saying: "Understand you want to buy a hunting dog. I have one; know nothing about his breeding—a cross of some kind—but he's a hunter on land or water and honest as the sun. I shipped him to you to-day. Try him for a week. If as I represent, you can send me a draft." He was the best dog I ever saw in the field, and he was paid for (killed this Fall). I cannot see why a party should hesitate to ship a dog if he knows the dog is as he claims it to be, and if the prospective buyer will deposit the amount in some bank or express office, thus showing his intentions to be honorable. It is an easy matter to find out a man's standing in a community as to his character and honor. If he has that (with the money) no one need fear the result if the truth has been stated.

I hope the American Field will not hesitate to place before its many readers the names of parties who are not doing the square thing to their brother sportsmen, either in the training of dogs or selling of them, and will refuse to place their advertisements in this greatest of all American sporting papers.

Editor American Field:—It is not always the seller who gets left. Sometimes the buyer gets it "where the bottle wears the cork." A few weeks ago I arranged to exchange a camera for an "English setter dog two and a half years old, pedigreed, stanch to point and shot, a splendid retriever," etc. I sent the camera (subject to examination) and got an Irish setter puppy, about ten months old, I should judge. As for pedigree, why, I cannot even get his name.

In the American Field of February 16 this same party offered a broken Irish setter dog for $35. I suppose the buyer might get an English setter puppy. This man hails from Indiana.

GREAT DANES ON THE RANGES

A dog is valuable in proportion to its utility, and as the Great Dane in America has not had the advantage of being put to practical use outside of watching, the demand has been limited to those who have premises to guard and who admire them for their noble carriage, size and companionship. But from reported trials of these powerful and speedy dogs on the cattle ranges of the Great West, in clearing the country of coyotes and wolves, it is by some predicted that the demand for these dogs will soon exceed that of any other non-sporting breed in America. Whether all Great Danes can perform the feats attributed to them in the subjoined extracts remains to be proven, however.

Cattlemen, as is well known, suffer great losses every year from the depredations of coyotes and wolves. The skeletons of thousands of calves and their weakened dams, strewn over the cattle ranges, mutely attest their struggle for existence—the inevitable end of the strong over the weak, and the consequent loss to the owner. During the Winter season, when the snows are deepest and the bitterly cold winds pierce the poor range cattle to the marrow, exhausting their vitality, the strongest are unable to resist the attacks of the hordes of snapping, snarling, cowardly brutes, who gain courage only by numbers.

The borzoi has been tried by some cattle owners to drive away or kill wolves, but with what success we have not heard. We were shown, however, two letters from ranchmen who have tested the Great Dane for this purpose, and their success leads us to believe that a demand from sources not hitherto heard of will spring up and tend to the benefit and advancement of the Great Dane interests in America. As the letters were not intended for publication, being private correspondence, by permission we extract only those portions pertinent to the subject. The first correspondent, from Montana, writes:

"Our annual losses from destruction of cattle by prowling wolves and coyotes amounts to thousands of dollars, and though we scatter strychnine broadcast their numbers do not decrease; still, this is the best we can do. But when you suggested some three years ago to try Great Danes, and I told the boys on the round-up of it, they all thought if the coyotes were not cleared off entirely they would help relieve the monotony of round-up life by chases if nothing else. One fear only did [illegible] have, and I entertained the same, the wild range [illegible] might not like their presence and a stampede would be hard to prevent.

"However, I got a brace of slate-blue puppies [illegible] trained them on the ranch not to chase, drive or interfere in any way with the home cattle, taking them out among cattle which were grazing and keeping them close to [illegible]. Every day they were taken out and given hard [illegible] the result being that when they were fifteen [illegible] they were as hard as tles and could clear a [illegible] with acrity.

[illegible] the dogs were given every chance at a go [illegible] and before they were a year old they had acquired an implacable hatred for coyotes or any sneaking, skulking 'varmint,' and they would lay in wait, near dusk of each day, near some butte, and when a coyote would make his appearance they would crouch closer for a few moments and suddenly spring, as from a catapult when they thought the time had come, and go for that coyote like greased lightning. The coyote would always realize that it was making the race of its life, and unless some friendly den or crevice offered it refuge the dogs would catch it and with a wrench on the neck would end its existence in short order.

"I took the dogs out to the round-up for the first time last Fall, and they were so 'decent' with the cattle that in a few days they merely gazed at the dogs in their curious way, and went on grazing or bellowing at being 'cut out' in their usual way. Toward evening some of the cowboys would take them quite a ways from the camp and lay in wait for coyotes, which were plentiful, and a dozen skins now serve as mats in front of beds on the ranch, as a result. The dogs are fighters and I don't know but what I may record, before another season passes, the falling of a bear before their prowess. They are great dogs and some of my neighbors are going to get some for the sport there is to be had as well as protection."

The following extract is from a letter from a ranchman in Wyoming:

"Out of the three puppies I had sent me early last year only one is left, and that one is a corker, for he will kill every coyote within a mile of the ranch if he only has a fair run. Of the two that were killed I must say they died with their boots on, or, as you folks in the East would say, died game. During a heavy snow of last Spring a hungry daredevil pack of coyotes gave chase to a cow and her calf, both weak from the scarcity of feed. I was out on the range in the foothills with my dogs, looking up the condition of stock generally, when I heard the snappy yelping of a lot of coyotes in a draw half a mile away. I took a Tam o' Shanter ride to the head of it and there saw the cow and her calf fighting for existence. The cow was hampered in her uneven fight by the calf crowding under her for protection, and it would have been but a short time before every coyote would have had a mouthful of her carcass.

"With a whoop and a ki-yi I sped toward them, the dogs wild for the fray and well in advance of me. It was the most exciting race I was ever in, and the scene presented when the dogs, coyotes, cow and calf and myself were well in the melee would have made a fortune for a Landseer. As the dogs approached some of the coyotes scattered, but the larger and fiercer ones had got a taste of blood and had their fighting temper on. As near as I could judge there was a score of them all told, and a half-dozen engaged the dogs in deadly combat. As I dashed into them I emptied my two Colt's revolvers and three of them 'bit the dust.' The dogs had killed two and the remainder 'lit out.' Result, the cow and calf saved, one dog killed, the other two badly bitten, but all right, and self and horse had a high old time. Along toward June the dogs had a tussle with a bear and one was laid out cold, so I have only one now."

We had the pleasure of a visit recently from Mr. W. M. Everts, of Topeka, Kan., who has tested Great Danes as wolf and coyote killers, and in conversation he related his experience, the substance of which was that Great Danes are the equal of any wolf-killing dogs. They should not exceed twenty-eight or thirty inches in height, not over one hundred and ten or one hundred and twenty pounds, and should be of racy build, made powerful by early training and plenty of exercise, which gives them perfect legs and bodies and strong enough to resist the attacks of any animal of equal size. Mr. Everts has three Great Danes by Prince Victor—imported Bauscham, named Queen, Bessie and Polly, the two latter weighing one hundred and ten pounds at thirteen months of age. Any one of these bitches, he informs us, will run a coyote from one to two miles, and when they overtake a coyote they jump on its shoulders, bearing it to the ground, and will kill it in a few moments. Some of the ranchmen in his vicinity are training Great Danes for this purpose, and he says it will be but a short time when every ranch will own its quota of Great Danes. Some breeders have crossed the greyhound with the Great Dane for extra speed, picking the best of the litters and breeding back to the Great Dane again; but he does not approve of this and claims that Great Danes of the size and weight referred to above will catch and catch and kill any coyote or wolf. Mr. Everts' Great Danes are all golden brindles, and in another year he expects to have some of the best coyote and wolf killers on the plains.

As before stated, this opens up a new field for Great Danes in America, and if the cowboys of the West once catch the fever, life will assume a new phase to them, and many will be the exciting chases and many will be the stories told and retold at the round-up camps, and the monotony of ranch life will be varied indeed.

UNITED STATES FIELD TRIAL CLUB'S AFFAIRS

HICKORY VALLEY, TENN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—As I know many of the members of the U. S. Club are not fully aware of all the steps that are taken against them, I will inform them briefly of the last moves. It will be remembered that the enthusiastics that formed the new club tried to give the impression at New Albany that they would take the U. S. Club's grounds and clash dates; in fact they intended to burst up the U. S. Club regardless of sportsmanship or anything else. This quite a [illegible]mber of members of the club could and [illegible] of, and but two or three have or [illegible]ve good members have joined; [illegible] will join later. Some of them have [illegible] Continental; and so have some [illegible] they join the Continental because [illegible] that want to encourage field [illegible] F. T. Club has many thorough gentlemen-sportsmen in it, and the club has my best wishes for its success, but I am sure there are many members, and among them their president, who do not know the movement of a few of their members. In fact many of them have told me and my friends that no one or two men could step in with a personal feeling to rule or ruin and clash dates with the United States or any other field trial club.

It will be remembered that the dates with the United States Club were selected and published in January, and the last change the club made was on March 4, before the Continental Club was formed. At that time (March 4) the board of governors of the United States Club (not one selfish individual) decided to hold trials in North Carolina, commencing November 28. This date was published in the AMERICAN FIELD that week; also it was furnished Mr. P. T. Madison by the secretary of the United States Club March 5, before any Continental Club was formed. On the day that the Continental Club was formed there was quite a crowd of sportsmen present, with quite a number of them that were in favor of the new club running trials in a sportsmanlike manner and not for the purpose of injuring the United States Club or any other club. But I was informed by Mr. J. L. Adams, who is a member of both clubs, as by others, that Mr. Madison at that meeting suggested a date in November that would conflict with the United States Club's date in Indiana, which he (Mr. Madison) had helped to make and of course was fully aware of; but this date was at once done away with by the true sportsmen of the new club. The new club, however, let in a rule to have all business transacted by its officers, which, I believe, are president, first, second and third vice-presidents and a secretary-treasurer (who is Mr. Madison). So the following letter will show that the same spirit is at work with someone:

COPY.

MR. W. B. STAFFORD, Secy. W. S. F. T. Club, Trenton, Tenn.

Dear Sir:—I am in receipt of a communication from Mr. Washington A. Coster, secretary of the Eastern F. T. Club, informing me that at the meeting of the Eastern F. T. Club they decided to allow the Continental F. T. Club the use of their grounds at Newton, N. C., on which to hold the trials of said Continental F. T. Club. I therefore inform you that this club will hold its quail trials on said grounds, beginning about November 25. I personally preferred Indiana, but I was afraid of a scarcity of birds, as I do not believe that enough birds survived the Winter to furnish a sufficient quantity for field trial purposes. Yours truly,

P. T. MADISON,
Secy.-Treas. Continental F. T. Club.

The copy reached me on April 5; not dated, but I know it was just written. Now the above letter must be official. It is dollars to doughnuts that the president, Dr. Rowe, and vice-president, Capt. Gay, and I hope Vice-Presidents Mr. George Gould and C. G. Stoddard, never instructed their secretary to conflict dates with the U. S. Club, and I will never believe they will approve of it until I see it over their own signatures. I also know many other members of the club are true sportsmen that will not approve of any wire working on conflicting dates.

The Continental Club has from August 15 to November 6, from about November 25 to about January 25, from February 10 to April 1; just look at the time they have in which to hold trials that will not conflict with any other club's.

Is it not a fact that from November 25 to January 20 are the very best two months in the Fall for holding trials on quail in North Carolina? Is it not a fact that from February 10 to April 1 is the very best time to hold Spring trials on quails? Every practical sportsman in American knows that. Then why is it that the Continental Club should come in with its first quail trials and take the very grounds that the U. S. Club expected to use, and conflict dates with the U. S. Club when the U. S. Club had claimed these dates and published them before any Continental Club was even formed? It is to be hoped that the many members are not responsible for move ments to kill the U. S. Club, which has many of the best and most practical sportsmen in America in it, with others joining every day. I feel confident that this is the work of three individuals who showed the spirit, big as a mountain, in the U. S. Club to rule or ruin it.

Now for the good of field trials there is plenty of time to prevent any conflict of dates, and I hope the members of the Continental Club will see this bad spirit to ruin the U. S. Club cropping out, and will come to the front and work harmoniously with the U. S. Club and all other clubs. They and all other clubs will prosper by it. I have letters from such sportsmen from the East as Mr. F. R. Hitchcock and Edward Dexter, saying the U. S. Club should come to North Carolina and they will do all in their power to make the club's trials a success.

The 28th day of November has been publicly announced (before the Continental Club was formed) for the U. S. Club to commence its trials at Newton, N.C., or near there, and the public can rest assured that Mr. Madison's letter will not bluff the U. S. Club out of commencing its trials on that date. The committee on grounds is now arranging for other grounds just as good as Newton and somewhere near Newton or at Lexington, N. C.

The governing committee of the U.S. Club is not trying to work against any club. It does and will manage its business on a fair and square, businesslike and sportsmanlike plan; with no one man to rule the club. If any such movement of any individual is discovered the public will see very quickly that the committee and governors will be put in to check all such movements, let the saddle fit whom it may.

The committee on judge will select the most competent and thorough gentleman-sportsman that can be had to judge the U. S. trials, and the public can rest assured that every dog entered will have a fair, square and thorough test, with time enough spent on each individual for no "plug" to "luck-in" and win in two short heats in a big stake. This thing of dogs in a large stake of many high-class dogs winning first money in two short heats is not a thorough test, although the right dog may be placed; but it is not satisfactory to the public, and when more time is spent on the best dogs better satisfaction will be had at field trials.

I hope the trial that Mr. Adams proposed to run last March can be arranged to follow the Southern trials next February at West Point, Miss. He can count me in for two or three starters in all such thorough tests when run on fair and square principles with competent, honest judges. Now is the time to arrange such an important trial; not wait until a few days before the time for running it.

"A WUNNERFUL DAWG"

WASHINGTON, D. C.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I presume it is necessary for all great journals to devote the major portion of their space to the discussion of solid, stern facts, even though somebody's corns are trod on, and I opine there are a number of sore corns this Spring in consequence of the steady downpour of severe criticism which has found utterance in print during the past Winter. I have tried to become interested in the "paper dog fights" that the owners of "celebrated" dogs have "regaled" us with during the long Winter evenings, but for some reason I have failed utterly in becoming en rapport with the mythical, as it has proven, challenges, field trial club matters, "kickers" at dog shows, etc., and it was so great a relief to me when I read in the Post how completely the wind was taken out of the sails of one dog owner's story by the intrusion of and uninvited story of another owner of a dog, that I send it to you for the edification of your readers:

A keen-eyed, grizzled-haired, parchment-skinned man went into Tappan's yesterday and ordered some cartridges loaded with forty-four grains of smokeless and one ounce of No. 10 shot.

"Yes, I'm going to try snipe to-morrow," he said to Arthur McCormick. "A few of 'em have been killed out on the Eastern Branch marshes, and mebbe I'll get one or two, but, gee! they ain't thick there now like they used to be. Was it a good place for 'em? Well, I should say so. One time twenty years ago there was the biggest flight of snipe ever seen in these parts. I went out early one mornin'—drove out in a spring waggin with my old dog Shot. Soon as I struck the marsh the snipe began to get up everywhere. I never shot so fast in all my life. Ortolan shootin' was nothin' to it. My barrels got so hot I had to keep runnin' 'em in the water to cool off. I had a hundred cartridges along and shot 'em all away in ten minutes. But that didn't stop me baggin' snipe. My old dog was the greatest setter ever known around here, and when he kept on standin' snipe an' seein' me standin' there doin' nothin' he knew somethin' was the matter, an' he just began helpin' me out. How? Why, as soon as he dropped to a snipe he just crawled up and grabbed it in his mouth and fetched her in. I was home by 1 o'clock and I had so many snipe in my waggin that I busted one of the springs."

"That was a wunnerfel dawg," said an old gentleman who had come in unnoticed and been an interrested listener. "I guess he was one o' them old-time chuckle headed setters what used to give we old fellers such spote w'en we was young. I had wunner 'em once. He wan't er purty dawg. He was bowleggeder'n wunner these bench leg beagles an' he was grate on rabbits. I know hit taint right 'n proper t' ellow er setter dawg ter run rabbits, but Prince never run 'em. Me an' my brother used to go and find er rabbit path an' make Prince straddle it. Then we'd go off behint 'im an' put some houn' dawgs an' fices inter the bushes an' briers an' start th' bunnies goin'. Of co'se they'd make er bee line fur they path, an konserkently ud go er cavorten' erlong right down throo Prince's legs befo' they knowed whur they was. Thet settled it. He'd jist grab 'em acrost th' back as they kited throo his fo' paws, an' give er crunch an' toss 'em over his shoulder, dead ez er herrin'. 'Twan't nuthin' fer Prince ter git us ennywhur from ten toe er dozin rabbits befo' breakfus'."

As the old man went out with ten cents' worth of fish hooks and two lead sinkers, for shad, saying, "They ain't enny use er shennaygin 'roun' 'em 'ith files er spoons, er enny o' them new fangled contraptions," the owner of the "chuckle headed setter" wondered how many shot he could put in his carcass at forty yards with a ten-gauge gun.

OLD PHIL.

QUARTERLY MEETING OF THE NATIONAL BEAGLE CLUB OF AMERICA

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—A quarterly meeting of the National Beagle Club of America was held in the rooms of the American Kennel Club, 55 Liberty Street, Friday, April 5. The meeting was called to order at 4:20 p. m., with President H. L. Kreuder in the chair. The members present were H. L. Schellhass, A. D. Lewis, J. W. Appleton, John Bateman and George Lalck. In the absence of Secretary Geo. W. Rogers, Mr. George Lalck acted as secretary pro tem.

President Kreuder stated that he with Mr. H. W. Lacy had laid the matter of the killing of Mr. John Bateman's dogs before the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Mr. Bateman then stated that the man who killed his dogs had been brought to trial, and on his recommendation for mercy the man was fined $10.

It was voted that the secretary be instructed to thank the society for the part it has taken in the matter.

It was also voted that members in arrears for dues be notified by the treasurer to settle their accounts at once.

Mr. Schellhass, as a committee, reported that new evidence had been received by the stud book committee against John Jarvis and that the same is now to be investigated.

Notice is hereby recorded that our delegate to the A. K. C., Mr. Schellhass, has been elected by the American Kennel Club to the stud book and field trial committees, and also to the committee on constitution and rules.

On motion it was voted that the list of official judges be brought before the annual meeting for revision.

The president appointed Mr. Clermont S. Wixom of Covert, N. Y., as one of the official judges of the club in place of Mr. Pottinger Dorsey, and the secretary was requested to notify the American Kennel Club.

The meeting adjourned at 5:35 p. m.

GEO. W. ROGERS, Secy.

IRISH SETTER CLUB MATTERS

At the annual meeting of the Irish Setter Club of America, held at Madison Square Garden, New York, on February 21, 1895, it was moved and seconded that a committee of two be appointed by the chair to revise the constitution and by-laws, the same to be submitted to the approval of a majority of the members of the club.

The committee has reported the following amendments, which will be voted on at the next meeting:

SECTION 3. * * * At all meetings of the club the members present and those represented by written proxies shall constitute a quorum. Ten days prior to the annual meeting of the club the secretary shall send to each member a list of the officers and members, with a request that he mark the names of those for whom he wishes to vote and sign and return the same addressed to the secretary at the place of annual meeting. In the case of a tie vote for any officer or member of the committee, or should any of those elected decline to serve, the tie shall be decided and the vacancy filled by a majority vote of those present.

In Section 4 the word "three" shall be substituted for the word "five," and "one" for the word "two," making three a quorum, one of which may be represented by a written proxy.

In Section 8 "ten" shall be substituted for the word "thirty" and "five" for the word "ten," making ten days' notice necessary for each general meeting and five days' notice to members of a committee for any committee meeting.

The Irish Setter Club of America intends holding field trials next Fall, and all members are urgently requested to voice their sentiments and forward their annual dues to the secretary, Geo. H. Thomson, West Park Station, Philadelphia.

NOTES

WHAT was attempted last year, but failed for lack of support and interest, is now an assured fact, namely, a well organized local kennel club which will hold exhibitions and dog shows such as are given in other large cities. The organization, of which the initial work was mentioned by the AMERICAN FIELD last week, was fully formed the evening of April 4 at Callahan's hall, and it will be known as the Milwaukee Kennel and Pet Stock Association. The club starts with thirty charter members, embracing most of the prominent fanciers of the city, and during the next sixty days charter members will be taken in upon payment of a fee of $2. The dues will be $3 a year. Although definite plans will not be made until the report of the committee on constitution and by-laws is adopted, which will probably be at the meeting on April 12, it is intended to have the first show in the latter part of October at some place not yet determined. At this exhibition there will be entered the cream of local dogs, poultry, pigeons and canaries. In the following Spring a regular dog show will be held under the auspices of the American Kennel Club. The members of the association desire all fanciers to become members, and applications should be addressed to the secretary and treasurer, F. S. Morrison, 807 Grand Avenue. The other officers of the club, elected at the above meeting, are: C. C. Hendee, president; L. A. Jansen, first vice-president; Arthur J. Luebke, second vice-president. There are a large number of dog and pet animal fanciers in Milwaukee, some of the most valuable canine stock in the United States being bred here, many of the Milwaukee animals having won prizes all over the country at dog shows. I think the prospects are better than ever for Milwaukee having a first-class dog show in 1896. We have some of the old "warhorses," like Mr. John D. Olcott, as well as lots of young blood, interested, and success seems assured.

Milwaukee, Wis. C. CASS HENDEE.

IT will be remembered that during the Winter we reprinted from the English Stock-Keeper some remarks reflecting on the genealogy of the Boston terrier, and that Mr. Chas. F. Leland replied to same through our columns. Now cometh the Stock-Keeper, saying: "Mr. Charles F. Leland joins issue with Mr. G. R. Krehl regarding the latter's affirmation that the Boston terrier is only a bad French bulldog. He denies, in the AMERICAN FIELD, that Boston terriers run about the streets of Paris, that the toy bull has had any share in the procreation of the Boston dog, he falls foul of Mr. James Mortimer for sharing Mr. Krehl's opinion, and he charges the latter with 'displaying amazing ignorance.' Mr. K— replies that he knows his Paris well, that he annually pays his respects in person to the gentry who breed toy bulls, that the good specimens are little bulldogs, and the misfits Boston terriers. Happy variety that can supply two markets! He avers that he has seen photographs of the best Boston terriers in 'Kennel Secrets' and the American press, and on such grounds ventured to tell the unpalatable truth. Presuming upon the 'amazing ignorance' ascribed to him, Mr. Krehl claims to be a plain-seeing clod, but he has sufficient intelligence to appreciate the inspired pen that can transform bulldogs into terriers, and blend Paris into Boston:

> '. . . as imagination bodies forth
> The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
> Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing
> A local habitation and a name.'"

And further, it is darkly hinted down Boston way that a mysterious French bulldog is concealed somewhere in those parts undergoing a special preparation for the Boston show, where it will attempt to bear away some of the honors, or at least obtain recognition, in the Boston terrier classes. The horrid thing!

VOLUME XI of the American Kennel Club's Stud Book has found its way to our desk this year much later than usual. It is not so bulky as Volume X, which was not so large as Volume IX; the reason for this is of course that fewer dogs have been registered. The registrations for 1892 ran up to 4,464, the highest number for any one year; for 1893 they numbered 4,030; and last year they dropped to 3,668, the numbers in Volume XI running from 31,938 to 35 604, both inclusive. We find the following registrations have been canceled by order of the stud book committee, for reasons given: Romp (33557), bloodhound; false pedigree given. Frula (33556), bloodhound; false pedigree given. Tom (34025) Boston terrier; impure breeding. Wandering Sammy (34473), Boston terrier; impure breeding. Flo T (31267), collie; wrong pedigree given; re-registered. Columbian Hector (21851), St. Bernard; should be Columbian Hortense; re-registered. The usual valuable list of winnings at dog shows held under A. K. C. rules is furnished; also a list of the officers and committees of the American Kennel Club. But the list of field trial winnings of 1894 is perfectly ridiculous; it consists of the winners at the trials of the National Beagle Club, the Brunswick Fur Club, and the Northwestern Beagle Club. If the American Kennel Club pretends not to "recognize" wins at field trials throughout the length and breadth of the land it only impairs the value of its stud book. The wins count just the same, and that is all owners, breeders, buyers, and sellers care about.

FROM the class list of the Toronto Kennel club's approaching show it will be seen that entries close on Saturday of this week, and must be in the hands of the Secretary on that date. Toy breeds, poodles, Skyes, Dandie Dinmonts, dachshunde, bulldogs, clumber spaniels, Dalmatians, harriers, Chesapeakes, bloodhounds, Newfoundlands and deerhounds are provided with two open classes; other breeds get two open and two puppy classes; and greyhounds, cocker spaniels, bull terriers and fox terriers have challenge classes as well, smooth fox terriers also boasting two novice classes. A miscellaneous and two selling classes are also provided. There are no cash prizes in the classes, but a host of specials have been donated in cash and merchandise, and no doubt more will be received before the show opens. An entry fee of fifty cents is charged. Among the patrons of the show are the Hon. G. A. Kirkpatrick, lieut.-governor of Ontario, Colonel Sir Casimir S. Gzowski, K. C. M. G., one of the donors of the silver challenge cup to the International Field Trial Club, and Mr. George Beardmore, master of the Toronto Hunt Club. Mr. W. P. Fraser is secretary and treasurer. The judges have already been announced in these columns. There is nothing in the class list to indicate that this will be a Canadian Kennel Club show.

JUST as we go to press we have received a list of entries for the Boston show, and a very fair entry it is. Foxhounds muster strongly, and so of course do Boston terriers. Scottish terriers also are well represented. Great Danes are poor, with only nine entries; and pugs have dropped down to a mere quartet.

THE Montreal Kennel Club had a most interesting and well-attended meeting the evening of April 1, Dr. Wesley D. Mills presiding. The executive committee asked the permission of the meeting that the club be incorporated, which was unanimously granted. Mr. J. G. Kennedy Jr. read a particularly good paper on "Setters," after which Dr. Mills criticized the different specimens of the breed that were on view. Among these were three Gordon setters, two Irish setters and three English setters, all excellent specimens and coming from some of the very best kennels in the city. There was also an interesting exhibit of puppies of many different breeds. A letter was read from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, expressing its satisfaction in the club's attitude toward the clipping of dogs' ears and tails, and promising them assistance in their work. Chief of Police Hughes also wrote, stating that he would help in his power with regard to the [illegible] the dog stealing question. The growling being taken in the club was indorsed [illegible] sixteen new members.

Montreal.

THE St. Bernard fanciers of the Coast are very enthusiastic and have lately formed a new club, called "St. Bernard Club of California," with the following officers: President, I. G. Barker; first vice-president, Dr. A. T. Regensberger; second vice-president, W. H. Collins; secretary, A. R. Crowell; treasurer, O. H Williams. About forty members have signed the roll, and are holding weekly meetings to encourage the exhibition of as large a number of the breed as possible at the coming show of the Pacific Kennel Club, which opens here on May 8. The club has decided to offer fifteen medals, gold and silver, to be competed for by members of the club, and from present indications the quantity and quality of the "noblest of all dogs" that will appear before "Honest John" will surpass any exhibition ever held on this side of the Rockies. Among the many fine dogs that will compete will be some smooth and rough coated dogs that were exhibited at the World's Fair.

San Francisco. DONARD.

IT affords me much pleasure to be able to report the recent purchase of Count Featherstone, by Count Noble—Florence Gladstone, she by Gladstone—Flounce, by Druid—Ruby. Count was whelped March 3, 1890, and consequently he is one of the youngest living sons of possibly the most celebrated sire of our land. He was bred by Mr. Whyte Bedford, Blythe, Miss., was sold by him to Mr. E. O. Damon, of Northampton, Mass., by him to Mr. D. H. Warner, Bridgeport, Conn., by him to Charles Mara of the same place, and from him Count passed into my possession. He has been kept exclusively as a shooting dog; is slightly above medium height, is robust, lusty, full of go and vim, and in fact, in most excellent condition. Count has been carefully kept and as far as known has served but one bitch, viz , La Tosca (Chance—Diamond).

New York. CHAS. F. TRETBAR.

THE courage and intelligence of a collie were tested recently at Muncie, Ind. A couple of prisoners escaped from the sheriff while being taken from the jail to the workhouse. The sheriff, whose name was Sherry, was accompanied by the prison dog, a collie named Bill. Sherry used his revolver on one in trying to bring him to a halt, but without effect, and he escaped. Bill had pursued the other prisoner and caught him in the courthouse yard. The dog made several leaps at the man's throat, finally fastening his teeth in the convict's coat collar and refusing to be shaken off. An excited crowd gathered around, thinking the dog was mad, of course, and were trying to kill the canine when a policeman came along and recognized the dog as "Bill," from the jail, called him off and took the man to jail. The dog was satisfied when he saw the brass buttons and he barked and ran about in a manner that spoke the joy he entertained at his success.

NOTICING Mr. Madison's request in the AMERICAN FIELD of March 30, I would suggest that Warren, Stephen, Hallock or St. Vincent, Minn., would all be good points for the Continental Field Trial Club's trials. They are situated north of Crookston, Minn., on the line of the Great Northern Railway. Red Lake Falls, Minn., on the line of the Northern Pacific R. R., is also a good point. Any information wanted as to hotel and livery accommodations will be cheerfully furnished by the agents of the Great Northern or Northern Pacific, at either of the above named towns.

St. Paul, Minn. J. A. HELFENSTEIN.

I am glad to see that the new Continental Field Trial Club is to hold field trials in the Northwest September 2. I wonder that trials have not been held here more frequently. Mr. P. T. Madison requests sportsmen to suggest places that will be desirable for such trials. I don't believe there is a better state anywhere than Minnesota for small game and no better section anywhere than in the northwest portion of this state for testing the quality of a good hunting dog, and would suggest Argyle, on the Great Northern Railway as one of the most desirable places for such trials.

Royalton, Minn. WM. DRAGOR.

MR. ERNEST G. THOMAS of Denver Colo., has lost by death his black, white and tan dog King Leo, a great loss to him and his family, not only as a valuable dog, but one to which every one of the family was deeply attached. Field trial men will remember Leo as running in the Eastern trials at High Point, N. C , in 1888, and dividing fourth with Mr. L. Gardner's Roger. Leo was handled by Joe Lewis. Leo was finely bred, being by Count Noble out of Hamilton's Ruby, and was about nine and one-half years old at the time of his death. Mr. Thomas thinks it not unlikely that he was poisoned.

MR. EDGAR HUIDEKOPER, of Meadville, Pa., makes the following suggestion in regard to the lawsuit over Beaufort Prince: "If Dr. Lougest will take the dog and a bitch in season before Judge Blodgett he can very easily establish whether it is the ridgling Beaufort Prince or a castrated dog as is claimed by Mr. Fallon." We believe the dog is still in Mr. Fallon's possession, but suppose it would be possible for Dr. Lougest's counsel to obtain an order from the judge for the dog to be produced in court and given the opportunity suggested by Mr. Huidekoper.

INFORMATION reaches us that Mr. Howard Vernon's challenge to setter owners on the Pacific Coast which we made mention of two weeks ago, has been accepted by Mr. George Crocker, who is said to have put up a forfeit of $100 to run his English setter Rod's Chaff against Mr. Vernon's celebrated pointer Glenbeigh for [illegible] The match is set to take place next Autumn, [illegible] after the quail season opens, each owner to select a [illegible] who are to choose a third judge.

FACEY ROMFORD, the bulldog celebrity, made his adieux to the Stock-Keeper before leaving his native shore for the country, and our English cotemporary remarks: "He is another bulldog off to America, and the English fancy is poorer for his departure. We never saw [illegible] looking better; for body, chest and forequarters he has never been seen. The price, we hear, was £100. Mr. Hilton's purchase is now close on four years old, and is by King Orry—Maud Monarch. The proprietor of the Woodlawn Park Kennels has also bought Mr. Sam Woodiwiss' bull bitch Bubbles.

I BEG to advise you that, by order of the President, a meeting of the executive committee of the Canadian Kennel Club will be held at the Queen's Hotel, Toronto, on Friday, April 19, at 3 p. m., when the following business will come up: (1) Field trial rules. (2) Industrial Exhibition Association vs. Fred Kirby. (3) To consider the cropping system, etc. (4) To consider show dates. (5) To receive new members. (6) Other business.

H. B. DONOVAN,
Toronto, Can. Secretary-Treasurer.

A MEETING of the National Greyhound Club will be held on Friday evening, April 26, at eight o'clock, at the Grand Union Hotel, Park Avenue and Forty-second Street, New York. At this meeting measures will be taken to entirely reorganize the club, and the invitation to be present is not only extended to its members, but also to all who are interested in the greyhound, deerhound and borzoi. By order of the president.

New York. C. F. LEWIS, Secy.

I REGRET to write you that my well-known bloodhound dog Belhus (13868) is dead. He was out hunting in the woods the other day, along with my other hounds, and somehow or other he must have injured himself internally. He never got over it. I am, however, expecting a couple of hounds from England. They left Liverpool on the Bovic on March 29, and I hope they will reach here all right in time for the Boston show.

Boston. C. A. LOUGEST.

MR. J. B. THAYER, of Boston, will not judge at Toronto two weeks hence, though last month it was stated he would share the duties with Messrs. Montague Smith and J. F. Kirk. Mr. Richard Gibson, of Delaware, Ont., will act in conjunction with the two last named, taking the collie and fox terrier classes; pointers and setters are allotted to Mr. Smith, and Mr. Kirk will adjudicate on all other breeds.

PLEASE to erase the words "Newton, N. C.," from the announcement in your Kennel Fixtures of the United States Field Trial Club's meeting of November 28. There appears to have been some misunderstanding in regard to the club's having the grounds. We shall run at Lexington or Salisbury, on the date claimed.

Trenton, Tenn. W. B. STAFFORD, Secy.-Treas.

WE hear of a new spaniel fancier in the West. Mr. F. E. Gitchell, of Center Point, Iowa, has secured from the Reham Kennels a pair of well-bred dogs in Reham Topsy, winner at the Hamilton local shows in 1891, 1892, and 1893, and Raven Boy, winner in the puppy class in 1894. This gives Mr. Gitchell a nice foundation to build upon.

IN the AMERICAN FIELD of February 23 we had something to say, and said it emphatically, concerning a bill introduced into the Wisconsin legislature by a Mr. Lamberson, legalizing the killing of dogs found off their owners' premises and not wearing a collar on which was engraved the name of owner or keeper. The bill itself has been killed.

THE proposition made by the recently formed St. Bernard Club of California to the Pacific Kennel Club, that Miss Whitney be engaged to judge the "saintly breed" at the San Francisco show, was not favorably received. The club offered to pay half of the expense, and had the necessary amount already raised.

Two prominent fanciers asserted at the recent meeting of the English Kennel Club that the tails of schipperke puppies are "dug" out and "positively carved out," and now they are having a bad time with owners and breeders writing to the Stock-Keeper to deny that any such hideous operations are practiced.

THOSE going to the Boston show will find the Stonington Line an exceedingly pleasant one as it takes what is known as the inside route. The accommodation for dogs is good, without the cramped conditions of the railroad lines of travel. The service of the boats is in every way first-class.

THE White English Terrier Club across the high seas has promptly adjusted its standard to the wave of reform against cropping and has decided upon the fox terrier carriage—"small and V shaped, hanging close to the head toward the eyes"—for the natural ear of the breed it fosters.

I HAVE notified the secretary of the Duquesne Kennel Club that owing to a misunderstanding I have withdrawn all specials offered by me at their coming dog show.

Pittsburg, Pa. W. D. BRERETON.

REFERENCE to the Chestnut Hill Kennel's new advertisement of dogs at stud shows that Christopher's stud fee has been reduced to $25, and Wellesbourne Charlie's [illegible] should be appreciated.

[illegible] Fox Terrier Club, which held its show [illegible] are notified, hold the show this [illegible] Mr. George Raper, who judged [illegible] the awards.

THE Scottish Fancier just to hand contains an interesting supplement entitled "Office-Bearers of the Scottish Collie Club;" portraits of the seventeen gentlemen are neatly arranged.

A DOG SHOW is announced in connection with the Orange County Fair at Newburg, N. Y. September 17, 18, 19 and 20 are the dates selected, and Mr. Robert Johnson is secretary.

ST. LOUIS COURSING CLUB

(Special Report.)

Brentwood Park was the center of attraction around St. Louis last Saturday, when a ten-dog stake was run. There were some visitors from other states, and a number of ladies and gentlemen from St. Louis, who made their first appearance at a coursing meeting. Mr. F. L. Guthrie, from Osawatomie, Kan., who has become a member of the St. Louis Coursing Club, was present and had an entry in the stake. The St. Louis Kennel Club was well represented, Mr. Bryson, who has taken a very active part in organizing the club, evincing a deep interest in the coursing and expressing himself as highly pleased with the manner in which matters were conducted. There seem to be sanguine expectations entertained by many of those who have been frequent visitors to the park of the club's success if it only continues on the line which it has started.

One incident occurred which caused the management of the park considerable worriment for the time being, out of consideration for the spectators; it was the delay in furnishing hares to the slipper. The explanation for the delay is as follows: A year ago, when the management was stocking the park, a Belgian hare got in, and not being a swift runner was never slipped at; however, it was allowed to remain on the grounds. Notwithstanding the fact that a plentiful supply of hares was put in the park on Tuesday of last week, when it came to driving them to the corral only a few could be resurrected. There were all kinds of conjectures formed, and the secret was discovered only when a young lad perched on an adjoining tree informed the gamekeeper that all the hares were running to earth in the escape. Such was discovered to be the fact, but not till the spectators had grown tired of waiting and many had left the ground, probably in disgust. The fact is that this Belgian hare went to burrow in the escape and actually honeycombed the inclosure, and as all persons are prohibited from entering the escape, so as not to disturb the hares, except when the drive occurs, the cause of the trouble was not discovered till yesterday, when an investigation was made with the above result. However, the hares were dug out and driven into the corral, and after the first round everything ran smoothly.

Mr. D. J. O'Callaghan acted as judge and Mr. John Egan as slipper, Mr. John Bambrick as field steward and Mr. C. A. Robinson as slip steward, and the general overseeing was well taken care of by Mr. A. McElrath. Mr. John Egan accepted the position of slipper only after considerable persuasion on the part of the owners and committee, as he had an entry. The decisions of the judge seemed to be well received in all cases except in the undecided in the first round between Belle and Chartist. The dogs got mixed up in the slips and both got away unsighted. Belle was the first to "catch on," and when Chartist got sighted, after running around the judge's horse, he was fully forty lengths behind Belle, and before he had a chance to serve the bitch had made several points. When Chartist joined in there were some beautiful exchanges, with a preponderance in favor of Chartist; however, the judge gave it an undecided, and, when explaining his decision afterward, said, while he admitted that Chartist had slightly the best of the course after he joined in, as the owner of Belle (Mr. Guthrie) had come such a long distance to the meeting, coupled with an unsatisfactory slip, he rendered his decision as above stated, and was ready to admit that courtesy to a visitor might have slightly influenced him. The disappointment of Chartist's backers at the decision was appeased only after the undecided was run off and decided in his favor.

It cost the club three hares to have the first course on the program decided, as the first two were such very short runs and a pick-up. The third and decisive one was a splendid course, Aileen showing wonderful speed, while Daisy held her own in the exchanges for a time, and had she stood up to her work might have made it hot for the brindled bitch, but she played a waiting game, which destroyed all chances of her victory.

Eleanor completely shut out Kentucky Jim, never allowing him in her company; she made first turn fifteen lengths in front of him.

Lady Aiko was absent and Pearl ran a bye with Mr. Egan's Loughrea Lad. It resulted in a long spin to the hare, Lad showing the speed with first turn to Pearl's kill.

The course between Bide-a-Wee and Lady Maud was well contested for the first half, but Maud was only half trained and was well beaten eventually.

After the undecided, Chartist led Belle about three lengths for first turn, and wrenched. Belle served twice and Chartist turned and killed.

FIRST TIES

Eleanor led two lengths for the turn, and served again, Aileen making the next. After a series of exchanges the fawn bitch showed her staying qualities; and in a very trying course got the flag. Pearl and Bide-a-Wee got onto a game hare and gave some of the nicest exhibitions of exchanges of the day. Bide-a-Wee made first turn a bare length in front of Pearl, and though there was ample opportunity given the latter she was unable to hold out to the end of the course. Pearl has been the property of Mr. Robinson only a few days, and John Cochran, from whom he bought her, advised him not to run her on Saturday, as she was not in condition. But Mr. Robinson was too anxious to know what she could do.

Chartist ran a bye with his "stable companion" Beat All and got "Beat."

SECOND TIES

Eleanor and Chartist went to slips next, and a grueling course it was, the bitch making several drives to kill in the early part of the course and eventually pulled out a winner, the hare escaping.

Bide-a-Wee ran her bye with Aileen.

FINAL COURSE

A good slip to a game hare brought out the speed of the dogs to the fullest extent, Eleanor leading by two lengths for the turn and placing Bide-a-Wee for three. A fine working course followed, in which Eleanor scored oftener than her opponent, and when at last the hare escaped she had won a well-merited decision from the game bitch Bide-a-Wee, and won the stakes.

NOTES

ONE cannot say that a man's handwriting is a welcome sight when his letters are always typewritten, but Mr. George Macdougall's communications are not less pleasing to the eye on that account. The only fault we have to find with them is that they are too few and far between. On the present occasion he writes: "I was very glad to see the announcement that Mr. Hayman is to judge at the Altcar meeting next Fall. As I hope to be represented I was a little anxious as to who would officiate. Wasted Time has presented me with a nice litter by Twister, which I think will be about right for 1896. They are somewhat peculiar in color, at least two of them. Wasted Time is blue with a fawn patch on her breast and a shade of fawn all over. Her last puppies, by Royal Crest, are all rusty black, while by Twister there are three nearly all black, and two of a light silver gray. I will keep one of these for myself, and have already chosen a name for him, 'Free Silver,' which I think appropriate for a Montana dog. Twister is lusty as a government mule. He dislocated his toe about Christmas time, and has not had a gallop since until a couple of weeks ago. He goes sound, but I am afraid that the toe will go back on him at the critical moment. He is a great favorite here, and his closer friends are in the depths of disgust that Wasted Time was so unladylike as to fail to present him with an heir of his own handsome color. Quite an important match will be run here on Sunday, between a local dog of California stock called Snowball, owned by Ben Corin, and a brother to Twister, owned by Fred Nicholls, called Royal, I believe. There has been lots of mystery about the latter, who was brought here last Fall (to beat me, I guess), but his owner finally confessed that he was a Neversettle—Whitelips. He is a handsome fellow. The match is for $100 a side, half on the first turn and half on the result, one course. I was caught in a furious storm this afternoon, and it snowed for an hour after I got home, and there is no certainty that it will not be close to zero on Sunday, or that there won't be a foot of snow. As far as the dogs and men are concerned, it is perfect coursing weather here till about the last week in June, though the hares are breeding after the latter part of April. Hares are very scarce, though. The Cornish miners hunt and shoot them all the year round, and a fellow has to drive the tail off a good horse to reach country where he can find two or three in a day. I was down the valley last Sunday to try some Twister saplings, and I hunted about four hours, got caught in a hailstorm, only found one, and did not get a run at him; a horseman put him up about three hundred yards away. We are trying very hard to get a coursing park, and have some hopes of succeeding. We can get good jack-rabbits from Idaho—blacktails—and can catch whitetails about thirty miles from Butte, in a prickly pear country where coursing is out of the question. I have the thing all organized, ready for a capitalistic friend, when he makes up his mind to do the needful. He is enjoying the elegant vices of 'Paree' at present, though, so I don't suppose we will be able to do anything before Fall. This is the greatest place for greyhounds you ever saw. About thirty-five thousand people, and I will venture to say I can collect a hundred really fair hounds, to say nothing of 'has-beens' and 'about-to-be's.' About every third 'Cousin Jack' has from one to five, bred from stock imported by them, and some of them really very good. I have fifteen myself, counting the little ones."

MR. CHAS. A. ROBINSON of St. Louis must accept our thanks for a photograph of his brindled dog Comet, by Imp. Lord Neversettle—Imp. Partera; Comet is in charge of a little girl, and looks very contented. He has been a very disappointing dog, for his career in St. Louis has been a series of mishaps; but we will let Mr. Robinson tell the story himself: "Last year, when you were here, I bought Comet from Mr. Lowe. I kept him all Summer and gave him the best of care. Just when coursing commenced he was taken sick with inflammation of the stomach, from which he had just recovered when Border Ruffian beat him out. In his next run he was 'judged out' after running two courses; and in the next event he broke a nail, and I drew him after one round. He was in prime condition two weeks ago, and won from St. Louis Girl in one of the best courses ever run at Brentwood. In the second round he ran an undecided and broke two nails, and was beaten the next round, though he made the run-up three lengths. To crown it all he ran across the railroad last week, was struck by a train, and got away with a broken leg. He is a magnificent greyhound with all the desirable qualities. Game as could be and very affectionate and true, and he is a great favorite with us all. I shall keep him for breeding purposes. His leg is in a plaster cast and is doing well. This shuts me out of the Dakota meetings, as Diana is in Denver, to be bred to Border Ruffian, and Pearl has just come out of a heat and is in no shape to run. I bought her from Cochran and will run her next Fall and then breed her to Comet or Jim o' the Hill. Lady Maud has been bred to Monk Bishop. We will have lots of good ones here in a couple of years. Maid Marian has nine puppies by Loughrea Lad."

BEING in Aberdeen recently to make some inquiries in regard to the coming coursing meeting, I met a number of the club members, including the secretary, Mr. J. H. Davis, and President Harrigan, and they are all alive and working hard to get ready. They showed me a number of their entries, and while as yet too fat for a long and hard course they will do their best to have them ready to meet all comers. This is the club's first meeting and, of course, it will labor under some disadvantage, but that they will make it a success I have no doubt. I was the guest of Dr. S. J. Coyne, one of Chicago's old sportsmen and M. D.'s away back in the sixties. He has a fine kennel of youngsters bred in the purple that will be ready next season to show themselves. Aberdeen is full of sportsmen and gentlemen going there from abroad will find they can feel at home among them. That we should be right glad to have your worthy self with words of comfort and advice at this meeting goes without saying, and this part of South Dakota, one and all, would be glad to see you.

Rose, S. D. H. J. EDWARDS.

THOSE who have received notices that a payment of $3 to the Altcar Produce Stakes will fall due on May 15 must not think the secretary is dunning them; he says the notices were sent out simply to remind owners of the date of payment. In connection with this important stake for young greyhounds we might urge upon owners the advisability of registering without much delay the saplings they have entered; those that run will have to be registered beforehand, and if they are registered before the first volume of the stud book is published it will not only be of considerable benefit to that volume but also it will be the means of saving a great deal of time and bother on the night of the draw.
